Mr. MAVERICK. I think the information issued by the Works Progress Administration would be much more up to date than Dr. Eliot's 5-foot shelf, and probably more in accordance with present needs.

The Republicans complain that the W. P. A. does not tell them anything. Well, the reports do tell something. For instance, there has been published the Landlord and Tenant on the Cotton Plantation, probably the most valuable book so far presented on that problem. Your "5-foot shelf" gives some swell poetry and Adam Smith's The Wealth of Nations. But some of the W. P. A. books or reports give us able, up-to-date, valuable information. (See below, IV, Research Publications of the W. P. A.)

But that is not the point, anyhow. We should establish a permanent—or, to use a better word, an intelligent—policy on unemployment and social welfare.

I

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND WELFARE (H. RES. 225)

Standing committee will establish policy on unemployment

This resolution is in the usual form. It provides that the committee shall be known as the Committee on Public Works and Welfare, and shall consist of 25 Members of the House.

The scope of the committee is described by one paragraph, which is as follows:

All proposed legislation concerning public works, public health, social security, the relief of unemployment, and the relief of destitution caused by floods, droughts, and other emergencies—to the Committee on Public Works and Welfare.

It has been referred to the House Rules Committee and is before them for consideration. There are now some 44 committees in the House, and if a thorough study should be made of them, it would be seen that because the committees were established a long time ago, many new subjects go to committees which really have no jurisdiction. For instance, the cancer bill, which I introduced, went to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. There are many other examples like this.

However, I should like to call to your attention that there certainly should be a regular committee for matters which have been quoted above.

II

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF (H. RES. 224)

To determine situation employables, unemployables, and W. P. A.

In establishing a permanent policy of relief, it would probably be better to begin by establishing a select committee. This group could make an investigation of all the different features of the W. P. A. and the situation of unemployment in the country.

Portions of the resolution are as follows:

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation of unemployment within the United States with a view to determining—

(1) The number of employables who are unemployed;

(2) The number of unemployables who are in need of relief;

(3) The distribution of each of the foregoing among the several States; and

(4) Generally the manner in which the relief of unemployment shall be handled by the Government of the United States.

The committee shall also investigate from time to time the extent of any destitution caused by floods, drought, and other emergencies with a view to determining the manner in which the relief of such destitution shall be handled by the Government of the United States.

The committee shall also conduct a thorough investigation of the Works Progress Administration with a view to determining—

(1) The extent, if any, to which relief is granted or denied because of political affiliations;

(2) The extent to which appointments to positions in the Works Progress Administration are governed by political affiliations;

(3) The administrative costs of furnishing relief and work relief through such offices of the Works Progress Administration throughout the United States as in the opinion of the committee are representative; and

(4) Such other matters connected with the administration of relief and work relief as in the opinion of the committee will furnish Congress with useful information in the formulation of a relief policy by the United States.

The matters contained herein are self-explanatory. We have had select committees to hunt Communists and Fascists, to ask Dr. Townsend questions, and for every other matter. In presenting this I do so hoping that it will have serious consideration as the most important single matter facing this Nation.

III

FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF COMMISSION (H. J. RES. 395)

Citizens appointed by the President to determine national problem

I am introducing this resolution because it has been introduced in the Senate. The view taken by those favoring this particular legislation is that there should be a national commission composed of citizens, and that it should be nonpartisan in every way. This commission would not have any Members of Congress as members and is a different approach from my idea of a House standing committee or select committee; on the other hand, this bill might be amended in order that it be composed of a certain number of citizens, Senators, and Representatives.

Again, I will not quote the whole bill, but will refer only to the following excerpts, which are the preambles to the bill, and which pretty well explain it:

Whereas it is evident that the problems of unemployment and relief have passed the emergency phase and these burdens now appear to be long-term charges against the National Government; and

Whereas there is need of a thoroughgoing study of all their phases, including (1) the extent and nature of unemployment and relief needs; (2) the problem of work as against direct relief; (3) the question of assessing the financial burden and administrative responsibilities as between private charitable organizations and local, State, and Federal Governments; (4) some plan for coordinating the long-term relief program with existing governmental agencies, such as the United States Employment Service, the Social Security Board, the Public Works Administration, and other Federal agencies; and (5) the probable avenues of greater private reemployment and a general program looking to the liquidation of the entire relief program.

RESEARCH PUBLICATIONS OF THE W. P. A.

Information given is valuable and essential

Some people have told me that there are "too many statistics" in the W. P. A. publications. This may be true, but the same can be said of the Agricultural yearbook for the past 50 years, but which got out its best publication last year under Secretary Henry Wallace.

As a matter of fact, the W. P. A. has published many studies furnishing the most valuable and essential information to the Congress and to the country. These concern directly the problems of relief, unemployment, and destitution. Among these, I think the following are especially important: Landlord and Tenant on the Cotton Plantation, Six Rural Problem Areas, Urban Workers on Relief, Migratory-Casual Worker, People of the Drought States, Unemployment and Increasing Productivity.

The most interesting to me is the Landlord and Tenant Report, done under the supervision of T. J. Woofter, formerly of the University of North Carolina, and now doing special work for the W. P. A. It is admitted everywhere that this study provides the most authoritative and up-to-date information obtainable in America on the tenancy problem. What is wrong with it? The United States Government, through the Relief Administration, the rehabilitation program, and the A. A. A., had grave problems growing out of tenancy. This report was an answer to this, and it was set up to throw light on questions such as tenancy and relief, tenancy and farm credit, tenancy and crop control, and tenancy and rehabilitation.

The fact that this is an important matter is shown in the announcement by both candidates for the presidency of a program to eliminate tenancy. More, the President's committee on farm tenancy found the landlord-tenant report of exceptional value and it has been useful to the House Committee on Agriculture in framing a bill which they have reported favorably. Personally, I have found it contains much valuable information, which has been beneficial to me in forming opinions concerning the tenancy problem.

There has been a great public demand for the study of this problem. There are more tenants in the southern region than in any other portion of the United States; but tenancy has grown to great proportions in other sections of the country and these States have shown great interest in the report also. Throughout the South and the Nation organizations of farm tenants are becoming increasingly active. There are magazines and propaganda groups showing a great deal of interest in the subject—and most of their efforts have been without much knowledge. This report gives the essential information.

I have made it a point to investigate this publication and find that over 4,000 persons have voluntarily written in for it. Since being written, it is on the required reading list of many universities and is being used throughout the United States as a basis of discussion in colleges and elsewhere. In other words, out of an excess desire to criticize the Roosevelt administration and the W. P. A., we might criticize this report, but as a matter of fact, it is a genuine and important contribution to the science of government.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain explanatory excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks of my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF] in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio speech made by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact I have placed upon the Speaker's desk a petition to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 300, to prohibit the sale and shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war in time of peace as well as war.

We are now confronted not only with rumors of war but with the possibility of another world war within a short time. If this resolution is adopted, it will mean we cannot ship ammunition and implements of war to Germany, Italy, or to any other nation that might invade Spain. As it is, we prohibit the shipment of arms and ammunition to Spain, but not to those nations that may make war upon Spain without a formal declaration of war.

It seems to me that the American people are in favor of a policy of strict neutrality and one that will take the profit out of war and to cease being the potential slaughterhouse of the world and the symbol of the dollar sign for war profit and blood money. If this legislation is reported out and passed, it will mean we will not ship arms, ammunition, and implements of war for sake of profit and blood money to kill people with whom we have no quarrel. The peace-loving people of America are almost unanimous for such a policy. It is squarely up to the Members of Congress, and if they want to get action they must sign this petition in order to have this resolution brought upon the floor of the House for consideration. It is absolutely nonpartisan. It is a peace measure that takes the profit out of war; aims to keep the United States out of war and to promote peace and good will in the world. If we are to have a war in the future, it must be in defense of the United States and not in defense of the war profiteers, munition makers, or of any foreign country.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 213—ACCOMMODATION OF NAVAL AIR FORCES ON THE ATLANTIC COAST

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 213

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives at the earliest possible moment the following information:

1. What facilities exist for the accommodation of the naval air forces on the Atlantic coast?

2. What plans, if any, exist or have been formulated for the establishment of naval air bases on the Atlantic coast, and what recommendations, if any, for such facilities have been made to Congress or to any of its committees?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the author of this resolution is satisfied with the information contained in the letter attached to the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask unanimous consent that the report and letter be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The report and letter referred to are as follows:

Mr. VINSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following adverse report (to accompany H. Res. 213):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 213) directing the Secretary of the Navy to transmit certain information to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable moment, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The action of the committee is based upon the following letter to the chairman of the committee from the Secretary of the Navy:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 28, 1937.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: H. Res. 213, directing the Secretary of the Navy to transmit certain information to the House of Representatives, was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with a request for views and recommendation.

The Secretary of the Navy is very glad to give the information requested in the resolution.

The first question propounded in House Resolution 213 is as follows:

What facilities exist for the accommodation of the naval air forces on the Atlantic coast?

The only existing facilities on the Atlantic coast for the accommodation of any large number of naval aircraft is the Naval Air Station, Norfolk. This station furnishes operation, maintenance, and overhaul facilities for a large number of fleet aircraft and is planned for the normal operation of at least 12 carrier squadrons and 2 patrol plane squadrons, but due to the lack of funds to complete the development of this station it is taxed to handle properly even half of this complement at the present time.

Other existing facilities for the accommodation of the naval air forces on the Atlantic coast are:

(a) Marine flying field, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va.: Operating, maintenance, and overhaul facilities for Marine Corps aircraft on the Atlantic coast. At the present time it is capable of providing only the bare essentials of operating facilities required for its complement of four squadrons, due to the incomplete development of the field and lack of modern facilities.

(b) Marine flying field, Parris Island, S. C.: Limited operating facilities for Marine Corps aircraft. Used as a base for conducting gunnery practices of Marine Corps squadrons.

(c) Naval Aircraft Factory, Philadelphia, Pa.: Facilities for overhaul, manufacture, and test of naval aircraft and limited landplane and seaplane operating facilities.

(d) Naval air station, Anacostia, D. C.: Limited landplane and seaplane operating facilities for the flight test of experimental Navy and Marine Corps aircraft and flight facilities for naval aviators stationed in Washington.

(e) Naval proving ground, Dahlgren, Va.: Minor landplane and seaplane operating facilities for a small number of aircraft engaged in experimental ordnance developments.

(f) Naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I.: Minor seaplane operating facilities for the operation of seaplanes engaged in torpedo-development work.

(g) Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.: Minor operating facilities for seaplanes.

(h) Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C.: Minor landplane and seaplane operating facilities for transient planes.

(i) Naval destroyer base, Squantum, Mass.: Minor landplane and seaplane operating facilities developed in connection with operations of Naval Reserve aviation base.

(j) Naval air station, Cape May, N. J.: Inactive station developed during the World War. Minor landplane and seaplane operating facilities. At present used partially by Coast Guard and also by Naval Reserves during summer months for gunnery training.

(k) Naval air station, Chatham, Mass.: Inactive station developed during the World War. No operating facilities maintained. Station no longer required and being disposed of by Navy Department.

(l) Naval air station, Lakehurst, N. J.: Operating and maintenance facilities for lighter-than-air aircraft and minor landplane operating facilities.

Naval Reserve air bases are not included in the accommodations for naval aircraft on the Atlantic coast listed above, as they are in each case either a part of another naval activity or are leased commercial facilities and do not in themselves add additional air accommodations, except to a slight degree at Squantum, Mass., as noted in paragraph (i). Naval Reserve air bases on the Atlantic coast are:

Naval Reserve air base, Opa-Locka (Miami), Fla.: Minor landplane facilities leased commercially.

Naval Reserve air base, Anacostia, D. C.: At naval air station, Anacostia.

Naval Reserve air base, Philadelphia, Pa.: At Naval Aircraft Factory.

Naval Reserve air base, New York, N. Y.: Landplane facilities leased at Floyd Bennett Airport.

Naval Reserve air base: Squantum, Mass.: On Government property at old destroyer base. Minor seaplane and landplane facilities.

The second question propounded in House Resolution 213 is as follows:

What plans, if any, exist or have been formulated for the establishment of naval air bases on the Atlantic coast, and what recommendations, if any, for such facilities have been made to Congress or to any of its committees?

Due to the inadequacy of facilities on the Pacific coast and in Panama and Hawaii for the accommodation of aircraft now operating there, the provision of additional facilities in those locations, including the air station at Alameda, becomes an urgent, immediate requirement. Until these urgent requirements on the Pacific coast, in Panama, Hawaii, and the necessary improvement of Hampton Roads and Pensacola are met, no additional naval air bases on the Atlantic coast should be established. Consequently, additional Atlantic coast naval air bases, not being urgent under conditions today, detailed planning for such bases has been deferred to make way for developments of higher priority at existing bases, including Alameda.

The existing naval bases, including Alameda, when all are adequately developed, will be sufficient for the maintenance and overhaul of all naval aircraft, regardless of whether the United States fleet is based in the Atlantic or in the Pacific or divided between the two coasts. Planes requiring periodic overhaul can be and are flown across the continent as necessary for this purpose in order to utilize all facilities.

Should the entire United States fleet ever be based on the Atlantic coast, the facilities for maintenance would be satisfactory, as indicated above, but the facilities for training would be inadequate. Hampton Roads is the only station suitable for the necessary shore training of carrier and other ship-based planes and its capacity would be inadequate for the purpose. The concentration of the planes of six carriers, besides those of battleships and cruisers, at one place would moreover interfere with their operations and would not be safe. An additional base for such training would therefore be necessary. This additional base should be located at some place adjacent to deep water and preferably at some place where the weather conditions are favorable for training during the entire year. The Navy Department is now studying this question. It is not at this time prepared to make a recommendation, as it has not yet obtained all the necessary data upon which to make a decision.

By letter dated May 20, 1937, the chairman, Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, requested that in addition to the information requested in House Resolution 213, the Navy Department include in its reply an answer to the following:

"Will the Department indicate whether or not the matter of the location of further bases is receiving present study and whether or not it is likely that at least a tentative plan may be ready for presentation within the next year with the understanding that this does no refer to questions of priorities?"

Experience in operating large numbers of aircraft on the Pacific coast has proved the necessity for a main training base for naval aircraft in the southern part of the coast where weather conditions are favorable for year-round training. But due to the congestion at San Diego, another main air base, located at the site of a main naval base, San Francisco Bay, has been found imperative, and the development of Alameda has therefore been sought. Less favorable weather conditions for training permit smaller aviation facilities at the other main naval base, Puget Sound. These three locations, one at each extremity of the coast and one near the middle of the stretch of coast, give the necessary distribution for these three peacetime bases for strategic considerations.

From this past experience the Navy Department reasons that should the entire fleet be based on the Atlantic coast, a like number and a somewhat similar distribution of peacetime air bases would ultimately be necessary in the East, both for training and from strategic considerations; that is, a base with some aviation facilities to the northward, the existing base at Hampton Roads, which is in the middle of the coast line, for a main training base and one to the southward as an additional main training base for naval aircraft.

The Rodman Board recommended the development of two main naval bases on the Atlantic coast, one in the New York-Narragansett Bay region and one at Chesapeake Bay, with aviation bases at each of these localities. It, however, placed the priority of development of these two main naval bases below the two main naval bases on the Pacific coast and the Navy Department has followed that general priority in all subsequent development.

At the present moment, and without the benefit of a complete study, the general scheme for the development of air bases in the East would appear to be as follows: Hampton Roads should be developed to capacity before a new development in air facilities is undertaken on the Atlantic coast in order to keep operating and overhead costs down to a minimum. At some time in the future an air base something like the existing air base at Seattle should probably be established to the northward, possibly in the New York-Narragansett Bay region. However, this would now appear to be less urgent from an operation and training standpoint than an additional main training base, probably to the southward.

The studies of the Navy Department in connection with existing inadequate aviation facilities ashore have always indicated the need for such an additional base for the training of naval aircraft in the event that the entire United States fleet were based on the Atlantic coast. Since this contingency seems at present so remote, no detailed study of all possible locations for such an additional base on the Atlantic coast of the United States or in the Caribbean area has yet been made.

No detailed study has yet been made of the exact character or extent of the additional establishment required, but such a new establishment should include anchorage space, take-off area, piers, flying fields, machine gun and bombing areas, barracks, hangars, shops for operating upkeep and perhaps for major overhaul, fuel storage, power, light, and accessories, etc. Among the many factors to be considered in selecting a location are the strategic position, weather conditions, proximity or remoteness from thickly settled areas, supply and transportation facilities, available labor supply, depth and area of water, living conditions for personnel, utilization of existing naval facilities. All this requires the collection of much data.

No decision as to location should be made until the advantages and disadvantages of all possible locations have been carefully considered from every standpoint and also weighed against the cost of development at each possible location. A base of this character would be a large and costly establishment. It is all the more desirable, therefore, to proceed slowly and thoroughly, particularly as the need for such a base under present conditions, is not urgent.

In view of the above no specific plans for the establishment of additional naval air bases on the Atlantic coast have been prepared. However, the Navy Department will study this matter. Any tentative plan must be subject to entire change or to modification in detail depending upon the conditions existing at the time when it may be possible to carry out the plan.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON, Acting.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and immediately following the address of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD] may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 30 minutes. I have a matter that I believe is a question of personal privilege, but rather than exercise that prerogative I am requesting unanimous consent to proceed for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 30 minutes. The Chair thinks it proper to state in this connection that he has examined the subject matter to which the Delegate from Hawaii desires to refer and he thinks it clearly embraces a matter of personal privilege.

However, the gentleman does not desire to press that, and asks unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, this is Calendar Wednesday, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has the call. A gentleman from each side of the aisle has already taken time to speak. The gentleman from Hawaii will now take 30 minutes. After that I shall insist the House proceed with the call of committees. However, I shall not object at this time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] is on the floor, is my understanding correct that the gentleman does not intend to call up today the bill (H. R. 4732) to revise the air-mail laws?

Mr. MEAD. That is our intention at this time.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman does not intend to bring it up?

Mr. MEAD. No.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the Delegate from Hawaii if he will withhold his request in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a Senate joint resolution?

Mr. KING. I withhold the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question. Assuming the appointment of the joint committee to which the gentleman refers, is it expected any other matters of taxation than those referred to in the President's message yesterday will be taken up by that committee?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The resolution speaks for itself. The investigation would not include anything further than is provided in the resolution, which I assume the gentleman has examined. The resolution is based entirely on the message of the President.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the resolution ought to be read, anyway.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I think we ought to know what is in it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

(b) The joint committee shall be composed of six Members of the Senate who are members of the Committee on Finance, appointed by the President of the Senate, and six Members of the House of Representatives who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the methods of evasion and avoidance of income, estate, and gift taxes, pointed out in the message of the President transmitted to Congress on June 1, 1937, and other methods of tax evasion and avoidance, and to report to the Senate and the House, at the earliest practicable date, and from time to time thereafter, but not later than February 1, 1938, its recommendations as to remedies for the evils disclosed by such investigation.

SEC. 3. (a) The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House. The provisions of sections 101 and 102 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned, under authority of this joint resolution.

(b) (1) The Secretary of the Treasury and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the joint committee, shall furnish such committee with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return of income, estate, or gift tax.

(2) The joint committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all such returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

(3) The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Committee on Ways and Means, or the Committee on Finance, and shall have the right to make public, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, any such information or any such returns. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate, or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government and of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

SEC. 5. The joint committee may authorize any one or more officers or employees of the Treasury Department to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony as the committee may authorize. In any such case subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

SEC. 6. All authority conferred by this joint resolution shall expire on February 1, 1938.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless some amendments are made to this resolution I shall be compelled to object.

I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the resolution and the message of the President. I am not eager that the Committee on Rules be burdened by holding hearings on this matter, which procedure would result from my objection. However, I examined the resolution yesterday and further today and have given it careful thought. Solely from the standpoint of protecting the rights of this House, I submit to the gentleman that the matters appearing in this resolution appear for the first time in any resolution in my observation, which leads me to the conclusion, which may be unfounded, that the resolution could not have been drawn in this particular locality.

First, on page 3, subdivision (3) of section 3 gives this joint congressional committee the permission, but not the obligation, to report to Congress, its creator. The paragraph states the joint committee shall have the right to submit a report. It may report to our Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance of the Senate. Unless the making of this report were made obligatory I would object.

Next—and this is a matter which does not concern me particularly but should concern the House, because the House has passed on it several times—section 4 violates the position this House has taken regarding the compensation of employees of committees.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Just a minute, until I finish my statement.

Although I personally fought the $3,000 limitation this House has several times definitely gone on record that $3,000 is the most that can be paid any employee of a committee. Under this provision of payment under the Classification Act employees of the committee could be paid as high as $9,000.

In connection with what section does the gentleman from Tennessee wish me to yield?

Mr. COOPER. I asked the gentleman to yield in connection with the first objection the gentleman mentioned. I am sure the gentleman will observe that section 2 covers the question of the report to Congress, to both the House and the Senate. Paragraph (3) on page 3 relates to information secured by the committee with reference to income-tax returns. This is no departure from the situation which now exists.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Why should they not report to our Committee on Ways and Means? Why do you put in the resolution—I know the gentleman did not put it in, but somebody did—"shall have the right" to report? Of course they have the right. That is gratuitous language. They either should report or they should not report.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, with all due deference, the question of the report to the Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance or to the Congress is controlled by section 2. Paragraph (3) on page 3 relates only to reporting such information as the joint committee may deem advisable with reference to income-tax returns.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have never seen it in a resolution. However, we will pass that for the moment.

There is a provision in this resolution which I personally could never permit to go through under unanimous consent. Section 5 is probably the greatest surrender and delegation of congressional power which has ever been suggested to the House of Representatives.

This section provides nothing more or less than that an employee of the Treasury may hold hearings by himself on behalf of and representing a joint committee of Congress and may issue subpenas. He may examine witnesses all by himself, without the necessity of a Member of Congress being present. Unless that section went out, I would never permit this to go through under unanimous consent. This section, of course, was never concocted in our legislative drafting bureau or by any Member of Congress.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I think, with reference to the gentleman's first objection, that what the gentleman has in mind is, if the words "shall have the right to submit" should be limited by striking out the words "have the right to", then the bill would read, "shall submit to the House of Representatives."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have amendments here which I propose to offer.

Let me focus on this last section. It provides that any officer or employee of the Treasury Department may hold the hearings of this joint congressional committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Only as they may be authorized to do so by the joint committee. They cannot take a step without authorization by the joint committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Should a congressional committee ever authorize an employee of the Department to go out and hold hearings and subpena witnesses and examine witnesses?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Perhaps they might do that under certain circumstances.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I cannot consider a congressional committee ever so surrendering its power as to turn the hearings over to an employee of the Government.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is it not customary for a resolution like this to go through the Rules Committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am not making that point. I would like to see it go through by unanimous consent to avoid hearings, but I shall object unless these amendments are made.

Mr. MAVERICK. Why should there not be a hearing? We are suddenly handed a bill and asked to pass it without reading it. I have been trying to get a copy, and have just been handed the Senate—not the House—resolution. What is the hurry?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is supposed to be some expedition about it. In the other body it was passed yesterday. Whether it was read I do not know. There is supposed to be some hurry about this, but the gentleman will recall that earlier in this administration we hurried through the appointment of a joint committee to reorganize the Government, and that committee is not entirely disjointed, although it held some hearings.

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to make this observation: We Democrats are constantly accused of being "rubber stamps." I do not admit that, but I do want to say I do not believe that anything like this should be so suddenly considered.

I am entirely in accord with getting after tax evaders, but the technique of the writing of the bill ought to take a little time. That is because some of these bills come in here and are written so loosely and haphazardly that they look as though they must have been written in China. I believe this legislation should go through the appropriate committee at the proper time. This can be done in 48 hours, and I do not see any reason why it should not be done. I refuse to vote blind.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. A more practical way than that would be for the Committee on Ways and Means to consider this resolution and make such changes as may be necessary.

Mr. MAVERICK. They ought to consider the resolution in the regular manner of course. Legislative procedure should be followed. Members of Congress should know what they are voting on. So far as I am concerned, I am tired of bills being presented with some mysterious reason why I should do something. I want to know the real reason. This is supposed to be a parliamentary body, not a door mat. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield, can the gentleman state whether this joint resolution was referred to any committee in the Senate?

Mr. DOUGHTON. How could the Ways and Means Committee consider this resolution when it has never been referred to the Ways and Means Committee? It was referred to the Committee on Rules. How does the gentleman expect us to consider a resolution that has never been referred to the committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In answer to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], of course, the Committee on Ways and Means would appear before the Rules Committee and ask that the resolution be reported out. This would follow some action by the Ways and Means Committee, and before they appeared before the Rules Committee they could meet and properly frame a proper resolution which would be somewhat in accord with our precedents. I want to assure the gentleman that I am for this investigation, but let us not surrender all the powers of our investigating congressional committees.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman will yield, I do not consider that this resolution surrenders any powers whatever, unless that is done voluntarily by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. A congressional committee should not have the power to surrender all of its powers to a $1,200 employee in any department of the Government.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is absolutely right. Section 5 has no place in the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; it should be taken out bodily.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Especially until it has been referred to the Ways and Means Committee or some responsible committee. Does the gentleman know whether this resolution was referred to any committee in the Senate?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I understand it was taken up by unanimous consent and passed with the usual expedition that happens to things over there.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It seems to me this matter ought to go to the Ways and Means Committee for its consideration and then to the Rules Committee.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under a further reservation of objection—and I am going to object—I want to make the statement that on account of the vagueness of the way this is jumped up like the devil, I am going to object to it; that is, simply because I do not believe we should be asked to vote on a bill of which we do not know the contents, thrown at us without explanation, and without the House having opportunity to give it mature consideration. So I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MAVERICK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] that he be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for these 30 minutes, and I shall not use them all; I shall be as brief as possible, to refer to a statement made in the RECORD of May 28 under an extension of remarks by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]. The paragraph to which I refer reads as follows:

> You will note that in the above newspaper item that it was stated that Representative HOOK then qualified his statement by saying, "We must take care of the mainland first." This was not only a deliberate misrepresentation but a deliberate lie, and I charge the Delegate from Hawaii with deliberate manipulation of such misinformation. The tactics used by the Delegate from Hawaii are the tactics that have been used by the Big Five in Hawaii. I charge that they are un-American, unprincipled, and without foundation.

I do not want to use an hour under a question of personal privilege. I do not believe the membership of the House is so deeply concerned with the controversy between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] and myself that they wish to spend an hour or any part of it in that way, but I do believe that the membership of this House will expect any Member who respects his good name and good faith to resent such a charge, and I tell the Members of this House that the charge that I deliberately manipulated misinformation is unwarranted, unjustified, and untrue. The circumstances are simply these:

On April 29 I addressed the House on the pending sugar legislation, and was cross-questioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]. In the questions and replies a gentleman of the press, a representative of a Honolulu paper, thought he heard more than actually took place and sent a wire out to Honolulu that did misquote the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]. I had nothing to do with it whatsoever; I did not know anything about it until it was all over. I have no doubt that that member of the press did it in absolute good faith.

Incidentally, in this extension of remarks by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], he refers to this cross-examination on April 29 that was published in Honolulu on April 30 and ties it to a speech that he made on the floor on May 20. So he was as much confused about the dates as he is about my part in it, and anyone who would be interested enough to follow it up would realize that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] was under a misapprehension in that particular. Furthermore, he obtained from the House permission to incorporate in his remarks a letter which he had received from Honolulu. He withheld the signature to that letter, so that it is to me and to the Members of the House an anonymous letter. It is vicious, wanton, and untrue, so far as it refers to a large part of the people of my community, as much so as anything I have ever read, and I am astonished at the sense of propriety of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] in incorporating it in his remarks. It calls names that no gentleman would use. I do not think any Member of this House would tolerate any such language as applied to a part of the people of his district, and I do resent the statements made in this letter which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] incorporated in his extension of remarks, and I assure the membership of this House that there is not a single word of truth in a single item of the letter, and that the man who wrote it does not express the opinions or ideas of the people of Hawaii. It is a wanton insult to a large number of respectable, law-abiding people in the Territory of Hawaii, the great majority of whom are American citizens by birth, men who have served in the Army and Navy, and men who are today officers in the Reserve Corps and members of the R. O. T. C. It is a blanket accusation of thousands of the men, women, and children of Hawaii, many of the men in professional and business life and public officers of the Federal and local governments, and many hold commissions issued by the President of the United States as officials of the National Government.

The people so inexcusably and anonymously attacked are helpless to defend themselves, except as the rules of this House will extend its protection to them, and as I can, under those rules, refute the scurrilous statements made about them. I know these people as friends and fellow citizens; they are my constituents. I know them as an industrious, orderly people, living up to their obligations as citizens, giving their allegiance to the land of their birth and adoption, a loyal group of Americans who will in the future, as they have in the past, prove their character and loyalty by their actions. I want to assure the membership of this House, and the American people, that out in Hawaii, you have as fine a body of citizens as may be found anywhere; and that goes for all our racial groups. We will not be found wanting in the time of national need nc more than we have been in the daily exercise of a citizen's duties.

That is all that I am going to say because I realize the House wants to go on about its business. I do want to say also, however, that on no occasion have I ever attacked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] and I have absolutely no personal animus against him, nor do I charge him today with anything else than having made an unwarranted and unjustified charge against my good faith. The argument we are having is on an abstraction of law that can be settled without personal animus. I have never yet exercised any personal animus toward any Member of the House, nor do I want to detract anything from his district or the district of any other Member. I thank the Members for the attention they have given me, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOBBS). Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

EXTENSION OF AIR MAIL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD (when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I call up the bill (H. R. 6628) to permit the further extension of the Air Mail Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up the bill H. R. 6628. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. GREEVER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6628, with Mr. GREEVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, under the rule I have 1 hour, and I shall give 1 hour to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], or as much of that time as he may desire. I yield myself 15 minutes.

This bill, H. R. 6628, Mr. Chairman, is for the purpose of increasing the mileage of our air-mail system. From time to time the Congress authorizes the Department to enlarge the air-mail system, and after such authorization is given the Department must secure, through the medium of the Committee on Appropriations, the funds with which to make the extensions.

This bill will authorize the Department to add 3,000 route miles to our existing Air Mail Service. It will likewise authorize an increase of 7,000,000 annual flown miles to the air-mail system. There is a difference between route miles and flown miles. For illustration, if a route 100 miles in length were authorized, that would come under the route-mile authorization contained in the law. If two round-trip schedules per day were authorized over that 100-mile route, that would add 400 scheduled flown miles per day, for 365 days a year if it were a daily service, and that would help to make up the annual flown miles included in this authorization of 7,000,000 additional miles.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman care to yield at this point?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, this bill is an authorization for additional mileage?

Mr. MEAD. That is true.

Mr. SNELL. Where does the money come from to pay for this additional mileage?

Mr. MEAD. In the first place, it is not compulsory under the bill for the Department to increase the service one iota. They can leave it as it is.

Mr. SNELL. I suppose they intend to increase it, or they would not be here asking for this authorization.

Mr. MEAD. But if the Postal Service secures sufficient funds from the Congress through the medium of the Appropriations Committee, it will increase the service so far as the appropriation permits. Therefore we have two checks on extensions: First, the Department must come to the Congress for the mileage authorization, and, second, for the appropriation necessary to finance the system.

Mr. SNELL. The appropriations have already been made for the fiscal year 1938 for the Post Office Department.

Mr. MEAD. That is true.

Mr. SNELL. Then you cannot increase this mileage right away, can you?

Mr. MEAD. The appropriation agreed upon by the conferees contains an amount of over a million dollars with which the Department can expand the present system. Under a prior authorization they could add some 2,000 route miles, but they have sufficient funds and the demands are heavy enough to warrant extensions in excess of 2,000 miles. By reason of the fact that they have the money, we are now giving them the mileage so that they may provide air-mail service to more sections of the country.

Mr. SNELL. What would be the total cost if they expanded it to the full amount authorized under this legislation?

Mr. MEAD. It is difficult to estimate the cost, for the reason that under the new law the Post Office Department advertises for bids. It is my understanding that bids will be requested in the very near future for a line between Washington, D. C., and Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. SNELL. It all circulates around Buffalo?

Mr. MEAD. I am using that particular item because, more by accident than otherwise, I am familiar with it. It is expected that the Post Office Department will receive some very low bids, perhaps as low as 10 cents a mile. If that is true and the route mileage is a little in excess of 300, that service will be put into effect at a very low cost. This million dollars in excess of the needs for next year might be used in the creation of other services needed all over the country.

Speaking about this new service from Washington to Buffalo, let me say that the Member representing one of the Buffalo districts had nothing whatever to do with instituting this service. At one time in the history of the development of aviation I vigorously objected to its installation, but it happens in the course of this new, romantic enterprise in the air that the Government to the north of us is very much interested in the establishment of a service that will connect the two capitals. So we expect, when this service is instituted, that another service will be created in the Dominion of Canada to operate between Ottawa, Quebec, Montreal, and Toronto, and this American end of the service will operate from Buffalo to Harrisburg to Washington.

It certainly would not be a misnomer if it were called the Capital Air Line or the Capital Aviation Co.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman must have some idea of what the total amount of this proposal might reach.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that we now have approximately 30,000 route miles at a cost of approximately $12,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. That is $400 a route mile.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I may also say to the gentleman that this year the revenues from the Air Mail Service will approximate $12,500,000 and the cost of the Service about $12,900,000. For the first time in the history of the development we approach a balance in the Air Mail Service.

Mr. SNELL. Is that balance reached the same way you reach your general balance for the Post Office Department? The gentleman states on the floor that the Department is making money, yet every year we have to appropriate anywhere from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000 to make up a deficit. I am wondering if the gentleman is using the same method of figuring in connection with air mail that the gentleman has always used in connection with general post-office expenses?

Mr. MEAD. My good friend from New York is businessman enough and partisan enough——

Mr. SNELL. I will admit both.

Mr. MEAD. Not to find fault with the prevailing custom. First of all, the present policy of the Postal Service is the child of one of the most lovable characters that ever served on a committee in this Chamber. It is the creation of a man who represented his district here for a score of years and who knew more about the Postal Service than any other man I ever met. I am speaking of Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, ranking member for years on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, who fathered the bill which credits the Postal Service with the cost of subsidies and charges up only the actual, essential, normal expenditures. This system was put into effect back in the days of President Calvin Coolidge. It is the system that has guided postmasters from that day to this. It was grossly unfair for the Congress of the United States to pass a measure forcing the Post Office Department to assume a subsidy of $20,000,000, we will say, to promote the American merchant marine, and then have the Department charged with that as a deficit in the Postal Service. It was unfair for the Congress to pass a law creating an air-mail subsidy that at one time approximated $15,000,000 and to take that amount out of the postal revenues. It was unfair for the Congress of the United States to demand that the Post Office Department depart from its natural activity and distribute the soldiers' bonus, sell hunters' stamps for the Department of Agriculture, and sell baby bonds for the Treasury Department without crediting the Department for such additional activities.

Mr. SNELL. Selling stamps has always been an activity of the Department?

Mr. MEAD. These are not proper activities of the Postal Service. Under the Kelly postal policy law the Post Office Department, in balancing its financial affairs at the end of the year, takes credit for these subsidies, these nonpostal activities, and in its pronouncements to the public and in its reports to the Congress explains that in doing so it is following the law. It gives both the gross and the net postal deficits. And I am able to say that for the last 4 years the Post Office Department has paid its way insofar as the normal, natural activities of that service are concerned. It has no net deficit. Its only deficits result from the subsidies and the unnatural, or the abnormal, the nonessential activities forced upon it by the Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that everything the gentleman has said along this line is correct. Congress passed laws making the Post Office Department perform these various services, but as a matter of fact, throughout its existence they have all been considered a part of the expense of the Post Office Department. Is not this so?

Mr. MEAD. Not exactly, for the reason that we have only had a merchant marine subsidy——

Mr. SNELL. I mean the other subsidies. We know that we have paid for carrying ocean mail more than it was worth because it was a subsidy, and we paid it that way because the people would not stand for direct subsidies.

Mr. MEAD. Only since the original Merchant Marine Act sponsored by Representative WHITE became a law, because prior to that time we paid a certain sum.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The gentleman knows there was a time in the operation of the Postal Service when we only paid for the actual weight of mail carried on flag ships.

Mr. SNELL. I know that.

Mr. MEAD. We pay that rate now to foreign-flag ships, but under the subsidy we paid a price that resulted from competitive bidding where there was no competition. Under the new law, of course, this will be taken care of by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SNELL. Getting back to my original question, the Air Mail Service actually pays its running expenses at the present time, as I understand it, subsidies and everything considered.

Mr. MEAD. There is only a difference of a half a million in an appropriation of $12,500,000.

Mr. SNELL. That is the main thing I am interested in. Along that line we canceled all these contracts a few years ago on account of fraud, and so forth. What has the Department done in connection with the prosecution of those people who held the contracts that were canceled at that time?

Mr. MEAD. I understand that practically all of the claims, with the exception of one or two, have been settled.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman means that the people who held the contracts have paid back to the Government the money that they obtained through fraud and misrepresentation?

Mr. MEAD. No. It is my understanding in most cases the Government settled with the company because of losses incurred as the result of the suspension of contracts.

Mr. SNELL. If the contracts were suspended on account of fraud and misrepresentation on the part of the contractor, as the information was given out to the public at that time, why should the Government have to pay them any money?

Mr. MEAD. I suppose that litigation resulted and the outcome prompted the Department and the companies to get together and settle their difficulties in the manner in which I have just explained.

Mr. SNELL. Then evidently the Department was not entirely right in the charges they made against the contractors at that time?

Mr. MEAD. In some cases the Department was exactly right, but perhaps it was difficult under the law and by reason of the presentation of the cases to prove it was right in all cases.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think that under the same circumstances the Department would do the way they did before?

Mr. MEAD. Well, that is a difficult question to answer; but I may say to the gentleman that the Treasury Department has saved a great deal of money, because we were paying $21,000,000 for a very limited air-mail service. We are now paying $12,800,000 for a service that is much better than the service we enjoyed in those days.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, all those things have been perfected, and as a result of these subsidies we are getting better service. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MEAD. As a result of the general revision of the law fathered by the Post Office Committee reducing the rates, eliminating interlocking directorates, forcing the companies out of ownership of every other activity, reducing and limiting the salaries, making them stand upon their own feet and operating their own line without any financial tie-ups—all of that came out of the cancelation and resulted in a saving to date of approximately $75,000,000. So, while it may have been necessary for the Department to settle certain cases with particular contractors, it has helped the service. It has purged the industry, and it has certainly been beneficial to the Treasury of the United States.

I believe our committee that sponsored this new air-mail law deserves a great deal of credit because of the large savings that have resulted since the operation and administration of this law. There is not another industry in the United States that operates on such a high ethical basis as is the case with the air-mail industry. It stands alone. It owns its own set-up. It is in nowise tied up with any other financial or industrial activity. The salaries of its executives are limited to $17,500 a year. It is conducting a real, practical operation without competition among companies and without the use of any cutthroat practices. I think that the Congress along with the committee deserves credit.

Mr. SNELL. I think the committee has always done good work in connection with the Post Office Department. I have always admitted that. I want to ask one more question. Practically all of this mail is carried under private contract?

Mr. MEAD. All of it.

Mr. SNELL. What did the gentleman mean when he said the Department owns all of this equipment, and so forth?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman misunderstood me. The Department owns none of the equipment. The contractors own all of the equipment, except possibly the ground equipment, which is the property of the Government, and is supervised by the Department of Commerce. That includes emergency landing fields, lights, radio stations, and equipment of that nature. The Postal Service owns none of that equipment whatever. The American aviation service, as the gentleman has so well stated, has gradually improved as a matter of evolution and invention.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, we would expect it would be much better now than when it first started.

Mr. MEAD. Regardless of the administration or the Congress, it would naturally become better every year; but today, by every standard of measurement, applying the available comparison from statistics and figures of every character, the American Air Mail Service is the best of its kind in the world. Not long ago a high-ranking official of the Canadian postal service, where they pay twice as much per mile, was informed that the aviation service in the United States was wrecked a few years ago. He mentioned that fact, then added, "I only wish that Canada had some of those men from the United States who wrecked the Air Mail Service." He was trying to bring out the fact that he realized the American service was much better than the Canadian service. As one who has made a study of aviation of every air-minded country in the world, may I say that we have a great service. We have a thousand pilots and as many ships that could be converted into bombers and used as part of our national defense.

We are only paying $12,000,000, approximately, for this remarkable insurance, yet we spend twice as much as that for one battleship. When you realize that fact it immediately comes home to you that we ought to build up this service, that we ought to expand aviation, and that it would be a good thing for the United States if we would enlist every pilot in commercial aviation, particularly those in the Air Mail Service, in the military reserve and give him 2 months of intensive training each year so that he would be fitted to fly in the defense of America whenever needed. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to bring to the House the report of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee on this legislation. I also want to speak a good word for the distinguished chairman of that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEADE], and the other members of the committee.

It is a pleasure to work with this committee in an endeavor to secure beneficial legislation for the Postal Service.

The bill we are considering at this time increases the route mileage and the air-flown mileage. There is a great need for this additional mileage and few of us realize that we have 80 cities in the United States with a population of 100,000 that at this time are not served with air mail. I can see in the future that towns of ten, fifteen, or twenty-five thousand are going to demand this air-mail service. Therefore, when we consider this legislation, we should look forward to the future and visualize an air-minded nation.

This service, as the chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee has just pointed out, is beneficial in many ways and has a great future. A number of Members of Congress have made application for an extension of air-mail routes. And with the enactment of this legislation plus the recent appropriation of $250,000 additional for air-mail service, many new communities should be given air-mail service.

I hope before this session of Congress ends we may bring in legislation which will permit us to extend our present air-mail lines and increase the mileage we already have. I think that in the future you will find this industry expanding so that every waterway, every arterial highway, and every railway will ultimately be paralleled by an airway.

At present I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the need for an air-mail service between Kansas City and Denver, Colo., a distance of 560 miles. This service is badly needed to serve the commercial needs between these cities, which are the largest and most important from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast. This service, if established, would furnish air mail and commercial aviation to Topeka, the capital city of Kansas, which is not now being served, as well as such other cities as Lawrence, Manhattan, Junction City, which is located near Fort Riley, the military post, Abilene, and Salina, and would traverse the route over county-seat towns in every county to the Colorado line. Much money has been spent by the Federal Government in improving airports in all of these cities, and the natural terrain of the country is conducive to safe flying. Kansas City, including Kansas City, Kans., has a combined population of over 550,000. Denver has a population, including its metropolitan area, of over 325,000 people, and this service, if established, would be of benefit to several million people in and contributory to that territory. Topeka is the capital city of Kansas, has a population of approximately 80,000, and at the present time houses a large number of Federal bureaus, which would be greatly benefited by air-mail service. Salina is a city of approximately 20,000, has extensive commercial interests, and is a large milling center which is badly in need of air mail. It is also the headquarters for the Soil Conservation Service for the States of Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma, and I am informed that should air-mail service be established, it would greatly reduce the communication costs of this agency.

I also want to call to the attention of the House the fact that the State of Kansas is at present crossed by only one air-mail route, and it crosses the southeast fourth of the State, and additional route mileage is badly needed.

Recently Senator Johnson of Colorado and Representatives Lewis of Colorado; Duncan and Bell, of Missouri; Guyer, Lambertson, and myself, of Kansas, and Guy Helvering, of Salina, presented the need for this service to Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General. We were accorded a very courteous hearing, and I trust this service will be granted at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, at the moment I sought recognition I wanted to ask the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the information of the Committee, whether it is not a fact that in connection with the investigation of the fraudulent contracts referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], those fraudulent contracts were investigated by the Post Office Department, through their inspection department, and the settlements were then made by the Department of Justice and not the Post Office Department?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in my experience in the Postal Service—and I want to defend the Post Office Department—there were many investigations made by post-office inspectors where there were elements of fraud and various other conflicting circumstances involved, but when the post-office inspectors had submitted their reports to the chief inspector at Washington and the reports had been passed on to the Department of Justice, our hands were tied as to the prosecution. In many, many instances settlements were made contrary to the wishes of the Post Office Department and its investigators.

In one instance that comes to mind a lawyer appearing as counsel for a mail contractor refused the settlement demanded under the terms of his bond for the faithful and efficient performance of the terms of his contract with the Post Office Department. The demand was immediately made on his sureties under the terms of his bond. The same lawyer thereupon appeared as counsel for the sureties. Civil suit in a district court of the United States was instituted. The same lawyer sought and obtained at the hands of the Department of Justice one continuance of the case after another each time it was due for trial. Ultimately this lawyer became an assistant United States attorney for the district, and to him reverted prosecution of the case he had formerly defended. Obviously, as might be expected, the case thereafter was never called. The same assistant United States attorney was thereafter appointed United States district judge for that same district. In this latter capacity—as judge—he is now sworn to "administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich, and * * * faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent upon"—him—"as district judge according to the best of"—his—"abilities and understanding agreeable to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Obviously, as might be expected, the case has never since been heard nor have I ever been called as the Government's sole prosecuting witness.

May I state also in connection with the matter referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] when he made a rapid calculation of the cost per mile on the basis of 30,000 flown miles, it is necessary to add two more ciphers, so the figure would be $400 instead of $4. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume the entire 5 minutes, but I do feel it in my heart to say I am very much pleased the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has brought in this measure which increases the number of route miles and the number of miles that may be flown in the Air Mail Service.

Under the existing statute there is a limitation of 32,000 miles on the route miles and a limitation of 45,000,000 miles on the miles flown. This proposed legislation, as I hastily read it, increases the limit to 35,000 route miles and 52,000,000 airplane miles flown. In my opinion, this is a very salutary measure and should be unanimously supported.

In the formation of the last Post Office Department appropriation bill we were compelled to reject the Senate amendment, which added over $525,000 to the air-mail appropriation, and we had to do this because of this existing statutory limitation, although everybody who sat around the conference table heartily approved the Senate provision, I believe. We did allow $1,400,000 for additional routes and extensions and for increased frequencies. This was all that could be allowed under existing statutory limitations. In other words, we brought up the service to the highest ceiling which could be achieved under existing limitations. The increase in authorizations provided in this bill will enable the contract air-mail service to proceed with some very necessary new routes, extensions, and increases of frequencies, and will be a very valuable aid in the development of this very valuable service.

I want to congratulate the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for its foresightedness in bringing in this measure.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, the Air Mail Service of the United States is one of the things of which the country may be justly proud. May I once more call the attention of the Members of the House to the need for a real extension of real air-mail service in the Territory of Alaska.

We have in the Territory an area equal to that of about one-fifth of the continental United States, and of an extent east to west and north to south which equals that of the entire Union. In all of this vast land there exists at the present time only about 2,500 miles of roads and about 700 miles of railroad. Beyond the districts immediately adjacent to the motor roads and the railroads there is only one practical way to have mail service, and that is by air. Formerly it took us 25 days to carry mail in the wintertime from Fairbanks to Nome. It now takes us 3½ hours. From this single illustration one can understand not only the need for the service we have at the present time, but the real desirability of having at least four times as much in the way of air-mail service in Alaska as exists at present.

The Committee on Appropriations has approved, and Congress has passed the bill which gives us for the first time true air mail in the Territory of Alaska. It is labeled as the Foreign Service, because it passes through the Dominion of Canada. The route lies from Juneau, Alaska, on the south, to White Horse in the Yukon Territory, Canada, thence northwesterly to Fairbanks, Alaska. Here is a service which without air mail can only be covered in the space of about 6 days, whereas by the use of air mail it takes approximately 6 hours. The service should be infinitely expanded, it should be indefinitely expanded in the Territory of Alaska to take in all parts of the country, to include Nome, which lies on the shores of Bering Sea; McGrath, on the upper Kuskokwim; Flat, near the Iditarod River; Bethel, on the lower Kuskokwim; and Good News Bay, on the Bering Sea coast, where recently a valuable platinum strike was made.

The service should also be extended to the cities of the southern coast of Alaska, Cordova, Valdez, Seward, and Anchorage, and to Bristol Bay.

Nothing else that I know of so stimulates commerce and industry as quick and reliable service by air. Of course, we all realize that with the air-mail service will come increased means of transportation of freight and passengers all over the part of the country served by air mail. Air transportation can bring about more efficiency with greater savings in the Territory of Alaska than in any other part of the United States of which I have any knowledge, because we do not possess the same facilities for transportation by other means of transportation, such as roads and highways and railroads. In many places we must go by air if we go at all without excessive cost and great delay.

It is singular, Mr. Chairman, that air-mail service for Alaska such as we will have after July 1, 1937, must be established under the law providing for foreign air-mail service, since Alaska is indubitably a part and parcel of the United States, and the Supreme Court has held that the Constitution extends in full force and vigor to the incorporated Territories of the United States, which now embrace only Alaska and Hawaii, and that the citizens of those Territories enjoy all of the rights and liberties afforded by the Constitution. The reason for setting up air-mail service between Juneau and Fairbanks, Alaska, under the foreign air-mail laws is because, as a matter of convenience, a part of the journey must be made over Canadian territory and a stop made at White Horse, in Yukon Territory, Canada.

While Alaskans are thankful for the beginning thus made in a real air-mail service for the Territory, we again say that it is only a beginning and that the service contemplated ought to be at least four times as extensive.

And that is not all. In the very near future air-mail service between the main body of the United States and Alaska should be inaugurated. In fact, it should have been started long ago. That service can be readily furnished over the route which lies to the east of the mountains—a course now commonly flown by commercial air pilots traveling between Alaska and the United States—or else follow substantially the steamship route northward from the cities on Puget Sound and along what is known as the inland passage to Ketchikan, Wrangell, Petersburg, and Juneau, Alaska, a total distance of about 1,019 miles. It is obvious that if the second route just mentioned is adopted most of the journey will lie over the protected inland waters just inside of the islands which fringe the coast of British Columbia and southeastern Alaska. To fly this route regularly navigational aids are not only desirable but absolutely necessary. With such aids, however, there is no reason why the route cannot be flown daily. The alternate route, which lies to the east of the chain of mountains fringing and paralleling the coast line of British Columbia and Alaska, follows a series of valleys extending northerly and southerly, where the precipitation is very light and fogs are infrequent, and accordingly air navigation aids are not of such pressing importance.

Lately not only has the domestic air-mail service in the United States been expanded so that, as I am informed, twice as much mail is now being carried by air as was carried in 1933, but the foreign air-mail service has also been greatly enlarged. We all know that up to the present moment both domestic and foreign mail service have been furnished at the cost of what amounts to a subsidy from the Treasury of the United States. It is not necessary to tell the Members of the House how amply that subsidy is warranted and justified by the results obtained, commercially and otherwise. The provision of air-mail service to South America is one of the most businesslike and statesmanlike things that has been accomplished in this present generation. And the service to the Orient recently started easily belongs in the same category. We are now preparing to fly the Atlantic with the air mail, and practically every Member of Congress has agreed that it should be done at the earliest convenient date.

All of these services that I have just mentioned are in line with progressive thought and action, tend to promote commerce, and within reasonable limits to facilitate also the development of international good feeling. Practically the same sound reasons which justify the provision of air-mail service to South America and to the Orient and to Europe justify as largely the establishment of an air-mail service between the United States and Alaska and within the Territory. Only two countries of South America purchase more goods from the United States than does Alaska, namely, Argentina and Brazil, and in each case the excess of exports to those countries from the United States is not greatly more than the exports from the United States to Alaska. The volume of exports from the United States to Alaska is greater than that to Colombia, or to Venezuela, or any other two countries of South America.

The setting up of air-mail service between the United States and the Orient has been warmly and properly acclaimed, and yet we find that in the year 1936 the United States exports to China amounted to $48,819,000, while during the same year the exports from the United States to Alaska amounted to $39,325,000. Surely, if we can warrant air mail to the Orient upon any basis of volume of exports, then upon a similar basis the establishment of air-mail service to Alaska is not only justified but demanded.

Mr. Chairman, not only do I favor the passage of the pending bill but I wish it were possible to amend it so as to provide an additional 2,000 miles of air-mail service in order to take care of the just requirements of Alaska.

What I am now urging is not based upon any more or less selfish concern for the people of the Territory, whom I have the honor to represent here, but upon at least equal concern for the welfare of the many millions of people who reside in the main body of the United States, and for whom the prompt and adequate development of the resources of Alaska offer an opportunity not to be found elsewhere in the world.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HILDEBRANDT].

ACCIDENT STATISTICS

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Chairman, from January 1, 1927, when the record begins, to February 10, 1937, the United States commercial air lines have suffered a total of 846 accidents on scheduled domestic operations. Of these, however, 674 have resulted in damage to ships, but serious injury to no one. Only 107 have resulted in death to someone in the plane, and of these, 49 occurred on nonpassenger flights—mail flights for the most part—though not entirely—that were considered too dangerous for passengers. The total death toll is 325, of which 131 were members of crews. Hence, on a strictly passenger basis, there have been 58 fatal crashes, killing 194 people in about 10 years, which is between 5 and 6 crashes per year and slightly more than 3 deaths per crash.

Since the 1927 figures are incomplete, and since in any case no pay passengers were killed in that year, it is advisable to confine further analysis to the 9 full years, 1928 through 1936. In this event the basic figures become 55 wrecks, involving 181 passenger deaths. During that period the airlines carried 4,250,000 passengers and flew 362,000,000 miles; and from 1930–36—the figures for 1928–29 being unavailable—rolled up a total of 1,428,250,000 passenger-miles. Thus, of the total passengers carried, 0.004 percent were killed. Exactly 1 passenger was killed for 2,000,000 miles of flight. And the 1930–36 mortality was 1 passenger for every 9,350,000 passenger-miles.

These basic figures are set forth visually in the three charts on page 75. There two opposite forces may be observed in action. On the one hand, fatal accidents, after reaching a peak of 18 in 1929, declined to 8 in 1934, and have remained at that level for the last 3 years. On the other hand, passenger fatalities have shown an explosive rise. This is because more passengers are carried per airplane flight, and therefore each major accident kills more people; with the result that, while equaling their low record for fatal accidents in 1936, the airlines made a new high record for deaths, with a total of 61, of which 44 were passengers. Since this was about three times the number killed in 1929, the fatality rate suffered. In 1930 the airlines flew 3,500,000 passenger-miles per passenger fatality, and in 1933, 21,700,000—all-time high. But in 1936 they flew only 9,900,000, barely more than the 1930–36 average.

A comparison of air travel with railroad travel must be unfavorable to the air. The railroads reached their accident peak in 1907, when with wooden cars and fast, competitive schedules they killed 647 passengers while rolling up a total of 27,700,000,000 passenger-miles. This was at the rate of 42,800,000 passenger-miles per passenger fatality, or about twice as good as the best record in the history of the air. Thereafter the railroads improved spectacularly, so that in the year ending June 30, 1935, they killed only 18 passengers, the rate being 1,027,000,000 passenger-miles per passenger fatality. That figure was the result of nearly a century of technological advance and is standard for all transportation—a mark at which to shoot. The air operators shoot at it on the theory that what technology has achieved on the ground it can also achieve in the air.

Though the statistics are somewhat ambiguous and the contrast somewhat unfair, a comparison of commercial air travel with private automobile travel shows the airplane in a better light. In 1934 automobile travel resulted in 19,500 occupant deaths while rolling up an estimated total of 384,000,000,000 occupant-miles, which was at the rate of 19,700,000 occupant-miles per occupant fatality. In the same year the air-line figure was 11,000,000 passenger-miles per passenger fatality, but for the previous year it had been 21,700,000. In 1936 the automobile figure improved while the airplane figure fell off. On the whole, then, it may be said that commercial aviation in its best years is a safer means of travel than the private automobile in its worst years. The bus is safer than either.

Thus, on the record of the last 4 years, the period of strictly modern flight, you could have traveled statistically 16,000,000 miles on air lines without getting killed—which is about as far as you were apt to travel in your automobile before encountering the same fate. Unfortunately there is no reliable means of comparing this record with that of the European lines, since many of the European figures have been suppressed. It is generally conceded, however, that United States commercial aviation surpasses that of Europe in safety, speed, night flying, and length of hops. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RIGNEY] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. RIGNEY. Mr. Chairman, as a new Member of the Congress and a new member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I wish to make a few observations at this time.

I have been rather diligent in attending the meetings of the subcommittees on aviation and air-mail service and also diligent in attending all meetings of the Post Office Committee, and I may say in defense of our committee that I think there is not a committee of the Congress that is more deliberative or considerate or careful about its work than the committee which is under the charge of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

In connection with all of the air-mail bills which will be coming before you, one of which is now being considered by the committee, we have called in officials of the Post Office Department and we have heard statements from the pilots who fly the mails, statements from the carriers who operate the mails, and also statements from members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, under whose jurisdiction comes the awarding of contracts to the carriers. In all of our consideration we have been very deliberate and have asked these men pertinent questions and received first-hand information. From all of this information we have formulated a policy which I think is as good as could be evolved.

With the splendid knowledge of post offices and postal operations in all the departments which our chairman has, we more or less follow his lead, and I know we are accomplishing some very good things for the country.

The chairman of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], and the other members of the committee are very much concerned in seeing that we have efficiency and that we give the country a postal service that is worth while, a service that is fast, and a service of the kind that the people of the country want and demand, and to which they are entitled.

I think our committee is also a very forward-looking committee in that we visualize the future of the Postal Service, and particularly at this time the future of Air Mail Service. Only this morning the members of our committee made a trip to the University of Maryland Airport, where we viewed a demonstration of air-mail pick-up, where mail is picked up from the ground by a device which will tend to bring air-mail service to every town of any considerable size. It is not possible for every city in the country to have an airport, and, therefore, the mail in small cities will be picked up from the ground as the plane flies past. In this way the city does not have to have an airport, because the mail can be taken from the top of a building or factory or any place of that nature. Therefore, I think, all in all, we should give this sort of legislation our fair and honest consideration, because it is going to mean a great deal to the efficiency of the air service of this country.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIGNEY. Yes.

Mr. DIMOND. I am very much interested in the device that the gentleman referred to a moment ago which enables the plane in flight to pick up mail. Is that device in use anywhere in the country at the present time?

Mr. RIGNEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] can tell the gentleman more about that, but I think it is not in practical use now, but it is in the offing. It is a coming thing, and we saw the pilot pick up 85 pounds, I think it was, three times. They have a device with two steel standards and a rope and a device with a hook, and as the pilot comes down he swoops over the ground and picks up the mail and then draws it into the plane. They also have a way of delivering mail by a reverse process. I think this will be a very practical thing for the small cities of our country.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIGNEY. Yes.

Mr. BATES. Is there any provision in the pending bill for the extension of existing air routes in connection with European mail service?

Mr. RIGNEY. I think not.

Mr. BATES. I have understood there is to be an extension of the air-mail routes to Europe in the very near future.

Mr. RIGNEY. I think that is included in another bill.

Mr. BATES. The pending bill has nothing to do with that matter.

Mr. RIGNEY. No.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for these 5 minutes, first, to express my interest and appreciation of the air-mail service as rendered by our pilots in this country. In my travels I make it a point to use the airplane as much as possible, and I have been very much concerned the last few months with reference to the crashes and accidents that have occurred. I wish to ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HILDEBRANDT] two or three questions of a nontechnical nature in connection with the information that he gave us a few minutes ago. Through correspondence with Mr. Behncke, whose testimony I find here in the record, I gather the impression that a great many of these crashes are caused by the failure on the part of the Department of Commerce to meet the requirements which are pointed out in advance of the accidents, specifically pointed out by the pilots who are flying certain routes. Did the committee look into that phase of the accident problem at all?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Yes; we looked into that; and there is a movement on foot to give more service in the way of radio beams and beacons, and so forth—safeguard appliances.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is, for the Department of Commerce to give better service?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In these emergency places which have been pointed out by the pilots?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. They are getting more stringent with respect to safety laws.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the gentleman prepared to answer this? Did the committee unearth any evidence to the effect that some of these crashes have been caused by negligence on the part of the Department of Commerce in not carrying out the suggestions previously made by the pilots?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. We did not unearth any such evidence.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Was that question brought into it at all by the committee?

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. We did not find anything that would prove negligence. That there was lack of equipment is true.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to say so, I think he will find, if he goes into the matter sufficiently, that there is negligence upon the part of Congress in not appropriating sufficient money to furnish safety aids over the country, and I believe there is some negligence on the part of the Department of Commerce in not asking Congress for enough money; but Congress ought to know itself the needs of our airways.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the point I wanted to bring out.

Mr. KENNEY. We ought to appropriate sufficient money to provide safety aids to prevent these accidents.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. With regard to the gentleman's inquiry concerning the Department of Commerce and aviation accidents, let me say that the Department—perhaps like every other agency of the Government in administering a law restricted by appropriations which are sometimes inadequate, hedged in by authority given to it by Congress, and, in this particular industry which is developing by leaps and bounds, with equipment up to date today and obsolete 3 months from now—has not always been as rigorous as it might have been in the matter of safety, but there have been no gross errors. They have profited by every accident, and the industry is developing to a point where it is now the safest of any like industry in the world.

As to evolution and experimentation, let me say that some few years ago they found that the accumulation of ice pulled these ships down. The gentleman from Michigan spoke of Mr. Behncke, who is the head of the pilots' association. He was going south out of Chicago one night when he met with an accident due to ice. He could not see through the snowstorm. Finally he located a clump of trees and decided to nest his ship there in order to save the mail load, the ship, and those aboard. He landed under these severe difficulties, and only by an accident caused by his slipping on the ice as he was getting down was he injured.

The mail load was saved, the ship was not damaged to any great extent, and the copilot was not injured.

In trying to overcome the accumulation of ice a de-icer was invented and applied to ships. It consisted of a sort of rubber covering placed over the front end of the wing. But it has since been discovered that while the de-icer eliminated the accumulation of added weight, it has resulted in the disintegration of the wing surface. Only recently a pilot wobbled into an airport under the most severe difficulties because of large patches of his wing surface being rendered useless by disintegration, caused by the de-icer, and further improvements have had to be made to correct this drawback. One improvement leads to another; development is rapidly taking place, and is only limited by the ideas of the administrator and the authority given to him by the legislators.

The crying need of aviation right now, in my judgment, is an appropriation of about $5,000,000 additional to modernize the radio-beam equipment and the range-finding devices all over the United States. If we had the right kind of a radio system, a modern, up-to-date antenna system, there would be hardly any fault to find.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the gentleman feel we should be liberal enough with reference to this $5,000,000 appropriation to keep in mind that within 10 or 15 or 24 months the whole thing will become obsolete again to a great extent, and in a new industry that is growing as this is, so essential to peace and so essential as a defensive weapon, we should go right ahead with the program?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct. The $5,000,000 I have in mind is $5,000,000 in excess of that already appropriated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE].

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Committee to the appropriations that have been made by the Congress since the inception of the policy of air-mail service in the Post Office Department. Of course, in the beginning of this great service we were experimenting in this country, and have been experimenting more or less all the way through. In 1926 the first appropriation made by this body was for $500,000. In 1927 it was $2,000,000; in 1928, $4,500,000; in 1929, $12,430,000; in 1930, $15,000,000; in 1931, $18,000,000; in 1932, $20,000,000. This was the peak of the appropriations that have been made by the Congress in any one year. In 1933, at the period of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts, the appropriations for that year had been $19,460,000. In 1934 it was $15,000,000—four and a half millions less. In 1935 it was $12,000,000—approximately $3,000,000 less than the previous year. In 1936, $12,000,000; in 1937, $12,984,000.

I want to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that I can think of no agency of this Government that has progressed more successfully and more rapidly than has the Air Mail Service. I want to compliment our splendid chairman and the other members of that committee for the diligent and painstaking work they have done, and also many Members of this House, who are not members of the committee, for their suggestions, from time to time, which have been very helpful to us.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Could the gentleman give us the amount of revenue that has gone to the Department through the air-mail postage earnings?

Mr. ROMJUE. I do not have those figures before me at the present moment but can furnish them to you soon.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. I think, in answer to the gentleman from Michigan, the revenue for air mail for the last fiscal year would total almost $9,000,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, it is moving up toward the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. HAINES. Yes; and we are carrying about twice the amount of mail today that we carried in 1933.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where the appropriations have dropped, that means there was less mileage added in that particular year. Is that true?

Mr. ROMJUE. No. As a matter of fact, we have extended somewhat. We have carried more and an increasing volume of mail and traveled more miles in the Air Mail Service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I mean is, if you have an appropriation of $20,000,000 and then in another year only $9,000,000, it means there was less mileage in the $9,000,000 period than in the $20,000,000 period?

Mr. ROMJUE. Not necessarily, because earlier we were paying a great deal more per mile for carriage than we are at the present time. We are now getting more service and better service than ever before and for less money than most of the time before.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. May I ask, in connection with this appropriation, does the Post Office Department exercise any jurisdiction over the airplane companies that carry the mails, as to the equipment they shall use, where they shall land, the requirements for fields, services, and so forth?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. FLANNERY. Does the Post Office Department exercise jurisdiction over them?

Mr. ROMJUE. They investigate those things before they award a contract. Of course, the Department of Commerce has a broader field in the air flight than the Post Office Department, but the Post Office Department does investigate and inquire into the equipment that is proposed by persons carrying the mail before awarding the contract to carry the mail, and they inquire into the equipment for safety and fitness before contracting. It is amazing when we think of the progress that has been made in the airplane mail service. Not only have rapid and successful developments taken place but the experience that our Government has gained from this service will be invaluable in the future. The Air Mail Service has not only been of great assistance in mail delivery, but the Government has received beneficial information which it will and is appropriating to its own use and to the use of the public interest in connection with the general development of airplane flying.

It will not be long until there will be, in my opinion, contract air-mail service in our Territorial possession of Alaska. Mail delivery there has been for a long time done and is yet mostly done by the use of dog teams. Star-route service is still carried on that way, with occasionally the carrier of the mail using, at his own suggestion, airplanes. The dog mail-carriage team will, in my opinion, before a great while be superseded almost entirely by contract air-mail delivery, and I want to compliment the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] for his active and loyal interest in behalf of the people of Alaska who he is so ably representing. He certainly is faithful to their interest and I know of no man who is more familiar with the vast wealth of the land of the great Alaskan country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY].

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is important, not only because it steps up the tempo and quickens the pace of air transportation from a mail point of view but because of its relation to the larger field of air transportation. It once more brings before the country the titanic struggle that is going on for world supremacy in the air. The great trade routes of the air are being fought for as they have never been fought for before. Every great trade country of the world is attempting to get dominance in the air. The part which this committee has played, the inspiration it has given to the Department, and its attempt to increase the tempo of communication is another indication of our interest. They have made mistakes, but those mistakes have been the arch upon which they have built successfully. It is said that within a few years, probably within a few months, we will be able to print papers in America and have them read in England the same day.

Unless we keep up, unless we, as the chairman says, eliminate obsolescent and old machines, quicken the tempo of mechanical devices, we are going to revert to a condition in air mail that would be comparable to abandoning modern ocean liners for the clipper ships of 100 years ago.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I have not been on the floor during all of the discussion on this bill. I have heard the distinguished chairman of this committee and the whole committee complimented. This is perfectly in order and well deserved, but I think somebody ought to compliment Mr. Stephen A. Cisler, of the staff of Mr. Branch, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, who is Superintendent of Air Mail Service. Mr. Cisler is remarkably well informed on the subject of air mail. He is performing a distinguished service to the Nation, and I am sure that every Member of the House who knows Mr. Cisler will concur in these remarks.

Mr. SHANLEY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANLEY. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman is very much interested in aviation. I think this Congress owes him a debt of gratitude and thanks for having introduced the bill establishing National Aviation Day, which we recently celebrated in the city of Washington and over the country. I know the gentleman has been very active in all matters pertaining to aviation, including the Air Mail Service. I am sure the gentleman has given much thought to the matter of providing the safety aids that are now lacking and furnishing better weather reports. The distinguished chairman of the Post Office Committee referred to the dangers and accidents resulting from icing up of machines as they travel over the country in bad weather, and I wonder if the gentleman does not agree with me that more attention should be given the proposition of furnishing better weather reports, so that pilots might be forewarned to a greater extent of local weather conditions, which often are responsible for icing upon planes.

Mr. SHANLEY. I feel as the gentleman does that we should furnish full and adequate weather reports for our pilots and also fill up the gaps over our airways.

The CHAIRMAN. All time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to use further time?

Mr. CARLSON. I have no requests for time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MEAD. I have no request for time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of subsection (f) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to revise air-mail laws, and to establish a commission to make a report to the Congress recommending an aviation policy", approved June 12, 1934, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. II, title 39, sec. 469a (f)), is amended to read as follows:

"(f) The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air-mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 35,000 miles, and shall not pay for air-mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate of 52,000,000 airplane-miles."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6628) to permit the further extension of the Air Mail Service, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill just passed may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RECLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES OF WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS, AND LABORERS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I call up the bill (H. R. 6383) to reclassify the salaries of watchmen, messengers, and laborers in the Postal Service, and to prescribe the time credits for service as substitute watchmen, messengers, and laborers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who may speak on this bill may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar and, under the rules, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6383) to reclassify the salaries of watchmen, messengers, and laborers in the Postal Service, and to prescribe the time credits for service as substitute watchmen, messengers, and laborers, and for other purposes, with Mr. GREEVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the announcement that my colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] will have control of the time on the minority side.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE].

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a few minutes to explain this bill. First, I want the Members to get in their minds just what duties these laborers and watchmen have to perform, so I shall read from the present law and regulations of the Post Office Department a brief statement:

Laborers shall not be assigned to clerical duties. The work to which laborers shall be assigned consists of loading and unloading motor trucks, trucking mail in the office, setting up and taking down bag racks, dumping mail, making simple distribution of parcels by numbers where no scheme knowledge or reading of addresses is involved, operating canceling machines, cleaning and oiling canceling machines, conveyors, etc., carrying mail from canceling machines to distribution cases and from letter drops to facing tables, handling empty pouches and sacks, and such other similar work as the postmaster may direct.

I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the report filed on this bill was not amended after the bill was amended by the full committee. The report on the bill which you have, therefore, shows an expenditure of at least twice as much money as this bill carries.

This class of laborer has not had an increase in salary for 12 years. In 1926 they received a small increase, and the postal clerks, with the increase they received at that time, are still above what the bill would give these laborers now.

The bill was originally drawn to establish four classes. Under the present law these laborers and watchmen are classified in two classes, and they apply to the first- and second-class post offices throughout the country. As we all know, the first and second classes of post offices are located in the territory where rents are the highest. The salaries received, under the present law, were $1,500 and $1,600 for those two grades. The present bill begins with the lower grade of $1,500 for first grade and adds $100 for the second grade and another $100 for the third grade, making the salaries $1,500, $1,600, and $1,700.

Mr. CARLSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. In view of the fact the report is not brought up to date so far as the total cost of this bill is concerned, can the distinguished gentleman give us figures as to what it will cost?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; in the first place, the highest grade of these laborers and watchmen, even if this bill is enacted into law, is the minimum that is now paid to the clerk on the inside of the post office. Somebody has to do this work. These men, of course, frequently are not so well educated, perhaps, as the clerks in the post office, yet they do a vast amount of hard labor. They are working people, and many of them have perhaps larger families than many clerks. At least, they have families to support, and one can see from the duties them perform that they have plenty of hard work to do, and they have been doing it faithfully and well, often even when the public does not know they are working at all.

Under the bill as originally drawn we had it classified in four classes, which carried gradings calling for salaries of $1,500, $1,600, $1,700, and $1,800. The full committee took off the higher class of $1,800 and left three classes. They would have received under the bill as originally drawn an advance of $200, but under the bill as amended, and which we are considering here today, there is only an increase of $100, which, of course, is half of the amount that the original bill carried. Therefore this will cost just one-half what the original bill would have cost, or, to be exact, $521,500, or, in round numbers, one-half million.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Can the gentleman tell us how many persons would be affected by this increase?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; there are 5,000 laborers and watchmen in the first- and second-class post offices throughout the United States. Then there are Government officials working out of the Post Office Department located at Dayton, Ohio, who exercise supervision over the printing that is done by the Dayton, Ohio, office. We keep two men there all the time and we feel that these two men are entitled to an increase. In addition to the 5,002 there are 723 of these laborers, watchmen, and messengers who are connected with the Railway Mail Service throughout the country.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. I wonder if the gentleman could clarify one thing for me: It is stated herein "watchmen, messengers, and laborers." Does that mean the special-delivery men who are now engaged in delivering special-delivery messages?

Mr. ROMJUE. No; it is not my understanding they are included. They are paid on the fee basis and are not the messengers referred to in this bill.

Mr. SCHULTE. I have received quite a few letters from my district asking for an increase for messengers because of the fact they are underpaid at the present time.

Mr. ROMJUE. This does not involve that class of employee.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Those messengers are not paid a salary. They are paid a fee?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; they are paid a fee.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Did I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say there were two employees connected with the Dayton office involved in this bill?

Mr. ROMJUE. That was the testimony before the committee.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the United States office at Dayton, Ohio, comes under the Bureau of Printing and Engraving?

Mr. ROMJUE. No. The printing of envelopes by the Dayton office is done by contract with the Government. They have their own machinery and equipment. The Government enters into a contract with them. They are a private concern and have no connection with the Government. I am familiar with this matter because I tried to get the contract canceled several years ago. As I said before, the Government enters into a private contract and keeps these two men there from the Government office to maintain a check on how many envelopes are printed. They print envelopes by contract with the Government. This practice, in my opinion, should be abolished, but as long as it is a policy of the Government we have to keep these men there to protect the Government's interest.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. With reference to the dies for the printing of the stamped envelopes and the embossed stamps, are they not the property of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving? Are they not designed the same as our postage stamps?

Mr. ROMJUE. Of course, the company is required by the Government to meet certain standards. It has been some few years back since we went into that question, but my recollection is that they furnished all the equipment. At any rate, they have to meet the requirements of the Government. They have to have a uniform standard.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I know that. There are only two Federal employees now with that private contractor who will be affected by this bill?

Mr. ROMJUE. That is at the Dayton office.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. At the Dayton office?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAINES. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] these two employees were put in the plant by the Post Office Department to inspect and supervise this work. They are under the classified civil service.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. They are put in the plant of the private contractor?

Mr. HAINES. As inspectors to look after the interests of the Post Office Department.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the salary of the first-, second-, third-, and fourth-grade employees?

Mr. ROMJUE. The first, second, third, and fourth?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. It is stated on page 2 of the bill that the new salaries are as follows: First grade, $1,500; second grade, $1,600; third grade, $1,700; and fourth grade, $1,800.

Mr. ROMJUE. Under the present law we have just two grades—the first and second. The first grade receives $1,500 and the second grade $1,600. By this bill then we add another grade, with a salary of $1,700.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What do they receive in addition to the cash salary in the form of sick benefits, pensions, and so forth, if anything at all?

Mr. ROMJUE. I am not sure but am of the opinion the regular civil-service provisions apply.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HAINES. They have the same benefits any other civil-service employee has, I may say. These men receive the top salary after they have served 2 years. They go to the third grade. You will find we have struck out the fourth grade.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he would answer categorically the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] if the gentleman has the figure. I would like to know the total amount of the cost.

Mr. ROMJUE. It is half of what the report on the original bill stated, which would be $521,500.

Mr. HOBBS. That is the figure this bill will cost?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; $521,500.

Mr. HOBBS. In other words, instead of something over a million dollars, it will be a little over half a million for the whole United States?

Mr. ROMJUE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. In connection with the estimate of cost, does the gentleman know whether the Bureau of the Budget will approve this bill at the present time in view of this reduction in cost?

Mr. ROMJUE. I cannot say, as we did not take it up with the Bureau.

Mr. COSTELLO. I know the original report was unfavorable from the Bureau in view of the high cost of the bill.

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes. I may say the original bill was not approved; but this bill, as stated, only costs one-half as much.

Mr. COSTELLO. Since the committee has eliminated the fourth grade, am I correct in understanding this would in no way interfere with the salaries other employees in the Post Office Department are receiving?

Mr. ROMJUE. No. The maximum salary under this bill will be the minimum salary paid to clerks.

Mr. COSTELLO. This would in no way tend to cause an increase in salaries in the other grades?

Mr. ROMJUE. There should be no reason for anybody to feel his salary should be increased on account of the passage of this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. That it should be increased in any other department?

Mr. ROMJUE. No. The people who this proposed legislation is intended to be of assistance to belong to that class of hard-working people who have not been recognized in keeping with other people concerning whom legislation has been enacted for. Most of the men in this class of work are as sturdy in character and morals as any class of people dealing with the Mail Service. Many of them, it is true, have not had very great opportunities for education. I will admit they do not carry university and college degrees; but they, as well as those who have had opportunity for better education, will avail well as to a high class of intellect and character. Many of them have large families and, as I said before, live in areas where rents are the highest. They should have been better paid years ago, because they have rendered as a class especially good and faithful service.

After long years of service in the class of work in which they have been engaged, they have become experts in their lines and are able to perform and have performed valuable service. Were they to retire from the class of work in which they are engaged, many of them for several years, and especially if they continue in this line of service much longer, they would not be suitable to enter other service. I do not hesitate to say that this is a meritorious piece of legislation and should have been enacted some time ago, and I hope this Congress will approve and pass it.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the House the fact that this is, I think, one of the few bills which will be brought in this session increasing salaries. I am very happy to say I am heartily in favor of this measure. We are reaching a group of citizens, a group of workers in the Government service, who are in the lower salary brackets. They had a small increase in salary, as the distinguished gentleman from Missouri told you, in 1926. It seems to me it is perfectly fitting and proper at this time that we should bring in this measure. It affects 5,000 laborers under the First Assistant Postmaster General and approximately 300 under the Second Assistant Postmaster General. This group has been laboring for many years, and often doing the work of clerks who have received a much higher salary and who have also received increases in salary on at least one or two previous occasions. Therefore it is a pleasure to support this measure, and I trust the House will pass it.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Does this bill affect special-delivery messengers who deliver letters?

Mr. CARLSON. No; it does not.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. It has no reference to them?

Mr. CARLSON. It has not. They are paid on a fee basis.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. Chairman, there are two important questions involved in this legislation: One is the particular question which concerns the laborers in the Postal Service who will be affected favorably by the passage of the act. The other question is the more general question that concerns each Member of the House and to a degree concerns the country. When I say "degree", I mean in some cases to a very large degree and in others to a more moderate degree. This question is the question of Government financing. It involves the question of a balanced Budget, and brings to mind the balance in revenues and expenses of the Postal Service.

If we were primarily motivated by a desire above everything else to balance the Budget, regardless of cost or the justice of the proposal before us, this bill, of course, would receive a negative vote. If, on the other hand, we were desirous of remedying the unjust situations we find in the Government service, if we thought at this time when we are asking private enterprises to raise wages and shorten hours it would be beneficial if we set an example, then, of course, we would vote for this legislation.

If again we thought only of the postal system and the benefits to accrue from a businesslike administration of that greatest and most efficient industry in the world, we would inquire whether or not this would unbalance the Budget. We would want to know if the passage of this act would require appropriations in excess of revenues.

In the consideration of this measure, both on the part of the subcommittee headed by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] and the whole committee, all of these vital and important questions received attention. In both instances the bill was reported unanimously, there being no partisanship. We are the board of directors of the greatest business enterprise in which our country is concerned. In the discharge of our obligation as members of that board politics finds no place and no friends within the portals of our committee room.

When we consider the financial budget of the Postal Service we find that this year the Post Office Department will break its record in the matter of revenues, which will reach an all-time high in excess of $700,000,000, more than balancing its net budget and leaving a fairly substantial surplus.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. In other words, eliminating the nonpostal items, the Postal Service is now operating within its revenues?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct. As he says, eliminating the subsidies and the activities of the Department that are not true postal activities, the Service is paying its way, and will pay its way, even though this measure raising the wages of laborers in the Service is passed.

Now, with regard to the question of balancing the Federal Budget, taking into consideration all of the activities of Government, let me say there is a question even more important than that. There is a question of paramount importance that must be considered before we consider the question of balancing the Federal Budget. The delicacy of our modern economic state is such that if we violate economic law the wrath of a chaotic economic state will be upon us. We will kill our prosperity, just as the man who violates a natural law kills himself. For example, if profits and production rise rapidly and wages and consuming power drop measurably, stagnation sets in. Surpluses destroy our development, prosperity gives way to poverty, and depression, with all of its curses, is upon us. So a general balance, involving wages, prices, productivity, unemployment, and all the other questions must be considered when we are talking about the efficacy of a balanced budget.

The Federal Government is well on the way, with economic soundness and with a logic that defies the critic, to a balanced Budget. Since the turn of the century we have enjoyed several prosperous eras, abnormal times of prosperity, and in analyzing these periods of prosperity we find that only when, by the influence of government, the consuming powers of our people come into balance with the production of our modern machines are we able to enjoy a semblance of prosperity.

During the World War we enjoyed an era of prosperity. Prior to that time our machines were able to produce more than the consumers of America consumed and more than the international markets absorbed. But when America secured the abnormal orders of nations at war, and when America itself plunged into the war and spent a vast sum of money far in excess of the money we are spending now to win this war against a depression, America enjoyed a wartime prosperity that it had never enjoyed before. We made more millionaries, built more fine homes, made more people well to do than at any other time in the history of the country. Then came the post-war depression. Orders were no longer forthcoming from other nations, a period of demobilization placed a great many men, including ex-service men, in the ranks of the unemployed, and America's prosperity went into a tailspin until a policy was adopted that enabled America to finance, through private loans and in some cases through public loans, the rebuilding of devastated area abroad and the inauguration of public-works programs in Central and South America, as well as in other sections of the world. As a result of our lending to the foreign countries, in one manner or another, a sum in excess of $10,000,000,000, some of which has not been repaid, America went into another period of prosperity; but in 1929, when we warned the nations of the world they would have to pay back not only the war loans but the loans made after hostilities had ceased, and they told us they could not pay in gold but would be glad to pay us in kind, we told them we could not accept payments under those conditions, and then America went into another tailspin and poverty again succeeded prosperity.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I have enjoyed the gentleman's very interesting talk and I am not disposed to quarrel with him. I would like to ask the gentleman, however, if he thinks it would be possible for this country to tax itself back to prosperity. In other words, this bill would require, according to the Postmaster General's report, several hundred thousand dollars more per year, and, as I understand it, the Postmaster General opposes the passage of the bill.

May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that this Government will either have to collect more money or spend less money, or both, or our Budget will forever remain unbalanced, and the gentleman does not contend here that by more taxes and higher salaries, as a general policy, we can pull ourselves back into what we may be pleased to term "prosperity", does he? The gentleman does not contend that?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very pleased to answer the gentleman just as soon as he concludes asking me questions.

Mr. SOUTH. We are talking more or less generally, and I am not finding fault with the gentleman, but I would like to ask this question: Do these workmen now receive less money than the average untrained and unskilled workmen doing the same or a similar character of labor?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am indebted to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH] for bringing up one very important matter contained in his list of questions. While I want to answer them all, I want to answer with particular emphasis a statement he made that brings out a subject which is discussed in the public forums, commented on editorially, and referred to by statesmen all over the United States. That is the question whether we can spend ourselves into prosperity. But before I answer that, let me get rid of the few minor questions by telling the gentleman that the full committee met in the main the Department's objection by striking out "fourth grade" and eliminating that increase which would pay these laborers $1,800 a year. We limited them to the third grade, which gives them a raise of but $100 a year, or from $1,600 to $1,700. The Department objected to laborers getting more money in their top grade than clerks or carriers received in their bottom grade, and the full committee met that objection of the Department by striking out the $1,800 grade. These men are skilled postal workers. They operate canceling machines, distribute parcels, collect and deliver the mails around the post office, help the clerks and the carriers, yet their per-hour wage is less by 25 percent, and in some instances 50 percent, than the wage of skilled laborers in the building trades; and the same is true, perhaps, in the steel industry and in one or two other industries. We looked into that.

This bill will not interfere with the balancing of revenues of the Postal Service because, as I said, our revenues will exceed our net postal expenditures this year and next. In addition to that, these laborers were only given a $150 annual increase when all of the other employees were given $300 some few years ago. If they got their proper differential, their top salary today would be $1,750, but for 12 years they have been working for $150 annually less than that. In view of all these things, including the postal deficit, comparative wage scales, and the skilled work performed by these men, together with the fact that after 10 or 20 or 30 years they cannot sell their services to any other industry in the world because they are skilled at this particular type of work and no other, we feel it is only just that they should be treated as we have treated them.

Now for the question, Can we spend ourselves into prosperity? That is what we did, and that is what you did; that is what the President of the United States did, and that is what this so-called New Deal administration did, and let me tell you how. As I said a few moments ago, it is essentially necessary for a well-balanced, economical state. You cannot have an excess productivity and impoverished consuming power and live. We enjoyed prosperity when we dumped billions and billions into the furnace of war for destructive purposes. We never enjoyed a greater degree of prosperity.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Not now. Then, after that came the post-war depression. America began to lend money to the nations of the world, and in rebuilding devastated areas, in conducting public-works programs in South America and in European countries, American money spent abroad brought prosperity to American workers, and the unheard-of halcyon days of 1927, 1928, and 1929 came to bless us. Again we spent over $12,000,000,000 in foreign countries and enjoyed great prosperity for the second time since the turn of the century. Then came the period of the depression—the crash of the stock markets; the impoverishment of our consuming power, while a machine productivity was steadily rising; the false, futile, deadly philosophy of the Budget balancer, the man who thought only of taxes and was bent on cutting Federal expenditures to the bone. When President Hoover and his advisers launched the so-called economy law, cutting Federal salaries, reducing expenses of all the departments of the Government, that effort on the part of the Government only accentuated the spiral of deflation. If you cut a billion from the buying power we so sorely need, we would only be deeper in distress and poverty. Continuing with that futile program, eventually America would lie flat on her back, penniless and broke, and there would be nothing in the land but bankruptcy. [Applause.]

Now, let me prove to you that there is something in my philosophy, in the philosophy of the average economist, the one who knows that in distribution and in consumption there must be balance. If there is too much production, if there is an incipient distribution, or if there is too little consumption, we will suffer. That is always the case with modern machinery increasing the efficiency of manpower day after day. It is always the case and always will be unless some agency maintains the balance, and the agency to keep the balance is the governmental agency which sees to it that buying power squares with the productivity of the Nation.

When President Roosevelt came into office, to my disappointment he recommended a continuance of the economy program, advocated intensifying the economy cut. But after a year's experimentation he rose up to the heights and said, "We tried it, and a balanced Budget in an inadequate and impoverished consuming power only accentuates the depression, and now I advocate increasing Federal appropriations and spending more money than we were doing", and, my friends, look at where we are today.

So three times since the turn of the century, once in prosecuting the war, another time in lending money to foreign countries, and a third time in building up our own beloved America, by employing Americans in the works of peace, in achievements that improved our communities, we have enjoyed eras of prosperity. I say you cannot continue to spend your way into everlasting prosperity, but when your consuming power is impoverished there is only one agency, and that is the governmental agency, that can use the taxing power and the power to appropriate, to give us a balance that will eventually restore prosperity.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. When we speak of prosperity, that is more or less of a relative term. Prosperity is dependent upon the speed or velocity with which different persons purchase the goods or services of others?

Mr. MEAD. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. The whole purpose in emergency spending is to try to bring back a balanced velocity which is necessary in order to have a returned prosperity. Does the gentleman agree with that, in a general way?

Mr. MEAD. That is essentially correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman in his closing remarks stated a situation that appeals to me. When the forces of deflation visit us is the time we have to use all the powers we can to bring about velocity, and when normalcy returns is the time when the Government may justifiably consider recoupment of expenses.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is essentially correct.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. On this question of taxes I would like to have the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from New York, whose leadership I choose to follow. I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion on the question of excessive taxation on the backs of American people as compared with the taxation on the backs of other nationals.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, from a review of the record, the taxes per capita in the United States are very much lower than the taxes per capita in England and France or any other industrial nation of the Old World. I will say to the gentleman that the per-capita indebtedness of our country is only one-half what it is in England and only one-third what it is in France. While we are spending more than we are taking in to keep the big P. W. A. army busy building a greater America, other nations are spending more money, comparatively speaking, equipping men for military purposes. In other words, they enlist their surplus manpower into the military machine, and today they are seriously challenging the peace of the world. America sent its surplus man power into the mountains, hills, parks, cities, and communities of America, there to build for the wealth of the present generation and the wealth and health of every succeeding generation.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. In other words, we have not wasted all this money that has been appropriated by the Congress. On the other side of the ledger we have some assets that are valuable. In addition to building up the morale of our people, we have contributed to the wealth of the Nation.

Now, getting back to this question of taxation, I have a little clipping that I cut out of the paper the other day in which I note that an American citizen with one child, having an income of $5,000 annually, would pay an income tax roughly speaking of $84. A citizen of Great Britain situated similarly would pay a tax of $950, or in other words, 10 times more taxes than we pay in this country. I think we have made much ado about this excessive taxation of our people and the taxes they are compelled to pay.

Mr. MEAD. America is sound. Its money is the soundest on earth. We have no need to fear inflation, because that only comes when a nation is desperate. We own 50 percent of the gold of the world. Our annual income has risen from $38,000,000,000 in 1933 to $70,000,000,000, which is the estimate for this year. The wealth of the country has so increased that if you will compare the rise in wealth and the rise in annual income, together with the national indebtedness, this country is superior financially to any nation on earth. We have no fear of inflation or of the unsoundness of our currency.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. My distinguished colleague from New York has made a most interesting and brilliant address. However, he has called the attention of the Congress to the fact that our great difficulty and tragedy is not balancing the Budget but to find a way to balance the differences between overproduction and underconsumption, which has been responsible for our economic depression.

Does not the gentleman from New York think that as a matter of fact the solution of our economic depression must inevitably rest not in the expenditure of money, which is just symptomatic treatment, but in the passing by Congress of a minimum-wage law beyond which no human being employed at unskilled labor should ever be permitted to be exploited? If we could get a freezing of a minimum wage increasing the consuming and purchasing power of millions of our American people we would solve the problem of the depression.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is quite correct. As an added observation to the very interesting contribution that he has made, let me say that if we in this modern machine age in which we live just depended upon the essentials of life—food, clothing, and housing—America would become bankrupt, poverty would be visited on every family in America. It is the exploitation not only of leisure time and recreational facilities but of the luxuries of life that is needed in order to insure our prosperity; in other words, as the gentleman said, we have got to buoy up the consuming capacity of our people so that every man and woman in America will be a potential buyer in the American market.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Shakespeare said:

If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly.

Do I understand from the gentleman's address that he feels that adjustments had to be made, and made quickly, and that there are adjustments yet to be made in this country and that they ought to be made quickly and without delay?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I feel that way.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say in conclusion that I did not mean to talk about the economic situation as it applies to our country generally. I wanted only to talk about the bill. Now, in a word, I am going to say that the full committee has reported an amended bill reducing the grades from four to three, reducing the maximum from $1,800 to $1,700, and we hope that the Members of the House will join and help us adopt the full committee amendment, because it meets in general terms with the objections made by the Post Office Department, and it is an act of common justice to these underpaid workers.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York has missed, I think, one salient point in his excellent description, and that is this, that for many years in the Postal Service every skilled employee who was a distributor at a case was obliged to carry his own mail, operate the canceling machine, and do every conceivable form of labor, even to the dumping of the bags as described by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE]. The purpose of using these laborers was solely to save the time of the higher salaried employees rather than have it consumed in these unskilled labors. I feel that this is a very salient point that the gentleman overlooked in his discussion.

Secondly, I would like to bring to the gentleman's attention and to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether it is not a fact that in the economy measures referred to of 1932 and the Economy Act of 1933, credit is not due solely to the combined wisdom of the Congress of the United States in overriding the veto of the President on the independent offices appropriation bill that restored the salaries rather than to a changed philosophy on the part of the President?

Mr. MEAD. I think that both are deserving of credit, because while the Congress overrode the President's veto, the President in turn recommended the creation of these spending agencies such as W. P. A., P. W. A., and the C. C. C. camps, which entailed a vast expenditure of public money and which preceded the return to our present prosperous situation.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I am very much interested in the gentleman's line of reasoning. I am more concerned about the general philosophy he has outlined than I am about this particular bill. The gentleman evidently does not contend that the prosperity, so-called, which followed the World War was a period of healthy prosperity and one to be desired.

Mr. MEAD. It was prosperity; that is all one can say for it.

Mr. SOUTH. It was rather the result of our reckless lending of funds to the European countries with which to buy our goods and to other inflationary policies following the World War. It was not prosperity at all, and we are now paying for our mistakes because this money has not been repaid, and much of it will never be repaid.

Surely my friend from Pennsylvania does not mean to tell this House and does not think himself that the Englishman pays $10 taxes on the same income that an American pays $1. If he will study the situation, he will find that the English tax as compared with our income tax covers a multitude of taxation, whereas in this country we have our income tax, our State property, county, school, and road taxes, and many other taxes. Added together, they present a different picture.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to encroach on the gentleman's time, but may I not be permitted to say that this Government is approaching the time when it must get away from the philosophy that you can tax yourself into prosperity. The gentleman chooses to use the word "spend", while I choose to use the word "tax", because what the Government spends it must collect from the people. While we can continue to say to our Republican colleagues, "We have done a better job than Hoover did"—and there is no argument about that—I am convinced of the fact that this administration is going to have to stop being satisfied with hurling these challenges at the Republicans and concern itself with the problem of adopting sound business principles and recognize the fact that we must collect as much money as we spend, if we are to escape complete bankruptcy. No platitudes or smooth talking is going to prevent bankruptcy unless this is done.

We must continue spending such money as is necessary to carry on the various functions of government, including necessary relief, but we must not forget that money which we are borrowing must be paid back, and that it is time for all unnecessary expenditures to stop. This bill does not involve a great deal of money, it is true, but, as stated before, I do not subscribe to the philosophy that liberal spending and heavy taxation alone can lift us out of a depression.

Mr. MEAD. In answer to the gentleman, may I say that both the preceding administration and the present administration tried out the economy program. I believe both Republican and Democratic Members of the House as a result of their experience in both administrations will agree that if we immediately balance our Budget and lay off from the W. P. A., P. W. A., C. C. C., and other activities, some two or three million people and send them back home to make up bread lines and build up local relief expenditures, we would be making a mistake and we would be committing an economic sin. I do not believe that the Republicans or the Democrats would agree to a program of that kind. In other words, you could not get another economy bill through this House. A measure would have to be economically sound to pass this House.

Let us look at the figures. The income of the country under the first economy bill dropped to $38,000,000,000. The income of the country today is twice as much as the total indebtedness, while in European countries in some cases the income is only half of the indebtedness. Our gross indebtedness is $35,000,000,000 while our annual income is $70,000,000,000. In other words, we take in twice as much in any one year as the country owes. If you are a house owner and your salary is $2,000 a year, you would not hesitate to buy a house that cost $10,000, or five times as much as your annual income. Therefore the country is not excited. We have an income now of $70,000,000,000.

In my judgment, in a few years the income will be $100,000,000,000, and perhaps our country will owe one-half of its income. Eventually it will only owe one-third of its income. Our taxes will rise in proportion. Our indebtedness will be dwarfed in comparison.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, this fervid political appeal deserves a better audience. I make a point of no quorum.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman will withhold that for a moment I will relinquish the floor.

Mr. DITTER. I want to get the gentleman an appreciative audience. I notice a number of absentees on his side of the House.

Mr. MEAD. If he will withhold his point of no quorum, I shall be in favor of calling the roll for a vote on the bill.

Mr. DITTER. It is a matter of appreciation of the gentleman's very fervid appeal, and he has not an audience at present.

Mr. MEAD. I know the gentleman is interested in my well-being, and I want to take this opportunity of expressing my keen delight in the gentleman's genuine satisfaction and pleasure in my economic philosophy.

Mr. DITTER. I have enjoyed it immensely. I do not want any of the morsels of the gentleman's able speech to fall on empty seats and therefore not be absorbed.

Mr. MEAD. It is because of the mutual high regard we have for each other that I ask the gentleman to withhold his motion until I take my seat.

Mr. DITTER. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that since he was discussing the problem of wages it has been my observation, to be just both to the Republican and Democratic administrations, we have had three kinds of wages: First, starvation wages, which cannot keep body and soul together. We have living wages, which just about keep body and soul together, and then we had saving wages, from which you can save during days of affluence and prosperity for days of adversity and misfortune. What we, as Democrats should do, is freeze a minimum beyond which no human being should be permitted to work, so that we may have saving wages for the American workingman.

Mr. MEAD. May I say to the Committee that I did not mean to inject a spirit of partisanship into this debate. I hold we made the same mistake in the early days of this administration that was made in the closing days of the former administration. I hold that the economy advocates are recommending a suicidal policy, but that on both sides of the aisle we have men enlightened by experience who are in favor of a balanced economy first and then a balanced Budget.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have looked over this bill and I find myself in agreement with it and propose to vote for it in the event of a roll call. The distinguished gentleman from New York has made some observations I wish to comment on for a few minutes.

My own experience in life has been that wages and salaries come from the production of goods and services, and when a man goes out and produces the goods or services he is entitled to a fair remuneration. But my observation and experience has also been that in the absence of the production of goods or services there is nothing left with which to pay wages or salaries. Therefore, we come to the conclusion always that there must be production.

These postal employees give service, and from that service they are entitled to receive wages, therefore out of those wages they must pay for their living.

We proceed along policies which push up the cost of living, food, clothing, and shelter, which makes the income of these employees less from a buying-power standpoint. When we go out and borrow money on the promise of the Government to pay and release that dollar exchange into the channels of industry through the building of public roads, buildings, and such as that, we stimulate and we push up the price of those things which employees must buy. When the dollar exchange is issued against the production of goods in private industry, the exchange covering the industry is there at the time the goods flow from the production line, and there is no inflation. But when that dollar exchange is issued through a promise of the Government to pay, as we have had during the last several years under Mr. Hoover's leadership and Mr. Roosevelt's leadership, we are inflating the cost of living of the people of our country. Anyone who studies the philosophy of economics must come to this conclusion.

In 1932 we had a national income of approximately $39,000,000,000. We had a Federal tax debt of around $19,000,000,000.

In 1937 we hope to have a national income of roughly $70,000,000,000, and we have a national debt of between thirty-six and forty billions of dollars. The national income doubles and the national debt goes up with it. The end of that is economic suicide and there is no escape from it. We talk about the high taxation in European countries. For what are they spending the money? Why, mostly armaments. Is there any prosperity, peace, or happiness in battleships, guns, ammunition, and war material? Certainly not.

In this country we have a vast expanse of territory, great resources of raw material, and great ingenuity, but these things are not permitted to function, as evidenced by this fact. Look at the Federal Reserve Bulletin today and you will find deposits in our banks of between fifty-one and fifty-two billions of dollars. Why are these deposits there? Because people are afraid to go out and venture in private industry. They never know what this House and the other body will do in the way of punitive legislation.

The gentleman from New York has spoken about the economic philosophy of balanced budgets. I voted against the C. C. C. appropriation for $350,000,000 the other day, and I voted against the $1,500,000,000 appropriation yesterday, but I will not vote against legislation which will bring about the issuance of dollar exchange against increased production, so that when increased production flows from the production lines of private industry, the dollar exchange will be forthcoming with which to finance it through the channels of distribution to the seller. When you do this, you remove the people from the relief rolls of this country.

Did you ever stop to think about this? When you go out and spend dollar exchange, which must come back through taxation, the dollars thus expended and the labor thus performed have no exchange value. Tax the people to raise a billion dollars to hire people to sit on the side of the road and count gravel, if you please. Has the counting of gravel any exchange value? Not at all; but it is employment.

We have a form of government which guarantees the operation of a capitalistic system. The capitalistic system permits you to own a store, a farm, or a business, and operate it at a profit, if your ability and competitive conditions will permit you to do so. The laws of this country protect you in the operation of that private property. Therefore, the capitalistic system provides for production and sale, which is what I mean by exchange. This is what I mean by a thing having an exchange value.

Why do not the people of this country utilize the $51,000,000,000 that are in our banks in the form of deposits and largely created by Government deficits? Why do we have to tax and spend and create deficits and mortgage the future of your child and my child and the young people who come in and out of these galleries every day? What glory will come to us and to our offspring if we impose upon them such burdens as the German Empire imposed upon the young people of Germany only a few years ago, when we received some of that prosperity which has been talked about here this afternoon? What did the young Germans do? They served notice on the world they would not pay those debts. I can almost visualize our sons serving notice on this country a few years from now that they will not contribute to the payment of the debt we are now building up.

These are some of the things about which we need to be concerned. Our people are not using their deposits because of fear. The banker does not make a loan because he wants to remain liquid. Why does he want to remain liquid? He does not know how his portfolio is going to be criticized. Therefore, it is fear all the way up. We build up these excess reserves, and then our Federal Reserve Board increases the reserves to prevent inflation, at the time the Government issues another billion dollars of promises to pay.

Something was mentioned here with reference to our gold stocks. We have a fraction under $12,000,000,000 worth of gold in this country, which we are purchasing at $35 an ounce. Only this morning the papers carry the story that England, France, and the United States are now proposing to stabilize the price of gold at $35 an ounce. They know good and well that if they break the price now and cut it enough below $35 an ounce, back toward the price of $20.67 where it remained so long, at that time commodity prices and security prices all over the world will break and go all to pieces, and fear will be increased. With approximately $23,000,000,000 worth of gold stocks in the world, we have almost twelve billions. What do we want with it? What are we going to do with it? What will it be worth in the years to come?

That is an answer the smart economist cannot give us. I do not know what the answer to it is, and I have been searching their releases the last 3 or 4 months trying to find an answer. They cannot answer it. They do not know. They do not know whether it is a good thing to have more gold or less gold. Foreign countries have a claim of five or six billion dollars against this gold stock we hold. What country on earth has any confidence in the currency of any other country today? Do we want to fill our vaults with pounds sterling or French francs or Italian lire? Not at all. Does England want to fill her vaults with dollar exchange? Not at all. Does France want to fill her vaults with pounds sterling? Not at all. Why? As we have all experienced in the last few months, the day comes when they find out the only safe thing to tie to is gold, and they are all seeking gold stocks. Within the last 3 or 4 days over $20,000,000 of gold has been taken out of hoarding by the citizens of Great Britain alone. Why are these people trying to get rid of the gold at the price of $35 an ounce?

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield for a question.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is the gentleman in favor of having an international commission appointed to stabilize the dollar, the pound, and the franc in order to bring harmony throughout the world?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know but what that will be forced upon us. We can take our choice between that and going along from day to day with the international exchanges disturbed as they are today, with every country being fearful of what the other country will do. If you analyze the stabilization exchanges of Great Britain, France, and the United States, the methods by which they have been established and the way the countries have of operating them, you will begin to get an answer to the question which has just been raised by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman from New York asked about an international commission to stabilize currencies. They had the London Conference, and that was broken up by a telegram from the President of the United States, was it not?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is correct. We refused to further participate.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I just came in and heard the very interesting remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken about the so-called gold fiasco. I propose whenever I can get time to discuss this issue further and hope that some Member on the majority side will take occasion, Mr. Majority Leader, to defend the policy of the administration.

I submit in all good faith and with all sincerity that I believe it is the greatest fiasco of all the New Deal follies. We have bought, and there can be no question about it, because I take my figures from the Treasury Department——

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a little question?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman be kind enough, as the exponent of your economic philosophy on gold, to explain the fine philosophy that the Republicans had under Hoover that brought about this great economic depression that the gentleman is criticizing today?

Mr. FISH. As the gentleman knows very well, I have 5 minutes, and in 5 minutes I do not propose to defend the Hoover administration. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman that if the sound recommendations of Herbert Hoover had not been sabotaged by a Democratic majority in 1930 there would be confidence in the country today, labor would be employed, and you would know in which direction you were going.

The fact is, and it is absolutely undeniable, we have taken $750,000,000 out of the general funds of the Treasury since the first of the year to buy foreign gold with.

How, I ask any Democrat, can you expect to balance the Budget when you have taken out of the Treasury of the United States $750,000,000 since the first of the year to buy foreign gold which does us no good, which is sterilized, and then hidden in the ground, which draws no interest, and for which we pay foreign countries $35 an ounce, or approximately twice the cost of production? We have paid the British Empire in the last 3 years over $1,000,000,000 of profits, and what we have paid to Soviet Russia I do not know, but it runs in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Both of these countries owe us huge war debts. I am waiting for some Democrat, not today but in the near future, to defend this idiotic policy of the administration that is bankrupting the Government, that is taking money directly out of the Treasury to buy gold we do not need, and causing deficits which make it impossible for us to balance the Budget.

I insist that we meet this issue, that we stop buying this gold at $35 an ounce and giving these huge profits to foreign nations, and only buy foreign gold where it is necessary to conduct trade or to pay for services or for debts or for merchandise, and not throw the money of the Government away or give it to foreign governments for something we do not want but must bury in the ground, where it serves no useful purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make the point of no quorum unless the chairman confines the debate to the bill itself.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very pleased to do so.

Mr. SNELL. Unless you do that you are going to be confronted with a point of no quorum.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to my distinguished colleague from New York there shall be no more debate on gold, silver, or international finance, and I shall ask the Clerk to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5, as amended, of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 39, sec. 101; Supp. II, title 39, sec. 101), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (a) Watchmen, messengers, and laborers in first- and second-class post offices, the United States Stamped Envelope Agency, and the Railway Mail Service, shall be divided into four grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,500; second grade, salary $1,600; third grade, salary $1,700; fourth grade, salary $1,800. Such watchmen, messengers, and laborers shall be promoted successively after 1 year's satisfactory service in each grade until they reach the fourth grade. All promotions shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following 1 year's satisfactory service in the grade. Effective at the beginning of the first quarter following the date of enactment of this amendatory section, all watchmen, messengers, and laborers who have served in such positions for 3 or more years shall be promoted to grade 4.

"(b) The pay of substitute watchmen, messengers, and laborers in such post offices, Agency, and Service shall be at the rate of 55 cents per hour. Whenever any substitute watchman, messenger, or laborer is appointed to a permanent position as watchman, messenger, or laborer, he shall receive credit for actual time served as a substitute, on a basis of 1 year for each 254 days of 8 hours served as a substitute, and shall be appointed to the grade to which he would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1. Any fractional part of a year's service as a substitute watchman, messenger, or laborer shall be included with service as a watchman, messenger, or laborer in any such post office, Agency, or Service in determining eligibility for promotion to the next higher grade following appointment to a regular position."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, strike out "four" and insert in lieu thereof "three"; in line 8, strike out "$1,700; fourth grade, salary $1,800" and insert "$1,700"; in line 11, strike out "fourth" and insert in lieu thereof "third"; in line 13, after the word "grade", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 14, 15, 16, and 17.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs (relating to the classification, promotion, and pay of laborers in the Railway Mail Service) of section 7 of such act, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 39, secs. 606 and 607), are hereby repealed, effective when the amendments made by section 1 of this act are operative.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCORMACK: Page 3, after line 14, insert a new section, to be known as section 3, to read as follows:

"That the fifth paragraph, under the heading 'Custodial service', in section 13 of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. 2, title V, sec. 673), is hereby amended by striking out the proviso in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof: 'Provided, That the annual rate of compensation for charwomen working part time shall be $900, and the annual rate of compensation for head charwoman working part time shall be $1,000: Provided further, That this section shall take effect July 1, 1937.'"

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment briefly relates to the charwomen in the Federal service who work part time. At the present time they work about 5 hours a day, and they are paid by the hour and receive $10, $11, and $12 a week, sometimes $13—anywhere from $10 to $13 per week. If there is one class of employees that is entitled to consideration, it is charwomen in the employ of the Federal Government. Most of them are widows; some of them have had unfortunate marriages, but practically all of them have children dependent upon them, and they are noble women working at very hard work in order to keep their little families together. A few years ago the House passed a bill enabling them to be paid on holidays. They were even, up until a few years ago, denied being paid for holidays, and I introduced a bill and the House unanimously passed it and the Senate passed it, and that bill became a law providing for payment of their wages for holidays. I do not know of any group more deserving of consideration than the group that my amendment will benefit, and they are a very small group. I am absolutely in favor of the bill as reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I hope my amendment will be adopted and that the bill as amended will pass.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman's amendment apply only to charwomen in the post office in the whole country?

Mr. McCORMACK. The charwomen in the custodial service.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am interested in what the gentleman proposes, but we have some bills now before the committee involving this very subject which you have discussed, and to which the commitee very much desires to give separate consideration. We would prefer that the gentleman do not insist upon this amendment and that he attend a meeting which we will have soon upon this very proposition. We do not like to load this bill down.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would not undertake to load the bill. I am for this bill. I think this strengthens the bill. The gentleman will notice that I introduced a bill for $1,000 for the charwomen and $1,200 for the head charwoman, but in my amendment I reduced it to $900 and $1,000 for the head charwoman. I think this strengthens the bill, and I hope that my friend will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This amendment presents purely a labor question. I am very much interested in these charwomen being paid for their faithful work. The Post Office Committee has bills pending before it now to which we will give consideration very soon, and I am very sure that we will work out some legislation, but we prefer not to have that brought into this legislation. This bill deals simply and purely with the Postal Service—handling the mails, and so forth—and the amendment which the gentleman proposes is foreign to this subject. I believe that a point of order would have laid against it if offered. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I say to the gentleman and to members of the committee that the other members of this Post Office Committee are very much interested in this subject and are just getting ready to give consideration to it. This amendment should not be added to this bill. I desire to deal fairly with the subject when it comes up before our regular committee.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I wonder if the gentleman could tell us, or the gentleman from Massachusetts could tell us, how many charwomen there are that would be benefited by this legislation and how much it would cost?

Mr. McCORMACK. I think throughout the country there are approximately 1,000. It is probably the smallest class of Federal employees. This would represent an increase of approximately $200 a year for this group.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am not at all unsympathetic to the gentleman's fine humanitarian purposes, which have so often been exemplified in his service in this House, and of course I think the low-paid groups ought to have an increase in salary, but I am wondering if a more systematic way of doing it would not be as the gentleman from Missouri suggests, have a hearing and get some detail as to what it would mean.

Mr. McCORMACK. The matter has been given profound consideration. The gentleman from Missouri himself says he is in favor of the purpose of the amendment if considered separately. On the other hand, both of these groups are groups that are deserving of consideration. My amendment relates to the smallest group of Federal employees, and certainly one of the most deserving groups. I think this strengthens the bill. I would not offer any amendment to the bill unless I felt it would strengthen it.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am sure the gentleman would not; but the committee has not had an opportunity to give this subject the study and consideration it should receive. We have no idea how many people would be involved. However, I am in sympathy with the general purpose of it, but it is an entirely separate and distinct question from the mail service, and for that reason I do not think we should put it onto this bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I think there is a question of order here. Personally, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I trust our committee will bring out a general custodial bill that will contain that provision. However, the bill now before us pertains to the Postal Service, and the genesis of this act is rooted in postal legislation, while the genesis of all acts affecting custodial service is from the Civil Service Committee. The amendment has no connection with this legislation or its antecedents; therefore I am afraid it might not be in order. I am also very much afraid that by adding personnel not in this same category we might jeopardize the future of this legislation. I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6383, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. MEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJUSTING RANK OF CERTAIN COAST GUARD OFFICERS ON THE RETIRED LIST

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6293) to adjust the rank of certain Coast Guard officers on the retired list, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after "retired", insert "whether before or at any time after the termination of his service as commandant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight within which to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a small article written by John Borg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by myself this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

RENEWAL OF STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4408) to provide for the renewal of star-route contracts at 4-year intervals, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "General: Provided, That no contract which has theretofore been sublet, no contract which is held by any contractor who is not eligible to bid under section 5 of this amendatory Act, and no contract which is performed principally by employees of the contractor shall be renewed by virtue of this section: And provided further, That prior to the renewal of any regular contract for a four-year period the Post Office Department shall, among other things, take into consideration (1) whether the service rendered by the contractor has been satisfactory to the patrons of the star route and to said Department, (2) whether the roads traversed in serving the star route have been materially improved in the meantime, and (3) the kind and character of the equipment provided by the contractor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"The Postmaster General may, in his discretion, and in the interest of the Postal Service and under such regulations as he may prescribe, allow extra pay to a contractor for necessary increased travel caused by obstruction of roads, destruction of bridges, or discontinuance of ferries occurring during the contract term, but no extra pay allowed shall be proportionately greater than the rate established by the contract involved."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CARL HAYDEN,
JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
W. J. BULOW,
LYNN J. FRAZIER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. G. BURCH,
HARRY L. HAINES,
FRED H. HILDEBRANDT,
FRANK CARLSON,
E. HAROLD CLUETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution relative to the enrollment of the bill the conference report on which has just been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4408) to provide for the renewal of star-route contracts at 4-year intervals, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to strike out in section 2 "stated in" and insert in lieu thereof "required under", and to strike out in section 4 the word "contract" where it appears immediately preceding the word "legally" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contractor."

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT CONFEDERATE REUNION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 394) making an appropriation for expenses of the Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Jackson, Miss., in 1937, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I am authorized to report back favorably, without amendment, the House joint resolution just laid before the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. As will be noted, $5,300 is the amount proposed to be appropriated by the joint resolution for the expenses of the Marine Band in attending the reunion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1937 Reunion at Jackson, Miss., June 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1937", approved May 24, 1937, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,300.

ADHERENCE TO MERIT SYSTEM IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Civil Service, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 2, 1937.

The Honorable the VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I have received a communication from the Civil Service Commission which states that in addition to numerous other bills exempting from the merit system all but minor positions there have been more than 70 bills introduced in this session of Congress which propose complete exemption for all positions affected thereby. A copy of the Commission's letter is herewith.

Aside from the undoubted fact that the merit system affords the best method for administration of Government business, the particular feature of the system which has the greatest appeal is the open competition it provides to the taxpayers to seek the public employment for which they pay. Please let me urge upon the Congress the desirability of placing all but policy-forming positions under the merit system.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

MACKAY RADIO & TELEGRAPH CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 133 (submitted by Mr. BORAH and agreed to on May 17, 1937), copies of exhibits introduced in evidence in the hearings upon the application of the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., Inc., for modification of licenses to add Oslo, Norway, as a point of communication, which, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to lie on the table.

CLAIM OF LIST & CLARK CONSTRUCTION CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report and recommendation concerning the claim of List & Clark Construction Co. against the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ACTS OF THE HAWAIIAN LEGISLATURE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the secretary of the Territory of Hawaii (submitted through the Department of the Interior), transmitting copies of the following acts of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

210. An act directing and authorizing the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of Honolulu to issue bonds in the sum of $1,750,000 for the construction of a sanitary sewer system in the city of Honolulu;

228. An act to amend Act No. 203, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1935 (series E–182, Session Laws, 1935), relating to public improvements and providing for the issuing of bonds therefor; and

247. An act to provide for public improvements.

DRAFTS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION BY DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide more effectively for the marking of wrecked and sunken craft for the protection of navigation, to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, a body politic of the State of New York, certain portions of the Stony Point Light Station Reservation, Rockland County, N. Y., including certain appurtenant structures, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by stockholders of the Ford County National Farm Loan Association and the Artesian Valley National Farm Loan Association of the ninth Federal land bank district, Dodge City, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to extend the 3½-percent interest rate on all Federal land bank loans and to defer the principal payments on loans for at least a year, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Housing Authority of the City of Bridgeport, favoring the prompt enactment of slum-clearance and low-cost housing legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Chicago, Ill., by the International Convention of Red Caps, favoring the enactment of legislation establishing redcaps to be employees of common carriers and entitled to the privileges afforded to other crafts in the transportation systems, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Florida Society in the East, New York City, N. Y., favoring the erection of the proposed Thomas Jefferson Memorial on a prominent hill on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, clearly visible from the Capital City, and in a style favored by Jefferson as expressed in his writings and architectural designs, rather than the erection of such memorial in the vicinity of the Tidal Basin in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called Gavagan antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred certain letters and resolutions endorsing the pending low-cost housing bill.

There being no objection, the letters and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
Washington, D. C., May 31, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: I attach herewith a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted on May 15 at the Los Angeles regional meeting of the United States Conference of Mayors. At this meeting there were present the chief executives of practically all the major cities of the Western States.

I should appreciate it if you would insert this in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I am,

Faithfully yours,

PAUL V. BETTERS,
Executive Director.

Whereas there has now been introduced in the Congress of the United States the Wagner-Steagall housing bill; and

Whereas this legislation follows the principles recommended by the last two annual conferences of the United States Conference of Mayors; and

Whereas this legislation sets up a long-term program for the elimination of slum areas where they exist and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this Los Angeles regional conference of the United States Conference of Mayors recommend to the Congress of the United States and the appropriate committees thereof the passage of this legislation at this time.

Unanimously adopted, Los Angeles regional meeting, May 15, 1937.

WOMEN'S DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF SYRACUSE,
Syracuse, N. Y., May 28, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The Women's Democratic Club, at their meeting held Monday evening, May 24, were pleased to endorse the Wagner-Steagall bill. There were 66 members present.

Enclosed you will find a copy of the resolutions drawn up and signed by the club.

Yours very truly,

WOMEN'S DEMOCRATIC CLUB,
CLARA K. AMIDON, Secretary.

Whereas the Syracuse Housing Authority definitely established the fact of the existence of insanitary and substandard housing conditions in certain areas of the city of Syracuse; and

Whereas the elimination of the above substandard conditions and the providing of decent and wholesome housing for the low-income groups is in public interest but is impossible without subsidy; and

Whereas under the present circumstances such subsidy can be adequately provided only through Federal financing; and

Whereas there is before the Congress of the United States a housing bill (S. 1685—H. R. 5033) providing for the above subsidy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Women's Democratic Club of Syracuse hereby requests the Senators and Congressmen representing Syracuse in the United States Congress to give their earnest and favorable consideration of the above-mentioned bills; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, and Congressman CLARENCE E. HANCOCK.

LACKAWANNA CITY HOUSING AUTHORITY,
Lackawanna, N. Y., May 25, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator of New York,
The Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: Mindful of your personal interest in our country's housing problems we are enclosing a copy of the resolution passed May 24, supporting the Wagner-Steagall bill, which, in our opinion, deals with the problem of slum clearance and low-cost housing in the best manner presented to date.

We therefore appeal to you, having confidence that this bill has your approval, which should assure its passage.

Respectfully yours,

LACKAWANNA MUNICIPAL HOUSING AUTHORITY,
W. H. STEBBINS, Chairman.

At a special meeting of the Lackawanna Municipal Housing Authority held May 24, 1937, the following resolution was passed:

"An emergency resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033

"Whereas many persons in this community are unable to provide themselves and their families with decent, safe, and sanitary housing facilities without some degree of aid from Government; and

"Whereas the continued maintenance of our slum areas is not only socially undesirable but constitutes a great economic drain on the community and should therefore be no longer tolerated; and

"Whereas Lackawanna has already begun its attack on the problem of low-rent housing and slum clearance with the aid of funds made available by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works; and

"Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033, which, if enacted, will make possible the continuation of the low-cost housing activities of this and other communities; and

"Whereas this resolution constitutes an emergency in that the same provides for the usual daily operation of a municipal department: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Lackawanna Municipal Housing Authority of the City of Lackawanna, That the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact at the earliest possible date the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill 1685, and that the House of Representatives be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact the identical measure, being H. R. 5033; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; to Senator HUGO BLACK, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor; to Representative HENRY B. STEAGALL, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives; to Senators ROYAL S. COPELAND and ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York; to JAMES M. MEAD, ALFRED E. BEITER, WALTER G. ANDREWS, Congressmen of the Fortieth, Forty-first, and Forty-second Districts of New York."

The above is a true copy of the resolution passed by the Lackawanna Municipal Housing Authority.

SUZANNE V. KUBIAK, Secretary.

Whereas we in Milwaukee, Wis., are urgently aware of the bad housing conditions here and elsewhere, of the acute housing shortage now rapidly growing worse, of the inability of private enterprise or local initiative alone to remedy this situation, and of the suffering caused by chronic unemployment in the building trades; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, if enacted, would provide the first concrete step toward solving this tremedous national problem: Be it therefore

Resolved, That Office Workers' Union, No. 16456 endorse the Wagner-Steagall bill, and urges its immediate adoption by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition Congress, in view of the alarming need for new low-rent housing that the financial provisions be doubled, while the administrative set-up remain intact; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President, to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, the House Committee on Banking and Currency, to President Green, Senator WAGNER, and to the Senators and Congressmen from this State.

SOCIAL SECURITY—ARTICLE BY DOROTHY THOMPSON—PENDING MINIMUM WAGE AND HOURS OF LABOR BILL

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on May 31 there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune an article by Miss Dorothy Thompson bearing on the subject of the social-security legislation which has been enacted by Congress. The article is so cogent, so pointed, and so pertinent and appropriate to the legislation as it now exists that I deem it worthy of the consideration of every Member of this body.

In that regard, Mr. President, let me say that it seems to me that the haste with which we approached and finally concluded social-security legislation, as is pointed out by Miss Thompson in the article referred to, is and should be a guide to us in the consideration of pending legislation to take it a little more slowly and a little more studiously. I have reference to the measure now pending before a committee of this body in which it is proposed definitely to fix hours of labor and minimum wages. To my mind, while that philosophy is indeed appropriate, the subject should, nevertheless, be approached with great study and great care, because in that revolutionary movement we will be fixing laws for the centuries yet to come.

I ask unanimous consent that the article presented by me may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of May 31, 1937]

ON THE RECORD

By Dorothy Thompson

AGAIN: SOCIAL SECURITY

The fact that the Supreme Court has declared the social-security legislation of the last Congress to be constitutional does not mean that the legislation is good. It is not. It is extremely bad, and it needs serious reconsideration and amendment. I know of no competent students of social insurance, of no outstanding expert, who believe that the present legislation is adequate. The Twentieth Century Fund has spent 15 months in having a thorough analysis made of the existing laws and will shortly, I understand, release a comprehensive report. In the meanwhile the basic criticisms of this organization have been made known through numerous statements. One of our outstanding experts on social insurance, the executive secretary of the American Association for Social Security, Mr. Abraham Epstein, has just presented an admirable monograph criticizing the present system and proposing amendments, which is published by the League for Industrial Democracy. The two reports, that of the Twentieth Century Fund and of Mr. Epstein, are in complete agreement at many points. Thus Congress has at its disposal, if it cares to use it, a large amount of expert opinion.

Furthermore, there is no need for pioneering in this field and for repeating mistakes which have been made in the past. Although social insurance on a national scale is a new thing in this country, it is not a new thing elsewhere. Germany has had social insurance since Bismarck introduced it in the 1880's; the principle of contributory payments for unemployment insurance which Bismarck introduced in an era of young capitalism, when unemployment was largely transitional and temporary, was afterward kept by the German Republic, and broke down completely in 1932; whereas the British system, which was based only partially on contributions from wage earners and employers, and largely supported by direct taxation, has worked, on the whole, admirably, after a great many adjustments. But there is nothing in our act to indicate that its framers were familiar with the German and British experience. At any rate, they took over the worst features of the German laws and ignored the successful British experience.

Nor has all of the criticism of the present legislation been constructive. One hears often the statement that old-age and unemployment insurance "ought to be put on a sound actuarial basis." Although, from an actuarial standpoint, the present legislation can certainly be criticized—higher paid young workers, for instance, entering the system when the 6-percent rate goes into effect, will actually pay much higher premiums than would be charged by a private insurance company for the same annuities—it is a great social mistake, I think, to regard insurances primarily from an actuarial standpoint.

You cannot make social-security laws on the actuarial principles of private insurance. The purpose of such laws is what needs to be borne in mind, and the purpose is not to enforce thrift upon the poor, whose incomes are inadequate, anyhow, to the maintenance of a decent living standard for the family. The purpose of social insurances is to stabilize the economic order, maintain purchasing power in times of depression, and so halt the downward slump, prevent the accumulation of vast masses of charity cases, to be taken care of by made-work programs, and to distribute to the needy a larger share of the profits of industry than they are capable of getting for themselves.

There are numerous objections to the present program, but the basic one is that this plan for social and economic stabilization ought to be borne by the Nation as a whole, and instead it is put upon the shoulders of the workers and employers, and ultimately upon the consumers. The employed worker and productive industry must pay the cost. If it is true that there is a considerable technological unemployment in the country, then these laws cannot help but accelerate it, because they put a premium on employing men and give every advantage to the machine. The British law aims to guarantee a modest basic income to all workers in distress, but the benefits in our act depend entirely on the wages previously earned by an insured person and are largest for those least likely to need them. The huge numbers of existing unemployed are totally ignored and cannot begin to become beneficiaries until they are reemployed in the industrial system.

Actually the security which the old-age system offers is precarious indeed. "An insured worker"—to quote Mr. Epstein—"must average at least $100 a month uninterruptedly for 20 years to get a pension of $32.50 a month when he is 65 years old. With sickness, strikes, and unemployment * * * most workers would not get such annuities unless they worked for 25 or 30 years." And although the act does not provide security for many years to come, it places an immediate back-breaking burden upon the workers, especially the younger and better paid ones, precisely at the time when they ought to be founding homes for which they need their earnings.

There is more than one danger inherent in the huge reserves contemplated under the old-age insurance plan, which is estimated to reach forty-seven billions in 1980. Possibly Congress may dissipate the funds for other purposes, since they are not earmarked, but that might conceivably be the lesser of several evils. The sum is $12,000,000,000 above our present indebtedness, and it may be invested only in Government bonds. The effect on the national economy when all Governmental bonds are withdrawn from the banks, insurance companies, trust funds, and private investors can be imagined. There is a serious chance that all governmental debt and securities will be in one account controlled by the Government itself.

The administration of the unemployment insurances, as the act stands, is incredibly cumbersome, complicated, and expensive. "Instead of promoting adequacy of standards and uniformity, the act encourages a confusing variety of systems", says Mr. Epstein. "Indeed, the act has already brought about a miscellany of 48 divergent State plans." Actually, the tax-credit plan for unemployment insurance was opposed from the start by every single student of the problem.

So much really constructive thinking and criticism, with such unanimity of conclusion, has been done on the Social Security Act by public-minded citizens and experts that there is really no excuse for not reforming it. Certainly it might be well to reform this act before rushing headlong into highly debatable wages and hours legislation. And, above all, the Social Security Act might be reconsidered and reformed before another billion and a half is voted for W. P. A. Because really intelligent and generous unemployment-insurance laws would make much of the W. P. A. activity unnecessary.

AMENDMENT TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. LONERGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, 1937, proposing to appropriate $94,456.20 for the purpose of paying to sundry persons the respective amounts found by the Court of Claims to be the value of work performed by them, respectively, in excess of 8 hours in each calendar day while employed as engineers, firemen, laborers, and mechanics in the care of public buildings of the United States elsewhere than in the District of Columbia, as set forth in certain Senate documents, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the billion-and-a-half-dollar relief joint resolution passed by the House and messaged to the Senate today. I ask that my amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, printed, and printed in the RECORD, and that following the amendment a statement which I have prepared explaining the amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HAYDEN to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HAYDEN to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, viz: At the end of the joint resolution add the following new title:

"TITLE II

"SECTION 201. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works (herein called the 'Administration') is hereby continued until June 30, 1939, and until said date is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on the date of the approval of this act. All provisions of existing law relating to the availability of funds for carrying out any of the functions of said Administration are hereby continued until June 30, 1939, except that the date specified in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, prior to which, in the determination of the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (herein called the 'Administrator'), a project can be substantially completed is hereby changed from 'July 1, 1938' to 'July 1, 1939.'

"SEC. 202. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation (herein called the 'Corporation') is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, at par plus accrued interest, from time to time, upon the request of the Administrator, securities now held and securities hereafter acquired by the Administrator in order to provide such funds as the Administrator shall deem necessary or advisable to carry out the provisions of this title. The amount which the Corporation is authorized by existing law to have invested at any one time in securities purchased from the Administrator is hereby increased by such an amount as may be necessary to enable the Corporation to make such purchases. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations which the Corporation is authorized to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to provide funds to enable the Corporation to make such purchases.

"SEC. 203. For the purpose of maintaining or increasing employment by providing for useful public works of the kind and character for which the Administrator has heretofore made loans or grants pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Administrator is hereby authorized to use, in his discretion and under his direction, for the making of loans or grants, or loans and grants, to aid in the financing of any project for which an allotment has been recommended by the examining divisions of the Administration prior to the approval of this act, not to exceed $300,000,000 from moneys realized or to be realized from the sale by the Administrator of securities now held and securities hereafter acquired by him, without regard to any limitation upon the amount of such moneys which may be used for such purpose under existing laws: Provided, That the grant for any such project shall be in an amount equal to 45 percent of the cost of such project, as determined by the Administrator.

"SEC. 204. The Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, is hereby amended by striking out the words 'in connection with the liquidation' in the provision relating to administrative expenses of the Administration, and in addition to the funds made available for administrative expenses in said act the Administrator is hereby authorized to use during the fiscal year 1938 not to exceed $7,500,000 of the moneys realized from the sale by the Administrator of securities now held and securities hereafter acquired by him for the payment of administrative expenses of a character for which funds are authorized to be used by the Administrator pursuant to existing law and the sum of $10,000,000 for the payment of such expenses during the fiscal year 1939."

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HAYDEN

The purpose of my proposal to add a new title to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, is to carry into effect what I understand to be the plans of the President concerning the future operation of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, as indicated by the statements made on the floor of the House of Representatives by the majority leader as contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 1.

The first section of my amendment provides for the continuation of the Public Works Administration until June 30, 1939, and authorizes it to perform its existing functions in connection with projects of States, municipalities, and other public bodies which can be substantially completed by July 1, 1939, instead of July 1, 1938, as now provided by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936. It is essential to continue the Public Works Administration, not only to complete projects now under construction but also to enable the Government to aid in financing those projects where a clear moral obligation exists to make the requisite loans and grants.

The second section of my amendment requires the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make available the amount of money necessary to enable the Public Works Administration to carry out these functions. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is also released from the provisions of the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, which limit to $250,000,000 the amount of bonds purchased from Public Works Administration which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may hold at any one time. Under the proposed amendment, for every dollar turned over from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Public Works Administration an equal amount of municipal bonds will be delivered by Public Works Administration to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Similar bonds purchased by Reconstruction Finance Corporation from Public Works Administration have already been sold by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at a profit of nearly $10,000,000.

The third section of the proposed amendment is intended to permit the Administrator of Public works to use the moneys realized from the sale of securities to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and otherwise, to finance those projects for which an allotment has heretofore been recommended by the Public Works Administration examining divisions. This section removes the limitation of $300,000,000 on the amount of grants which can be made from the revolving fund of the Public Works Administration which was imposed by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936. This section also requires that the grant for any of these previously approved projects shall be equal to 45 percent of the cost of the projects. In this way projects may be financed as originally intended on a 45-percent grant basis without regard to administrative order no. 197, which now limits the grant to the amount of wages paid to workers taken from relief rolls plus 15 percent of such amount.

The last section of the proposed amendment permits the use from the Public Works Administration revolving fund of the sum of $7,500,000 (excluding $10,000,000 authorized by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938) for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1938. The sum of $10,000,000 is made available for such expenses during the fiscal year 1939.

The proposed amendment is a practical solution of the problem faced by the Government in fulfilling its moral commitments, and is consistent with the President's wishes as they have been conveyed to the Members of the House of Representatives. The appropriation for the Works Progress Administration is left intact. The amendment which I am proposing does not earmark any of the $1,500,000,000 appropriated by the joint resolution, nor does it necessitate any increase in the $1,500,000,000 appropriation, and thus it will not unbalance Treasury estimates of expenditures. At the same time it permits the Public Works Administration to complete that portion of its program of non-Federal public works which appear to the President to be most desirable.

The portion of the program which it has been indicated the President has in mind involves only those non-Federal projects which have been heretofore approved by the examining divisions of the Public Works Administration, and for which either elections have been held and carried, or for which appropriations have been made by State legislatures or money otherwise procured by States, municipalities, or other public bodies and is actually in hand.

My proposed amendment would also take care of those projects involving the construction of schools to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of the students, and similar projects of unquestioned social and economic desirability. This, likewise, I understand the President has approved. According to the hearings on the joint resolution before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations the Public Works Administration would need about $280,000,000 to finish its job and finance projects of the character described. Approximately $185,500,000 would be advanced by way of grants on a 45-percent basis, and about $95,000,000 additional would be loaned.

This can be done without any further congressional appropriations by lifting the existing limitations upon the use of the revolving fund as contemplated by the proposed amendment. The only moneys the Public Works Administration now has which are not obligated are in its revolving fund. Such moneys have been derived from the sale of municipal bonds, Public Works Administration purchases from applicants, and sales to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. According to the information contained in the hearings and supplemented during the debate in the House of Representatives, the Public Works Administration revolving fund now amounts approximately to $292,000,000. Of this amount there is approximately $49,000,000 unobligated. Of the remaining $243,000,000, approximately $127,000,000 is in the form of municipal bonds now owned by Public Works Administration which could be sold to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and approximately $116,000,000 is represented by existing commitments of Public Works Administration to purchase municipal bonds which could also be sold to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

My amendment permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take over this $243,000,000 of bonds and commitments, thereby releasing this amount, which, together with the unobligated $49,000,000 in the revolving fund, will make a total of $292,000,000 available for grants and loans. As a matter of fact, the amount required for loans would probably be less than $95,000,000, because the experience of the Public Works Administration in the last three and a half years has shown that many loan and grant commitments are changed to grant commitments only.

My proposed amendment provides a sound and workable method whereby the Public Works Administration can be continued for the purpose of completing its existing program and of fulfilling the moral obligations of the Government in a manner wholly consistent with the policies and objectives of the President. The continuation of the Public Works Administration was recommended in the following letter:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATOR OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, February 17, 1937.

The Honorable the VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The President has indicated to Administrator Ickes his willingness to have continued for an additional period of 2 years the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. In the absence of the Administrator, I am enclosing a draft bill to accomplish this purpose.

The Acting Director of the Budget has indicated his approval of the enclosed draft as not being in conflict with the President's program.

Sincerely yours,

HORATIO B. HACKETT,
Assistant Administrator.

ISAAC INGALLS STEVENS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator SCHWELLENBACH on the life of Isaac Ingalls Stevens, at the memorial exercises held under the auspices of the District of Columbia Grand Army of the Republic at Battleground National Cemetery, Brightwood, D. C., May 31, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

REMARKS BY GOVERNOR EARLE AND SENATOR REYNOLDS AT SOUTHERN SOCIETY BANQUET

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Governor Earle, of Pennsylvania, at the banquet of the Southern Society at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., June 2, 1937, and also the remarks of Senator REYNOLDS introducing Governor Earle, which appear in the Appendix.]

MONOPOLY AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES—ADDRESS BY HON. C. H. MARCH

[Mr. ROBINSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject Evils of Monopoly and Unfair Trade Practices, delivered by Hon. Charles H. March, member of the Federal Trade Commission, before the National Confectioners' Association in Chicago on May 27, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMINISTRATION OF W. P. A.

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Charleston (S. C.) Courier and Journal of June 1, 1937, and also an article from the Commercial Appeal of Memphis, Tenn., of the issue of May 29, 1937, both relating to the administration of W. P. A., which appear in the Appendix.]

RAILROAD FINANCING

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, the subcommittee investigating railroad financing, under Senate Resolutions 71 and 227, Seventy-fourth Congress, first and second sessions, has uncovered some very interesting facts. Railroad management and railroad finance seem to be at cross-purposes. Railroad holding companies and wholly owned subsidiaries do not cooperate with railroad management for the public interest nor for the welfare of actual rail ownership. New York bankers and investment bankers seem to obstruct railroad operation for public and actual ownership interest.

The Federal Coordinator of Transportation has said:

> The railroads are still the great and necessary transportation system of the country. They rank near the top of our key industries. When they are sick the malady does not stop with them, but spreads a long way beyond.

In my opinion, the transportation system of the country is its largest and most important industry. The growth and greatness of the United States is due primarily to its transportation system. So much of the welfare of the country depends upon transportation that the interest of the Congress should be continuous as to that industry.

The subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee investigating railroad finance has found that some of the country's greatest railroads have been deliberately looted by their financial agents. The committee has found that the laws of the United States have been deliberately evaded and in some instances actually broken by railroad holding companies and New York bankers acting for railroad management.

The looting of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co. by Speyer & Co. is a glaring example. Between November, 1929 and April 1930, Speyer & Co. bought 25,000 shares of Gulf, Mobile & Northern stock for $951,000. On December 9, 1930, when the Board ratified the purchase of the stock, it was worth about one-third of what Speyer & Co. paid for it. If Speyer & Co., the bankers for the Frisco, had been compelled to keep the stock of the Gulf, Mobile & Northern Railroad, they stood to lose $607,000. What did they do to keep from standing this very substantial loss? Over a year after the transaction they claimed they had made the purchase for the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co.

This transaction was of such a weird nature that the Interstate Commerce Commission investigated it (186 I. C. C., p. 137, F. D. 24,825). They could find no record of the board of directors of the Frisco ever having authorized the purchase of the stock prior to December 1930. Mr. E. N. Brown, chairman of the board of the Frisco, a man put on the Frisco board by Speyer & Co., claimed he had called four of the directors and that they had authorized him to go through with the deal. One of the directors, claimed by Mr. Brown to have been called, afterward stated that he knew nothing of the transaction until long after it was consummated. (Preliminary hearings, Res. 71, p. 95, par. 2.) If the market had gone up as much as it went down, would the Frisco Railway have participated in the profits? I leave Senators to draw their own conclusions.

The Gulf, Mobile & Northern deal is very small in comparison with what the same bankers did to the Frisco in the Rock Island deal some time previous to that incident. Speyer & Co., and Mr. E. N. Brown, the Frisco board chairman and Speyer & Co.'s man on the Frisco board, decided to buy Rock Island common stock. They made this decision and carried it out without consulting the Frisco board of directors or the operating president of the road. Mr. J. W. Kurn, the president of the Frisco, knew nothing about either the Gulf, Mobile & Northern or the Rock Island deal until long after they had been consummated. Mr. Kurn testified under oath in the Federal court in St. Louis that if he had been consulted as to either of these deals he would have advised against them.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that before the last deal to which the Senator has been referring the Frisco Railroad had already had a very tragic and terrifying experience in its purchase by the Rock Island, so that Mr. Kurn's letter was based on the experience of the road itself.

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; and there was a "reverse English" deal by the Rock Island some time before this in which the Rock Island had purchased the Frisco.

Mr. Brown, the bankers' chairman of the Frisco board; Speyer & Co., the Frisco's bankers; and J. & W. Seligman & Co. decided to buy 275,000 shares of Rock Island common stock. (Res. 71, p. 82, par. 3.)

Speaking of Rock Island reminds me that the first railroad robbery was committed on the Rock Island in 1873 just east of Council Bluffs, Iowa. The man who committed that robbery used a gun and a horse, and got up early in the morning. He and his gang took a chance of being killed, and eventually most of them were killed. The loot was $3,000. That railroad robber's name was Jesse James. The same Jesse James held up the Missouri Pacific in 1876 and took the paltry sum of $17,000 from the express car. About 30 years after the Council Bluffs hold-up, the Rock Island went through a looting by some gentlemen known as the tin-plate millionaires. They used no gun, but they ruined the railroad and got away with $70,000,000 or more. They did it by means of holding companies. Senators can see what "pikers" Mr. James and his crowd were alongside of some real artists. (Dacus: Frank and Jesse James, p. 156.)

Congress authorized an investigation of that deal, and I have here a copy of the preliminary hearing. The able senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, as was the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, when that investigation was authorized. (Hearings, Mar. 24, 1914.) On April 24, 1914, the Interstate Commerce Commission instituted an investigation of the financial history of the Rock Island and made a report—volume 36, page 43, F. D. 6834.

But to go back to this comparatively recent Rock Island deal. Some weeks before the decision to buy 275,000 shares of Rock Island common stock jointly for Speyer & Co. and the Frisco, the bankers bought 11,000 shares of Rock Island for their personal account. Testimony before the committee shows that they made about $15 a share on this deal before they started the joint account. In 1903 the Rock Island was buying Frisco on a somewhat similar deal—Senate Resolution 71, page 83.

According to the joint agreement between J. & W. Seligman & Co., Speyer & Co., the Frisco's bankers, and the Frisco, through Mr. E. N. Brown, the bankers' chairman of the Frisco board, the railroad was to take two-thirds and the bankers one-third of the 275,000 shares of Rock Island common. The St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co. paid $10,506,000 for its share of this stock deal. The price of Rock Island stock advanced steadily from $60 to $130 per share while this tremendous buying operation was going on. (Res. 71, p. 84.) This 275,000 shares of Rock Island common stock was 37 percent of the common stock of the Rock Island Railroad.

In the years that followed Speyer & Co. sold their 92,000 shares of Rock Island, and reaped a very nice profit on it. (Res. 71, p. 87.) The Frisco Railway still, by last reports, owns its 183,000 shares, now worth about $2 a share. At one time the profit to the Frisco was about $10,000,000. As it turned out, Speyer & Co. got the profit and the Frisco Railway held the bag, not only losing its $10,000,000 profit but also losing its real ten millions in money. The railroad is now in another receivership, and so is the Rock Island.

While all this was taking place, the operating president of the Frisco was protesting as loudly as he could about the situation, but to no avail. I quote from a letter of Mr. J. W. Kurn, president of the Frisco, to Mr. E. N. Brown, Speyer & Co.'s chairman of the board of the Frisco. This letter is marked "Personal" and is dated July 2, 1927. I quote:

> DEAR MR. BROWN: Have talked to you on this subject in New York once or twice but feel should again call your attention to the situation in protection of the Frisco lines. There either should be a consolidation of the properties or else the financial interests should be separated. We cannot go along under the present condition without crucifying the Frisco Railroad, and we have been crucified ever since we became interested in the Rock Island.

The testimony of Mr. Kurn in the Federal court in St. Louis in February 1935 is most interesting. I would suggest that Senators follow the transaction to its conclusion and learn some interesting facts about banker control and rail management. I understand that the St. Louis Federal court has ordered suit against Speyer & Co. for the Frisco in this deal.

Now we come to the Missouri Pacific. Both the Frisco and the Missouri Pacific have their headquarters in St. Louis, and we regard them as Missouri railroads. I hope Senators have seen the Van Sweringen holding-company set-up, an outline of which is hanging on the rear wall of the Senate Chamber. This complicated and intricate corporate arrangement reminds us of the Associated Gas & Electric, Electric Bond & Share, and Mr. Insull's holding-company set-up, into which the Senate went very thoroughly during the sessions of the Seventy-fourth Congress. In the Van Sweringen set-up there are holding companies upon holding companies, altogether creating such a maze that it was too complicated even for the New York bankers to untangle. In that maze the Alleghany Corporation controlled the Missouri Pacific.

Incidentally, I wish to say that the Van Sweringens were geniuses at organization. In my opinion, they would have controlled half the railroads of the country on a shoestring if the 1929 crash had not come along and stopped them.

They controlled the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Erie, the Nickel Plate, the Pere Marquette, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Missouri Pacific, and had large blocks of stock in the Kansas City Southern and the Chicago Great Western.

The Missouri Pacific, just as the Frisco, was and is operated by a very able rail executive, L. W. Baldwin by name, who has come up in the rail-operating field through sheer ability. Apparently he was no match for the financial manipulations of the New York bankers and the Van Sweringens. His railroad is now in receivership in the Federal court in St. Louis, but the stock control is still in the Alleghany Corporation. Alleghany is now owned by Messrs. Young, Kolbe, and Kirby, who bought it from the Ball Foundation. Young controls, and his portion of the cost of the controlling stock was about $255,000. Mr. Ball bought it from J. P. Morgan & Co. and the Guaranty Trust and other New York banks for $274,000 at an auction sale. Control of 23,000 miles of railroad, with two and one-half billions of assets, was bandied about like a plug horse; contrary to the intent of the Interstate Commerce Act, but done nevertheless; and control is held by about one one-hundredth of 1 percent of investment. (Hearings, Dec. 7, 1936, May 6, 1937.)

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I agree very thoroughly with what my colleague has said about the Missouri Pacific. It seems to me there could not possibly be a more complete or fitting example of the vice of the holding-company control of railroads than is afforded by the case of the Missouri Pacific, because the holding-company device in the case of the Missouri Pacific has not only wrecked the financial stability of the railroad and thrown it back into a trusteeship, but it has very seriously impaired the service.

Mr. Baldwin was a great railroad builder. He came into the presidency of the Missouri Pacific Railroad after having risen from the ranks of a signalman, I believe. He came up from the ranks as a great railroad executive and took the Missouri Pacific after it had already been wrecked once by the Gould dynasty. He took a couple of streaks of rusty tracks, extending over a very large area of the great Southwest, and built them into a great railroad system; and then, by this holding-company device, through the Van Sweringens, the railroad that he himself had built and was operating with great success was bought out from under him and ultimately was thrown back into a trusteeship, and its stability was very seriously impaired.

I think my colleague's example of the Missouri Pacific is one that ought to strike the attention of every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives as to the very great necessity for legislation to prevent such practices in the future.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, the finances of the Missouri Pacific were manipulated from Cleveland on orders of the Van Sweringen treasurer in such a way as to disobey the laws affecting financial reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and without the knowledge of Mr. Baldwin, the operating president of the road, or Mr. Johnson, vice president in charge of the Missouri Pacific finances. (Hearings, Dec. 16, 1936.) We had Mr. Johnson before our committee, and he did not know of half the transactions with the funds of the Missouri Pacific which had taken place through the Van Sweringen's treasurer. Terminals were purchased at Kansas City and Fort Worth and were carried on the books of the company as cash, when, of course, they were not. The terminals were bought under an option to purchase. Although some $3,200,000 was paid on the deal, the Missouri Pacific carried the transaction as a cash deposit in the New York banks, though it was a payment on the purchase of these terminals. (Hearings, Dec. 14, 1936.) Income of the railroad was used by the Van Sweringen holding companies to buy the Missouri Pacific's own stock for the holding companies to gain and hold control. (Hearings, Dec. 15, 1936.)

The Missouri Pacific and the Frisco both serve the richest farming section of the United States. If their operating management had been allowed to operate the railroads for the benefit of their owners, the stockholders, and for the benefit of the territory they serve, it is my opinion that neither road would ever have been in any very serious difficulty. The railroad holding company has proven almost as disastrous to operators of railroads and railroad investors as public-utility holding companies have proven to plant operators and investors. (Hearings, Dec. 16–18, 1936.)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator know in what State the Alleghany Corporation was incorporated?

Mr. TRUMAN. In Maryland.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. To hold the stocks of a railroad operating where?

Mr. TRUMAN. All over the Middle West.

Mr. CLARK. The Missouri Pacific starts at St. Louis.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was it operating in Maryland?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; it was operating in Maryland—the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Chesapeake & Ohio was operating in Maryland?

Mr. TRUMAN. And the Erie, and the Nickel Plate. I will come to that in just a moment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I interrupted the Senator merely because the incident seemed to illustrate a point which has been emphasized over and over again in the Judiciary Committee and on the floor of the Senate; that under the corporation system which we have permitted to grow up corporations may be organized in one State to conduct business throughout the entire country, with no control whatsoever on the part of the public through the Federal Government as to what shall be done.

Mr. TRUMAN. The corporation holding-company set-up shown on the wall is organized in nearly half a dozen States, and yet the holding companies control coal companies, buildings, terminals, and railroads in a dozen different States; and they do not control them for the benefit of the owners, but control them for the benefit of the holding companies.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Nor for the benefit of the workers.

Mr. TRUMAN. Nor for the benefit of the workers.

Mr. President, the Alleghany Corporation was organized for the purpose of gaining control of the Missouri Pacific. Stocks and bonds were issued to the extent of about $200,000,000. When permission was obtained from the governing board of the New York Stock Exchange to list Alleghany on the exchange, certain members of its governing committee, including the president of the exchange and Mr. Whitney, then vice president and since president of the New York Stock Exchange, were allowed to buy blocks of Alleghany stock at a very substantial discount below the price at which the banks were to start the sales on the exchange and to the public. (Hearings, Jan. 15, and Jan. 26–28, 1937.) Some Morgan partners and some officers of the Guaranty Co. were also in on this deal.

A public official who would be a party to such a transaction involving public funds would be called a plain grafter, and rightfully so. I understand that since the investigation brought out these facts it is now against the rules for officers and members of the governing board of the New York Stock Exchange to participate in such inside "ground floor" deals. (New York Times, Mar. 3, 1937.)

I wish to say a word or two about the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad. This railroad, like the Missouri Pacific and the Frisco, is operated by a competent and experienced rail executive, Mr. Charles T. O'Neal. His idea seems to be to operate the road in the public interest and for its owners and customers. In 1930 the Van Sweringen octopus decided to buy the C. & E. I. from the Thomas Fortune Ryan estate. Manipulation immediately started. In one specific instance that stands out in the hearings before your committee the Van Sweringens caused the Midland Bank of Cleveland, in which they were interested, to lend the C. & E. I. $700,000 for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad through the Virginia Transportation Co., a wholly owned subsidiary of the Chesapeake & Ohio. (Hearings, May 10–11, 1937.)

Mr. O'Neal never did know that the C. & O. had loaned the money to the C. & E. I. until he found it out at one of our hearings on the subject. He had signed a sworn statement to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in this transaction which stated that the loan was made by the Midland Bank, and could not be renewed. The loan was made by the C. & O. Railroad Co. through its wholly owned subsidiary, the Virginia Transportation Co.; and the C. & O. had plenty of money, and could have renewed the loan, but it preferred to take "relief" from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. TRUMAN. Surely.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator at this point to inform the Senate whether the investigation of his committee disclosed that the Chicago & Eastern Illinois lost control of itself and passed into the hands of outside institutions, removing it from the control of Mr. O'Neal and his compatriots there in the State of Illinois?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Chicago & Eastern Illinois was controlled by the estate of Thomas Fortune Ryan, the insurance company magnate.

Mr. LEWIS. Of New York?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes. It will be remembered that some time ago there was an investigation of his holdings in insurance companies. His estate owned control of this railroad. The Van Sweringens decided to buy it; they bought it directly from the Thomas Fortune Ryan estate and put in Mr. O'Neal as president to operate the road; but all they wanted him to do was to pay them the money that the road brought in. That is all they wanted Mr. O'Neal for; and they wanted him to get as much money as he possibly could from the customers and from the stockholders for the benefit of the Van Sweringen holding company.

Mr. LEWIS. The real control was removed from Illinois interests and from those who had been in control?

Mr. TRUMAN. The real control had never been in Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. "Management" is the word I intended.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

General Dawes was president of the R. F. C. at that time. Mr. Harvey Couch was a member of the Board of the R. F. C. Mr. Couch was one of the directors of the Frisco who concurred in the Rock Island and the Gulf, Mobile & Northern deals. He has just been made chairman of the board of the Kansas City Southern. You see, Mr. President, the same old whirligig is still working. (Hearings, May 12, 1937.)

The Van Sweringens bought control of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, as I have told the able Senator from Illinois, from the Thomas Fortune Ryan estate, for $8,000,000. They paid $5,000,000 down, which money they took out of the treasury of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. The price was about 20 percent above the market on C. & E. I. stock on the New York Stock Exchange. The option ruse was used here again to go around the law and the Interstate Commerce Commission. A purchase of the control of C. & E. I. by the C. & O. would have required the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission. An option to purchase required no report and no permission. (Hearings, May 11, 1937.)

Neither the Chicago & Eastern Illinois nor the Missouri Pacific had been allocated to the Van Sweringen or Chesapeake & Ohio system of railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission in its plan of consolidation of the Eastern railroads. But the Van Sweringens and their holding companies proceeded to defy the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Government, to the ultimate sorrow of several railroads and thousands of investors, both in the holding companies and in the railroads.

If the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad had not been one of the richest and most soundly financed roads in the country, it never could have stood the strain. Its general offices were moved from Richmond, Va., to Cleveland, Ohio, a town a hundred miles off the line. The treasury of the Missouri Pacific was moved to Cleveland, although St. Louis is as near to Cleveland as the Missouri Pacific runs.

Mr. President, here is a situation which needs attention and which needs a remedy. The able and experienced members of this body ought to be thinking of some sort of cure for railroad holding companies and railroad wholly owned subsidiaries. Both of these devices are used to get around regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission and to defy the laws of Congress.

The Rock Island Railroad Co. and the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Co., the Missouri Pacific, and the Chicago & Eastern Illinois are all in receivership. The means ought to be found so to control the reorganization of these railroads that the public, the stockholders, and the security holders may be protected. It was testified at one of our hearings that $100,000,000 in watered stock was added to the last reorganization of the Frisco. In the reorganization of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railway, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the lawyers were severely criticized by Mr. Justice Stone in a dissenting opinion because of the cost of the reorganization (U. S. 282, p. 311). That opinion is well worth reading.

When one of these great transportation companies fails, lawyers and investment bankers sit around like vultures at the death of an elephant. When the receivership comes they get all the flesh and the stockholders and the public get the bones. In some instances reorganizations have only been forerunners of new receiverships and new bone pickings.

The maneuvers of railroad financiers have been a cause for vital concern, even in the early history of the railroads. I have here a report made to the Senate in 1893, setting forth difficulties identical with those we are now confronting. Exposure of glaring misuses of the public's money and the public's transportation system have been brought to our attention before, as at the present time. Irregularities have been aired in courtrooms and before commissions and very able investigating committees, and some very good legislation has come from such investigations. Unless we can correct the abuses disclosed by the investigations and correct other equally flagrant violations which have not yet been exposed, but will be, we will probably be investigating for years to come.

I think that the present would be an excellent time for the Congress of the United States to work out a remedy for this situation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article appearing in the Washington News under the heading "Plain Economics", by John T. Flynn, and an editorial from the New York Post, be incorporated in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAIN ECONOMICS

By John T. Flynn

ISN'T IT TIME THE VAN SWERINGEN PROPERTIES, WHICH TOPPLED INTO THE BASKET OF TWO UNKNOWN STOCK BROKERS, CEASED TO BE KICKED AROUND?

NEW YORK.—The plight of the lumbering, floundering Van Sweringen properties brings to mind the plight of a great insurance company 30 years ago. More important, it recalls what was done about it.

Charles Evans Hughes, then a New York lawyer, exposed the shameful practices of the insurance companies and, among other things, how the great Equitable had fallen into the hands of Thomas Fortune Ryan. Controlling its small amount of stock, financiers had control of the vast pool of investment funds belonging to it. Because these funds were for the protection of the army of small policyholders, one result of the whole scandal was that the controlling stock was put into a trust and two or three eminent men above reproach were named to administer the stock until the company could be reorganized. One of them was Grover Cleveland, ex-President of the United States.

Now the Midamerica Corporation controls the Alleghany Corporation and the Alleghany Corporation, through a series of holding companies, controls a vast network of great railroads and all kinds of important industries. There is over $3,000,000,000 invested in these vast properties. This money is not the money of the Alleghany Corporation or of the Midamerica, which controls it. It is the money of countless investors, most of them small investors. Furthermore, the properties themselves are touched with a well-organized public interest.

They were dominated until the crash by the Van Sweringens. Then they fell into the hands of a New York bank. Then, through an investment of a few million dollars, they were thrown into the hands of an Indiana fruit-jar manufacturer. Now they have toppled into the basket of two young unknown stockbrokers with an investment of not more than $10,000,000 in this vast empire. Is it unreasonable to ask that it is about time that these great properties and these extensive business investments cease to be kicked about?

Robert R. Young, one of the young stockbrokers who, with a handful of pennies, now sets out to rule and reorganize these giant properties, seems to have been doing very nicely down in Washington. On the witness stand before Senator WHEELER'S committee he conducted himself smoothly and with tact. When, however, he was pressed on the question as to whether, with his pitifully small investment, he should be permitted to settle the fate of these immense public properties, he became a little annoyed.

The proposal was actually made to him that the public interest and the interest of investors seem to require that the holding-company stock which he has now managed to get hold of and which through a series of slick holding-company schemes of the Van Sweringens dominates these properties, ought to be put into trust, perhaps into the hands of a committee of trustees named by the I. C. C. Young then lost his smoothness altogether and announced somewhat wrathily that "there was too much Government in business."

Has there not been too much Van Sweringens in business, too much Midamerica in business, and does it not occur to him that perhaps there is now too much Young in business? Someone, some agency must protect the public investors and these great utility properties. Is there any agency able to cope with the problem other than the Government? Is there any reason why trustees representing the public interest should not now take over the untangling of the appalling mess left by the Van Sweringens? Why does this young stockbroker imagine that he is better qualified to do it than the Government?

[From the New York Post of May 28, 1937]

IF YOU COULD BUY $30,000 FOR $2.55

A man who bought control of a $30,000 business for $2.55 would be subject to temptation.

If he were an honorable man, he would operate it as efficiently and as honestly as if the $30,000 invested in it were his own.

Were he thoroughly dishonorable he could plunder it shamelessly.

If, like most of us, his standards were a trifle confused by what goes on every day in the world of business, his rationalizing capacity well oiled and in good working order, he could still make a good deal of money "in a perfectly legitimate business way."

A commission from a painting contractor, a fee from a coal company, a tip from a banker, the twilight-zone emoluments of running a $30,000 business, the have-a-cigars alone, would amount to many times $2.55.

We draw this picture because, enlarged many times, it represents the position and the temptations of the man who now controls the Van Sweringen empire.

It represents an investment of $3,000,000,000. He obtained control of it by the expenditure of $255,000 for Alleghany Co. common stock. The ratio is the same as $30,000 to $2.55.

The right to decide in what banks the working balances of this great system shall be deposited; what banking houses shall do its financing; where it shall buy its supplies—this is worth many times $255,000.

In drawing this picture we have no desire to reflect in any way on Mr. Robert R. Young, the successor to the brothers Van Sweringen. His business record is an honorable one. His intentions, we are sure, are of the best. We are not even especially concerned with the Van Sweringen railroads.

What concerns us is the fact that we permit the existence of a device called "the holding company", which is a caricature of the idea of private property, which allows a shoestring investment to wield power over a whole railroad empire; a legal monstrosity that allows $2.55 to control $30,000; $255,000 to control $3,000,000,000; one-hundredth of a cent to control a dollar.

We think legal devices of the kind represented by the holding company are truly subversive of the system of private property.

In the Van Sweringen system are pooled the savings of millions of insurance policyholders and savings-bank depositors.

The taxpayers alone have a stake of more than $100,000,000 in this empire through R. F. C. and P. W. A. loans, or 400 times as much as Mr. Young.

Yet Mr. Young controls the empire.

Of the 23,000 miles of Van Sweringen railroads 13,000 miles are in bankruptcy.

Under the National Bankruptcy Act, section 77, Mr. Young occupies a key position in determining how great a sacrifice is to be exacted from the bondholders in rehabilitating these roads, how much of a sacrifice shall be made by the stockholders.

In the 10,000 miles of solvent railroad that is the remainder of the system Mr. Young can determine policies, wages, purchases, any and all details of management in which he chooses to take a hand.

It so happens that the Government of the United States is not helpless in this situation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has authority under the law to separate voting power from ownership, to put the controlling interest into a trusteeship, to give Mr. Young all that is coming to him as a man with a $255,000 investment, but to save him from the luxurious temptations of shepherding $3,000,000,000 in other peoples' money.

We think the I. C. C. should exercise this power. We think it should do so not only to protect the investors in these railroads but because the Van Sweringen network and its labyrinth of holding companies were built up in defiance of the public policy of this country as laid down by Congress in the Transportation Act of 1920.

This act forbids one railroad to acquire controlling stock in another without authorization by the I. C. C. The holding company was used to circumvent the law. The Van Sweringen collapse, the terrific losses suffered by Pennsylvania Railroad stockholders on Pennroad, the bankruptcy of the New York, New Haven, all trace back to the refusal of railroad interests and their bankers to recognize that this provisions was not only good law but good economics.

Congress in the Transportation Act of 1920 laid down a program of railroad consolidation under the supervision of the I. C. C. The I. C. C. may put the controlling interest of a road into trusteeship where it feels that control is a hindrance to its consolidation program. It can make a trusteeship a condition for allowing one railroad to gain control of another.

The successor of the Van Sweringens is applying for the I. C. C.'s permission to group Erie and Nickel Plate under Chesapeake & Ohio. We think the I. C. C. should make a trusteeship of the controlling interest a condition of its approval.

Mr. Young objects that this would put "Government in business." "Government in business" could hardly be fraught with potentialities as dangerous as a continuance of a set-up in which $255,000 controls $3,000,000,000.

We think the next step is to abolish holding companies altogether.

AID FOR SCHOOLS IN HAZARDOUS CONDITION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) requesting the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works to grant certain applications for non-Federal projects for the construction of schools to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of students.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may place in the RECORD certain information which I was asked to obtain?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

ALLEGED DENIAL OF CIVIL RIGHTS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked for some information regarding the denial of civil rights in Puerto Rico; and he requested that I, as chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, ascertain the facts and submit them to the Senate.

I have been in touch with Governor Winship in Puerto Rico, and he has prepared a very comprehensive statement touching upon the questions raised by the Senator from Idaho. I therefore ask that the statement of Governor Winship, together with letters from the Department of Justice of Puerto Rico, be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF GOVERNOR WINSHIP WITH REFERENCE TO THE INVESTIGATION OF THE PONCE AFFAIR BY MR. HAYS, OF THE COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ON CIVIL RIGHTS IN PUERTO RICO

Ever since the American occupation there has been free speech and free press in Puerto Rico. The rights of peaceable assemblage and of orderly political discussion have always been enjoyed in the fullest and freest manner, and are now. They have never been curtailed or diminished in the slightest degree. From the beginning there have been differences of opinion and of hopes among the people as to the island's ultimate destiny. Some have hoped for ultimate independence and some for ultimate statehood. But there has never been any question of the right of anyone to express his opinions in the freest manner. While the United States has never formally and definitely expressed its ultimate policy, yet the course of development of the insular government has been along the same lines as in the Territories on the mainland that have ultimately become States. As in the case of Florida and Louisiana and of the Territories set up in the domain that formerly belonged to Mexico, there has been the progression from an initial military government, beginning with the proclamation of General Miles in Puerto Rico upon landing in 1898:

"We * * * bring you protection not only to yourselves but to your property, to promote your prosperity, and bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government", followed shortly by the institution of civil government under the Foraker Act of April 1, 1900, with partial self-government—a lower house of the legislative assembly, elected by the people, and then in turn by a fully organized Territorial government under the present organic act, the Jones Act of 1917, in substantially the same form made familiar by all the organic acts for our Territories during the past century, and with the grant of full American citizenship to the people of Puerto Rico in 1917.

FORMATION OF THE NATIONALIST PARTY—ITS PURPOSES

Local parties have taken different positions from time to time as to the desirability of ultimate statehood or of independence; indeed, the political status has furnished the one issue which has differentiated local political parties; but until 1932 there was never any organized party in the island denying the authority of the United States or preaching or practicing organized violence as a political weapon.

But in that year, 2 years before I became Governor of the island, the Nationalist Party was registered as one of the political parties. It denies the authority of Spain in 1898 to cede Puerto Rico to the United States; says that the cession of the island by the treaty of peace in 1898 was void, and that the United States is a usurper without any authority there; and it advocates resistance to the authority of the United States by violence as a means of attaining immediate independence. In that year, 1932, the Nationalist Party polled only 5,257 votes out of a total of 383,657 votes cast at the election, and out of a total population then estimated at not less than 1,600,000 people. At the 1936 election its leaders advised the party members to stay away from the polls, and the party cast no vote, thus avoiding any showing of its actual strength.

Since 1932 the Nationalist Party has held 78 meetings and 10 parades, for which official permits were granted in the regular way. Fifty-four of these meetings and eight of these parades were held in 1936 and 1937.

ALBIZU CAMPOS

The Nationalist Party is but the lengthened shadow of one man. Its leader, Pedro Albizu Campos, calls himself the "President" of the "Republic of Puerto Rico." He is a man of very considerable ability as an agitator and orator.

He is deeply embittered, personally, against the United States. Some years ago, soon after the World War, he began preaching hatred of the United States, and finally violence as a means of freezing Puerto Rico from this Government. Nevertheless, in accordance with our established American traditions of free speech and full civil liberty, no effort was made to interfere with his savage verbal attacks, no matter how glaringly false and unfair they were. As the years went by he became more extreme and more fanatical. He conceived and propagated the idea that the United States was a usurper, illegally in Puerto Rico, and finally he proclaimed the so-called Republic of Puerto Rico and himself as its President. At his country home he set up a kind of feudal court and began drilling boys uniformed in black shirts, who marched and counter marched and relieved each other of duty and went through the formalities of a military organization. He even issued bonds of the so-called Republic of Puerto Rico and attempted to sell them in New York and elsewhere, though never accounting for the funds thus received and the other collections and contributions from his followers; and finally, in 1932, as I have said, he registered the Nationalist Party as one of the formal political parties of Puerto Rico, devoted to advocating violent attempts to resist the authority of the United States and to procure immediate independence by war.

NATIONAL PARTY OUTRAGES

In the evening of April 16, 1932, while the elected Legislature of Puerto Rico was in session, a meeting of the Nationalist Party was held in the Plaza Baldorioty in the city of San Juan, a short distance from the capitol building. Albizu Campos and other leaders incited the audience to march on the capitol. On the way they tore down a wooden fence and armed themselves with the pickets. At the capitol they tried by threats and violence to intimidate the legislature. The crowd jammed a stairway in the capitol building so that part of it fell. One young man was killed and 12 others, including a girl, were injured. A storm of criticism of the police arose throughout the island for having permitted such a disorderly demonstration.

Two months later, June 15, 1932, Luis F. Velasquez, one of the Nationalist Party leaders, and a member of its national board, called at the chambers of Chief Justice Emilio del Toro, of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico, and asked for an interview. Being admitted, he announced to the chief justice that he had come as a member of the Nationalist Party to avenge the insult to the Puerto Rican nation, because the chief justice had taken part in the celebration of an official American flag day in Puerto Rico the day before; and he assaulted and slapped the chief justice in the face in the justice's own chambers. He was overpowered and arrested by court attachés.

After that an upward trend of violence began. Dynamite bombs were exploded in private institutions and in public buildings during the following months.

That was, as I have said, during the 2 years before I became Governor of Puerto Rico. On February 5, 1934, I took office.

On October 24, 1935, four members of the Nationalist Party, none of them in any way connected with the university, undertook to stop the holding of a students' meeting in the University of Puerto Rico assembly hall, which had been called in protest against inexcusable slanders Albizu Campos had publicly uttered about the student body.

In a radio speech broadcast over the island a few days before, Albizu Campos had called the university girls "prostitutes" and the boys "sissies" and "homosexuals", these being, he alleged, the result of the American sovereignty. The four Nationalists, armed with guns, drove up to the gates of the university, with bombs and additional revolvers and extra ammunition in their car, prepared to enact a tragedy to break up the meeting of the university boys and girls. Their car was stopped by the police at the university gates; they were asked to show their driver's license; had none; were arrested. Two policemen got on the running board of the car and directed them to drive to the police station. On the way they began shooting at the policemen and severely wounded one, Corporal Perez. The police were obliged to return the fire and three of the men in the car and one bystander were killed. Some others were injured. A few minutes later, on the same day, a bomb was thrown at the car in which Corporal Perez was being taken to the hospital. It exploded in the car.

This was perhaps the most flagrant assault on civil liberties since Puerto Rico came under the American flag. Although Albizu Campos has fully exercised his right of free speech "over the air" to the verge of, if not beyond, slander, he was unwilling to permit the boys and girls of the university whom he had grossly insulted to assemble peacefully and to exercise their right of free assembly and free speech by adopting a resolution condemning him for his words. He and his followers were prepared to use bombs and firearms to kill and to maim for the purpose of preventing the most elementary expression of civil liberties. Fortunately the police prevented what would in all probability have been a massacre of the innocent. Yet such was the state of fear and intimidation which the Nationalist terrorism had fastened on the community that not a single Puerto Rican newspaper voiced any editorial condemnation of this latest attempt at violence. The state of terrorism may be gaged from the fact that after this episode several parents of boys in the university whose lives had been threatened felt it necessary to withdraw them and send them to the mainland to pursue their education.

It is pertinent to note, therefore, how four basic civil liberties—freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, freedom of press, and, in a very real sense, academic freedom, the freedom of youth to secure education in local institutions of learning—were thus assaulted and seriously injured. To preserve these liberties has been the unvarying solicitude of the insular government.

At the funeral of the four Nationalists killed by the police in replying to the fire of the Nationalists at the gates of the university Albizu Campos, before a crowd estimated at some 5,000 people, declared these men to have been patriots and martyrs to independence. He vowed that for the life of each one of them the life of a "continental oppressor" would be taken, and he specifically named Col. E. Francis Riggs, chief of the insular police, in this connection. He further called upon those present to take an oath that the killing of the Nationalists who had gone to break up the student meeting should not remain unavenged. He declared further that the Republic of Puerto Rico would be established by being kneaded with Puerto Rican blood and with the blood of their enemies, the Yankees.

Four months later, on February 23, 1936, Col. E. Francis Riggs, the chief of the insular police, was killed. He was a retired officer of the United States Army. He was on his way home from church, unarmed. Two Nationalists, Elias Beauchamp and Hiram Rosado, suddenly fired on him without warning in an open street in San Juan; killed him almost instantly. The police killed his assailants. Six policemen were subsequently tried in Puerto Rican courts for killing these assassins, and four of them have been acquitted, while in the case of the other two there was a mistrial. In a public speech at the funeral of these two Nationalists, Albizu Campos said that they were heroes who "had restored the virtues of an oath", the oath taken the previous October, in the same cemetery, when the Nationalists gathered there had "sworn vengeance for the assassination of Rio Piedras"; that these "heroes" "had restored the virtue" of that oath.

A little later, in June 1936, Orlando Colon, one of the policemen who had taken part in stopping the October attack on the University of Puerto Rico students' meeting, was shot through the back as he was entering his own home at night, the last shot being fired at him as he fell into the arms of his wife.

On January 26, 1936, in the municipality of Utuado, while police were trying to disarm a Nationalist, Luis Cruz Perez, he fired his gun at them and wounded the local chief of police, Francisco Velez Ortiz, and a policeman, Manuel Barriote.

On February 23, 1936 (the same day on which Colonel Riggs was killed), while the police in Utuado were arresting another Nationalist, Pedro Crespo, for carrying a gun, he and another Nationalist, Angel Mariano Martinez, fired at the police and seriously wounded the local chief of police, Francisco Velez Ortiz. On May 28, 1936, Guillermo Vazquez, a Nationalist, fired his gun a number of times at Policeman Antonio Barrero, and seriously wounded him.

In November 1936, shortly before election day, while the Liberal Party was holding a parade in Utuado, a group of Nationalists carrying guns snatched a flag from the paraders. When the police interfered, the Nationalists fired on the police.

Again, shortly before election, on October 25, 1936, the Honorable SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, Resident Commissioner for Puerto Rico, the island's elected representative in the Congress of the United States, was fired upon five times by Nationalists while he was delivering a speech at the public square in the city of Mayaguez. He was wounded; and except for the microphone's intercepting two shots he would probably have been killed. Sitting next to him on the same stand were several distinguished ladies of the city of Mayaguez, including the mayor's wife, Mrs. Manuel Marin, and Representative Maria Louisa Arcelay, the only woman member of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, as well as Mrs. Gaetan Barbosa, director of the public schools of San Juan and wife of Municipal Judge Gaetan Barbosa. Luckily they and other persons sitting close to the Resident Commissioner escaped unhurt.

NATIONALIST LEADERS CONVICTED OF CONSPIRACY TO OVERTHROW UNITED STATES AUTHORITY BY FORCE

After the assassination of Colonel Riggs, Pedro Albizu Campos and other leaders of the Nationalist Party were prosecuted in the United States District Court of Puerto Rico for conspiracy to overthrow the Government of the United States by force and to oppose by force the authority of the United States in Puerto Rico. They were convicted on July 31, 1936. Albizu Campos was sentenced to imprisonment in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., for a period of 6 years on the first count of the indictment, 2 years on the second count, and 2 years on the third count; and the sentence provided that upon completion of the service of the sentence imposed on the first count, the sentences imposed on the second and third counts are suspended and he will be placed on probation for a period of 4 years.

His associates were sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary at Atlanta for terms varying from 6 to 10 years. The sentence was affirmed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit on February 12, 1937 (88 F. (2d) 138). Their petition for certiorari was denied yesterday, June 1, 1937, by the United States Supreme Court. It is understood they will shortly be transported to the penitentiary at Atlanta. In its opinion, the circuit court of appeals finds (p. 142):

"In a speech at Mayaguez in August 1932 Albizu said 'that if the insular police by order of the government should kill any Nationalist, they would kill the Governor'; that at Humacao about 2 years ago he said he could explode a bomb or fire a shot from a revolver and that it would hit the head of the insular police in San Juan; that in the Plaza de Armas at San Juan in 1934 Albizu declared that every Puerto Rican home should be converted into an armed arsenal, in order to overthrow by means of force the Yankee imperialism in Puerto Rico; that in the Plaza Nunoz Rivera in October 1935 he said that the citizens must prepare and arm themselves with revolvers, rifles, and shotguns, and machetes in order to overthrow the American Government, cutting their heads off; and again in August 1934 he said that the people of Mayaguez were a lot of cowards; that instead of receiving President Roosevelt with flowers, they should have received him with bullets.

"Following these exhortations to arm, there was much shooting of both policemen and Nationalists, and finally Colonel Riggs, chief of police, was shot by Nationalists while returning from church, which Albuzu attributed to the oath previously taken at his suggestion at the interment of certain Nationalists in a former encounter with the police.

"There was also evidence of the attendance of Corretjer, Luis Velazquea, Velez, Erasmo Velazquez, and Juan Gallardo Santiago at a convention of the national council of the Nationalist Party at Caguas held in December 1935, at which Albizu spoke for 2 hours, concluding with the appeal, 'To arms! to arms!' saying, among other things, 'that the Nationalists should prepare themselves with arms suitable not for picking teeth but that shot well, and that the citizens should be in a position to repel by any means, even by killing, an illegal search.'"

BACKGROUND OF OCCURRENCES AT PONCE

That, in general, is the background of what took place at Ponce on March 21, 1937. There had been, besides, many other instances of disorder by Nationalists and attempts to intimidate the police and the people, and many cases of desecration by Nationalists of the flag of the United States. Many reports had come to me from police and from other public officials, and from private citizens, of Nationalists having torn down the American flag from schools and from other public buildings. On May 15, 1936, I had sent the following telegram to all mayors, justices of the peace, municipal courts, district courts, fiscals, and district chiefs of police in Puerto Rico:

"Your attention is invited to the provisions of section 958 of the Revised Statutes of Puerto Rico, which prohibits the desecration of the flag of the United States. In any case of violation of the provisions of this act immediate action shall be taken against such violators, who shall be arrested, taken to jail, and promptly prosecuted. The employment of crime, violence, or terrorism will not be tolerated. Should there be any persons rash enough to disregard this warning and to attempt to use methods of lawlessness and intimidation, you, as agents of the law, are expected to take immediate action against such violators. I call upon every good citizen of Puerto Rico to stand shoulder to shoulder with the constituted authorities for the preservation of law and order, and I shall employ the forces at my command to the limit necessary to protect the children, women, and all other citizens abiding by the law."

EVENTS AT PONCE

The occurrence at Ponce on Sunday, March 21, 1937, should be viewed with this background in mind: On that Sunday, pursuant to orders from the leaders of the Nationalist Party, there was to be a mobilization in Ponce of "divisions" of the so-called "liberating army" of the Nationalist Party, also known as the "cadets of the republic", and of an auxiliary quasi-military organization of women calling themselves the Daughters of the Republic. An announcement of the mobilization, or concentration, had been made in the local press in the form of a military order. Documents afterward found by the police, in the Nationalist headquarters in Ponce, show that instructions had been issued for the members of the "army" to come to Ponce in civilian clothes, then to go to private homes where they should put on their uniforms, and then to report at their headquarters, being careful to come singly and not to appear publicly in groups.

A permit had been asked for the parade, but the mayor of Ponce was absent, and in his absence the acting mayor would not take the responsibility of granting it. On Friday, March 19, Colonel Orbeta, chief of the insular police, had gone to Ponce to determine just what the situation was with reference to the parade that was proposed for the following Sunday. After conferences with a number of people that day, he returned that evening to San Juan to tell me what he had ascertained. He determined from the information that had been given him that if a military parade of the character proposed was carried out, it was well calculated to result in bloodshed. We discussed the matter at considerable length, and it was decided that the parade should not be allowed. The attorney general and I were both of the opinion that to allow the parade would clearly result in the substitution of the authority of Albizu Campos for that of the constituted authority of the Puerto Rican Government; and it was decided that Colonel Orbeta should use every effort to impress upon the people sponsoring the proposed parade the serious implications and try to dissuade them from carrying out the parade, using in this connection the best offices of the mayor of Ponce as well as other authorities and responsible citizens. Colonel Orbeta returned to Ponce on Sunday morning, March 21, and found that the mayor had returned late Saturday night and early Sunday morning, after some hesitation, had granted a permit for "a parade and meeting of a political charcter tonight", but with an express proviso "that any activity carried out by the commission that applied for this permit must have exclusively a civil character, that under no circumstances shall this permit be used to incorporate in the parade and meeting of a civil character any organization of a military character that is not duly authorized by the Government of the United States."

After a conference with Colonel Orbeta on Sunday morning, the mayor revoked the permit by noon that day. Word of the revocation was immediately sent to the Nationalist leaders, who had scheduled the parade for 2:30 p. m.

Shortly after midday a group of Nationalists, part of them in the uniform of the "liberating army", collected in front of the Nationalist headquarters at the corner of Aurora and Marina Streets in Ponce. It developed afterward that, in fact, the Nationalists also had men on roofs overlooking the street. Two of the Nationalist leaders, Gracioni and Quesada, asked for an interview with Colonel Orbeta at Ponce police headquarters. At that interview Colonel Orbeta carefully explained to them the seriousness of the situation and the dangerous possibilities involved if they should insist on attempting a military parade without a permit. He said to them that a civic parade could be held at any time, providing that it was not a parade of so-called "divisions of the liberating army" as a military organization. The two Nationalist leaders seemed to be convinced of the dangers involved in a military march of the "army" through the streets. Colonel Orbeta went so far as to offer, himself, to appear before the assembled Nationalists and to explain to them collectively the seriousness of the situation. They went back to their people, telling Colonel Orbeta that they would use their best offices to dissuade them from the march, and would let him know if they were not able to dissuade them. He waited in the office of the Ponce police headquarters for half an hour to see whether his suggestions would not be followed, but he received no further word from the Nationalists. It appears that, in fact, they made no effort to communicate with him again, showing definitely that they had determined to carry out the march at all costs. After waiting about half an hour at police headquarters, Colonel Orbeta started to the place where the "concentration" was to be.

But before he reached there, at around 3:30 p. m., about an hour after the time originally announced for the parade, the Nationalist band played the Puerto Rican hymn, La Borinquena, and at its conclusion the Nationalist column commander gave the command "Forward march", showing that the Nationalist leaders had definitely determined to carry out their plan for an army march. That was on Marina Street in front of the Nationalist headquarters, at the intersection of Marina and Aurora Streets. On the sidewalk in front of the Nationalist headquarters building at the street corner quite a little crowd were gathered in civilian clothes. Captain Soldevila, of the local police, placed himself in front of the head of the Nationalist column, held up his hand, and announced in a loud voice that the parade was prohibited. Instantly shots were fired at the police; and one policeman, Eusebio Sanchez, standing on Captain Soldevila's left hand, dropped, killed. A burst of firing came from the crowd in front of the Nationalist headquarters. A number of shots were fired from there. The policeman standing on Captain Soldevila's right hand, Loyola, was mortally wounded. These first shots came from the group standing on the sidewalk at the street corner in front of the Nationalist headquarters, rather than from the Nationalist column in formation. Photographs taken at the moment from the opposite side of the street, as well as the testimony of a number of witnesses, establish that the first shots came from that group in front of the Nationalist headquarters. (See photographs and reports of statements of witnesses hereto appended.)

It appears that, at the same time when Policeman Sanchez fell, another policeman, Ortiz Fuentes, who received five wounds during the riot and who saw Policeman Sanchez fall mortally wounded, was himself fired at by a bystander. Policeman Ortiz Fuentes, in self-defense and in defense of his fellow policemen, raised his carbine and fired at those who were attacking Chief Soldevila and himself and who had killed Policeman Sanchez. A general exchange of shots then took place between the Nationalists and the police, with Nationalists firing from the street and from roofs and from the door of the Nationalist headquarters. The firing lasted several minutes. Of necessity, the police, in self-defense, return the Nationalists' fire and threw tear-gas bombs into the crowd from which the shots were coming. Some minutes later, when Colonel Orbeta arrived on the scene, he was himself fired upon twice from a house roof while he was picking up a wounded man but was not hit. So the first and last shots came from the Nationalists. The casualties were 19 killed and some 100 wounded, including two policemen killed and five policemen wounded. One Nationalist was found lying face down on the sidewalk, feigning death, with a pistol in his hand with all its chambers emptied and a lot of extra cartridges in his pocket. He was shown to have shot one of the policemen. He was arrested, uninjured, and now stands charged with murder.

Following this the police entered and searched the Nationalist headquarters where they found a number of dead and wounded Nationalists, and found pistols, revolvers, and ammunition. They also found a copy of the secret order above mentioned, issued by the local Nationalist leader, giving specific instructions to the members of the so-called liberating army to report in Ponce without their uniforms, to put them on in private houses, and then to report singly to the Nationalist headquarters, taking care not to appear publicly in groups. Paraffin tests were applied to the hands of a number of members of the Nationalist Party, and 14 of the tests gave positive results of powder stains. Some others of the Nationalists refused to submit themselves to the test.

INVESTIGATIONS AFTERWARD

The civil authorities promptly started investigations, and I issued instructions that the investigations should be continued and be vigorously and promptly carried through. From the evidence collected I am thoroughly convinced that the chief of the insular police, Colonel Orbeta, used every method of persuasion with the Nationalist leaders to show them the possible dangers involved in such an unauthorized military parade of the "liberating army" and to prevail upon them not to attempt to carry out their plans. It appears that he showed great patience, consideration, and understanding of the situation, as did also the district police chief, Captain Blanco, and the local police chief, Soldevilla, and men under them.

THE HAYS COMMITTEE

The report of the Hays committee says that it arose out of a request by a group of Ponce citizens, headed by Felipe Colon Diaz, a lawyer, to the Civil Liberties Union of New York for an "impartial investigation" of the occurrences at Ponce, and that in response the Union sent Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays to Puerto Rico. The other members of the "committee" are Puerto Ricans.

On his arrival, Mr. Hays, with the members of the "committee", came to my office about 11 o'clock in the morning to explain the purpose of his visit to Puerto Rico.

After some casual remarks I asked him why he was making his visit just at that time. Mr. Hays replied that he had come to Puerto Rico in answer to a request from the committee that was accompanying him. When I asked them the purpose of the visit, he replied in effect that they desired to ascertain whether or not the people of Puerto Rico were being denied their civil rights and that they wanted to investigate the Ponce affair. I advised them of the situation with reference to the Ponce affair and as to what had been done as to investigations and court action. I told them that immediately after the occurrence the local prosecuting officer and his assistant (fiscal and assistant fiscal) had started an investigation of the matter, and that the attorney general and the special prosecuting attorney at large had themselves gone to Ponce to assist in the investigation; that after a great number of witnesses had been examined, preliminary reports had been filed by both the fiscal and assistant fiscal and by the attorney general and the special prosecuting attorney at large; that the investigation was continued until more than 300 witnesses had been examined; that on the evidence taken charges had been laid against 13 of the Nationalists and 2 policemen; that the accused parties would be arraigned the next week and their trials proceeded with in due course at as early a date as was consistent with the rights of the accused. I then said, in effect: "Now, gentlemen, under these circumstances it would seem to me that the investigation proposed by you is entirely inappropriate at this time." I said that I was very anxious for them to have all the information connected with the case, and told them that I thought it would be appropriate, under all the circumstances, for them to be present at the trial and to ascertain whether they considered it was being conducted in a proper way.

Mr. Hays' answer was that they not only wanted to do that, but that they also wanted to find out whether civil liberties were being denied in Puerto Rico. I stated that much of the information sought would undoubtedly be forthcoming at the trial of the cases which would begin on June 14, and that it would be logical for any further investigation to follow after that; that otherwise they would in practical effect be running an unofficial trial at the same time that the case was being carried on in the courts; that the testimony that they took would probably be made public and carried in the newspapers (as afterward actually proved to be the fact); and that it would undoubtedly get to the jury and influence it, although not guarded by the usual rules with reference to examination and cross-examination of witnesses. I told them that the general impression would probably be that this was being done for the purpose of cutting across the process of the court. Mr. Hays said that he thought it would not, and that it was appropriate to carry on an investigation of this sort at the same time that the trial of the case was being conducted in the court. I made some further remarks on the subject, and said in effect: "Now, gentlemen, I wish that you would give very serious consideration as to whether or not the course that you propose would not be most inappropriate under all the circumstances. I think it would be very much so." I again told them that I was very anxious to have them know all the facts and circumstances of the case, and urged that they follow the course that I had proposed. As Mr. Hays left he asked if he could publish the telegram that they had sent me, asking for the interview, and also the statement that I would cooperate. My reply, bearing in mind what I have already said, was that I had no objection to their publishing the telegram, and that I would be willing to cooperate.

With that they left, and I supposed that they would give consideration to the proposition I had suggested. They, however, went almost immediately to Ponce and started an investigation in open session and came to their conclusions, which were reported by them at a meeting in the public square in San Juan.

The conclusions, in their report, in the light of all the evidence that has been taken on this subject, are so erroneous as to have been described by the prosecuting attorney at large as revealing either "gross ignorance of the late events taking place in Puerto Rico during the last 5 years or bad faith and prejudice." The attorney general of Puerto Rico appeared at their investigation upon their request, and he regards their report as unfair, erroneous, and biased; and he says their interpretation of photographs taken at the Ponce incident is prejudiced and fantastic. They talked with the chancelor of the University of Puerto Rico and discussed the matter for about 6 hours with him, and he says that the impression he received while being questioned by them was that they had already reached a conclusion and were merely seeking facts and arguments to substantiate that conclusion.

From the official investigation of the Ponce affair it appears very definite that the Nationalists had made up their minds to have that parade on that day at whatever cost. The general opinion is that if the police had permitted the parade under all those circumstances the authority of the Nationalists would have been substituted for that of the insular government and that of the United States in Puerto Rico.

My opinion is that Mr. Hays was deceived and misled in the invitation to come to Puerto Rico and to conduct the particular investigation at that time. He apparently did not know that the committee with which he associated himself was "hand-picked" and that it had a strong pro-Nationalist bias. It is my belief that its purpose was to interfere with the trial in the court of the cases resulting from the Ponce affair, to influence the juries in those cases, and even to attempt to influence the course of the case in the United States Supreme Court, where a petition for certiorari had been filed by Albizu Campos and his associates. The least that can be said of the action of Mr. Hays in this connection is that he was badly deluded.

In discussing the objectives of the Nationalist Party the Hays report speaks of the spirit of fanaticism with which its members are imbued. It states they use "fighting language" and threaten to obtain their aims by means of force and revolution. So much of the statement is part of the truth. But the report withholds the rest of the truth when it states that, although many of the Nationalists belong to the so-called "liberating army", which teaches military tactics, they have no arms.

According to the record in the conspiracy trial of Albizu Campos and other Nationalist leaders, to which reference has already been made, searches of Nationalist headquarters have produced rifles, revolvers, bombs, material for other bombs, used targets indicating extensive target practice, and photographs of police marked for assassination. The evidence showed that on one occasion a recruiting officer of this Nationalist "army" told a witness that—"They were trying to enlist an army, and that they needed 5,000 men well armed, because in Puerto Rico the National Guard, Sixty-fifth Infantry, and the insular police, they were about 2,500 or 2,700, all of them, and that they needed 5,000 men well armed to try to destroy the power of the American Government in Puerto Rico * * *.

"* * * In Puerto Rico there were towns that had only a chief of police and two or three policemen, and that as soon as a revolutionary movement broke out they would take possession of them and declare the republic in those towns with great ease."

Other statements to the same effect were made by recruiting officers in other towns.

The Hays report finds that the Nationalist Party, as such, repudiates terrorism and intimidation as a method. It also specifically states that the policy of the party is contrary to individual terroristic action. But at the same time it points out that the intense loyalty of the party members to Albizu Campos as the master whom the rank and file blindly follow carries within it the germ of fascism.

The committee is clearly correct in its findings that Albizu Campos is blindly followed by his disciples. But that he repudiates violence as an individual or party policy is just as clearly negatived by the findings of the circuit court of appeals, above quoted, and by the entire history of his agitation and of his speeches.

One further word as to the conviction of Albizu Campos and the other Nationalist leaders for conspiracy to overthrow by force the authority of the United States. The Hays committee, while conceding that its statement is not a legal answer to the charges of conspiracy, say that Albizu Campos and the other defendants in that case were not charged for anything they had really done, but only for conspiring to do something—that is, to overthrow the Government of the United States by force. The Hays committee go on to say that, although that does not exculpate the conspirators, yet nothing by way of force and violence was actually done. That is an outrageous misstatement of the record, as is shown by the findings of the circuit court of appeals, which I have already quoted. It is inconceivable that the lawyers on the Hays committee could have made such a statement in good faith if they had actually examined the record in that case with any care at all. Acts of violence were in fact abundantly established, as both the trial court, the United States district court, and also the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, in unanimously affirming its judgment, clearly pointed out.

The committee says that many felt that if those men were to be tried, it should have been done in the local insular courts, and upon a charge of having been accomplices in the murder of Colonel Riggs. That is novel doctrine. Not only does this wholly unofficial, volunteer, private committee, organize and set itself up to usurp the functions of the insular courts in determining the guilt or innocence of the different parties in connection with the events at Ponce last March, but it also arrogates to itself the power to conclude that the United States District Court for Puerto Rico should not try cases within its criminal jurisdiction under the statutes of the United States and the law of the land.

Did anyone ever lend a sympathetic ear to Al Capone on any theory that he should have been tried for murder in the State courts of Illinois instead of for income-tax violations in the United States district court? Or is it the position of the committee that these culprits might have hoped for acquittal in the insular courts? And if so, shall that opinion of the committee wipe out the indictment that was brought against those people by a grand jury composed almost entirely of citizens born in Puerto Rico, or their conviction by a petit jury after two trials, or their sentence to imprisonment by as fair-minded a judge as ever sat in any United States district court, who, in imposing sentence, said:

"Candor and frankness compel me to say" (addressing defendant Albizu Campos) "that I regard you as primarily responsible for what has happened leading up to this case. I think yours was the major responsibility. This is regrettable because of the opportunities which you have had. You may not agree, but my deliberate judgment is that the blood of some of your own faithful followers is on your hands due to your ill-timed, ill-considered, and inflammatory remarks."

The Hays committee states that some believe the jury in that case was not impartial. Does the committee produce one iota of evidence to substantiate such a serious charge of improper selection of a jury? I have searched their report in vain for it. Would Mr. Hays have had the temerity to sign such a statement without one shred of proof, regarding a jury in a United States district court here on the mainland?

Of similar import is the innuendo of the Hays committee that there has been censorship of radio broadcasts in Puerto Rico. The charge is not directly made, but is made by innuendo and implication. That is a libel both on the radio stations and on Government officials. It cannot be condemned too severely. Yet that charge, made by innuendo, appears to be typical of a willingness of this committee to come to serious conclusions without sufficient facts as a basis for them.

The committee is gracious enough to say, at the tag end of their report, that there has been a free press and that the press has not been prosecuted for criminal libel in Puerto Rico. But the committee neglects to say that flagrant abuses of the laws against criminal libel and contempt of court by Albizu Campos and other Nationalist leaders have not brought prosecutions, because of the careful solicitude of the authorities of Puerto Rico for the preservation and exercise of all civil rights. Criminal libel and contempt of court have repeatedly been committed without subjecting the offenders to punishment. If anything, the insular government stands indicted of over-indulgence of those crimes. It is only in the name of a jealous preservation of the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and of the press that the government can justify its failure to prosecute these offenses.

It is my sincere belief that there is no place either in Latin America or in the continental United States where civil liberties have in reality been given wider scope. By its own statements this very committee has enjoyed in fullest measure the benefit of those constitutional guarantees in carrying on its investigation.

CONCLUSIONS

As the committee itself pointed out, he who looks for something finds it. The committee fell into the hands of a terroristic group bent on obscuring their crimes of violence by raising a smoke screen of alleged infringement of civil liberties.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 2, 1937.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OF PUERTO RICO,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
San Juan, March 27, 1937.

Hon. BLANTON WINSHIP,
Governor of Puerto Rico, San Juan, P. R.

DEAR GOVERNOR WINSHIP: I am submitting to you a preliminary report showing the facts of the incidents that occurred at the city of Ponce on the afternoon of March 21, as disclosed by the investigation started by the Ponce district attorney and his assistant and from information obtained by me in my visit to that city the following day.

During the morning of March 21 permission was granted by the mayor of Ponce to the Junta Nacionalists of that city to hold a parade and political meeting, said permission having been revoked a moment later at the request of the chief of the insular police of Puerto Rico. The original permit and revocation were communicated by the mayor of Ponce on the same day to the local directors of the Junta Nacionalists and to Captain Blanco, local chief of police.

Captain Blanco delivered to Chief Guillermo Soldevila the official communication from the mayor withdrawing the permit in order to make it known to the leaders of the Junta Nacionalists. Chief of Police Soldeville communicated directly with Mr. Luis Castro Quesada, Mr. Plinio Graciani, and other Nationalists, informing them that they had no permission to carry on the intended demonstration.

It appears that Lorenzo Pineiro Rivera and other nationalists had conversations with Chief of Police Orbeta, Captain Blanco, and the mayor of Ponce about the situation, and that the authorities insisted in the suspension of the parade in order to avoid possible clashes with the police force, the Nationalists claiming at that time that they were within their rights, and that they could not in any way agree to suspend a parade which had already been called.

Having the demonstrators assembled in front of the clubhouse in the Calle Marina, the musical band played La Borinquena, and orders were given by one leader to start the march. At that moment Police Chief Soldevila interposed himself in front of the marchers, and from the corner of Aurora and Marina Streets, where the Club Nacionalists is located, a shot was fired in the direction of Chief of Police Soldevila, and then and there Policeman Eusebio Sanchez fell dead.

A cross-fire was initiated between the police and the demonstrators, and as a result of the affray 2 policemen and 17 civilians are dead and 5 policemen and about 64 civilians wounded.

Several persons have been arrested charged with riot. One Elifaz Escobar has also been arrested and charged with assault with intent to kill.

About 80 witnesses have been examined, 61 of them Nationalists, who had taken part in the parade. Out of the 61 Nationalists examined, only 1 has accused the police force with firing the first shot, the others stating under oath that they do not know who fired the first shot.

Several civilian witnesses who do not belong to the Nationalist Party have declared under oath that before the fire started the police acted with courtesy and prudence, and all of them but one assert that the first shot was fired by a man standing at the corner of the Nationalist Club.

The paraffin test has been applied to several members of the Nationalist Party, and 14 have given positive results. Some of them have refused to submit themselves to the test.

Today I was told by telephone by District Attorney Perez Marchand that he has obtained a photograph taken by a person living in the upper story of one of the houses in the neighborhood, and the same discloses the very moment of the starting of the shooting and reveals that the first shot was fired by a man standing in front of the Nationalist Club.

I am enclosing herewith certified copies and translations of the reports rendered up to this moment by the district attorney of Ponce and his assistant.

As soon as the investigation is ended I will submit to you my final report on this matter.

Very respectfully yours,

B. FERNANDEZ GARCIA,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OF PUERTO RICO,
OFFICE OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY,
Ponce, March 24, 1937.

Re: Preliminary report of the district attorney of Ponce to the honorable the attorney general of Puerto Rico on the bloody events which occurred in Ponce on the 21st day of March 1937 (second report).

Hon. BENIGNO FERNANDEZ GARCIA,
Attorney General of Puerto Rico,
San Juan, P. R.

SIR: Amplifying my preliminary report of the 22d instant, please be informed that up to this writing seven firearms and a dagger, already identified, have been delivered to this office as seized from civilian Nationalists, uniformed Nationalist cadets, and the Nationalist Club and its surroundings, and that I also have in my possession about 100 bullets of different calibers, not fired, seized as heretofore stated.

The writer has also in his possession a military order signed by Roberto Lopez de Victoria, captain of the cadets, and numerous copies of calls and orders for mobilization which were found at the Nationalist Club of Ponce and in the person of several Nationalists arrested. All these documents tend to show that the leaders of the Nationalist Party had agreed to a military parade in Ponce and that to that end had received mobilization orders a great number of persons of both sexes to take part in the parade along the streets of Ponce as active forces of the "Ejercito Libertador y Cuerpo de Enfermeras de dicho Ejercito."

During all day yesterday and today numerous policemen have testified under oath and identified the weapons heretofore referred and the documents seized; also I have the testimony of persons of high professional and social standing of the city of Ponce.

Special mention should be made of Mr. Jose Rodriguez Serra, whose photographic business place is located at the corner where the shooting took place; Julio Amill, director of municipal public works of Ponce; and Engineer Eduardo Tuya, and Noel Totti.

These four witnesses clearly state that the first shot was fired by a civilian from the angle of the corner of Aurora and Marina Streets, and that, in consequence thereof, a policeman fell dead very near to Chief Guillermo Soldevila.

It is affirmed under oath by Cesar Amy and Luis Sanchez Frasqueri that they did not see who fired the first shot, but that they witnessed a real and truthful blood orgy (bloodshed) on the part of the police, that after the shooting was initiated attacked and fired regardlessly with all their weapons.

Quillermo Vivas Valdivieso, director of the newspaper El Dia, has given a long statement which substantially shows that he was at the place of the shooting, personally contributing to see that the parade was suspended in order to avoid clashes with the police. That he retired the moment he heard a Nationalist leader give an executive order and saw Chief of Police Soldevila advancing toward the man carrying the flag to impede the marching; that he heard the first shot and others later, but that he could not state who fired the first one. He made a part of his testimony an editorial published in the newspaper El Dia on the 22d day of March 1937.

The practical result of the investigation taken today and yesterday has been the arrest of Pedro Angel Flores, Martin Gonzalez (a) Lete, Luis Angel Correa (a) Chiguan, for riot, carrying weapons and violation of law no. 14 of July 8, 1936, under a bond of $500 and also the arrest of Ramon Ruiz for the crime of perjury and a bond in the amount of $2,000.

Dr. William Gelpi, in charge of the autopsies made at the municipal hospital, 14 in number, stated to the writer that in due time he will have his report.

Respectfully,

R. V. PEREZ MARCHAND,
District Attorney.

REGIONAL AUTHORITIES—FLOOD PREVENTION AND DROUGHT EMERGENCIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Nature has given recurrent and poignant warnings through dust storms, floods, and droughts that we must act while there is yet time if we would preserve for ourselves and our posterity the natural sources of a virile national life.

Experience has taught us that the prudent husbandry of our national estate requires far-sighted management. Floods, droughts, and dust storms are in a very real sense manifestations of nature's refusal to tolerate continued abuse of her bounties. Prudent management demands not merely works which will guard against these calamities, but carefully formulated plans to prevent their occurrence. Such plans require coordination of many related activities.

For instance, our recent experiences of floods have made clear that the problem must be approached as one involving more than great works on main streams at the places where major disasters threaten to occur. There must also be measures of prevention and control among tributaries and throughout the entire headwaters areas. A comprehensive plan of flood control must embrace not only downstream levees and floodways, and retarding dams and reservoirs on major tributaries, but also smaller dams and reservoirs on the lesser tributaries, and measures of applied conservation throughout an entire drainage area, such as restoration of forests and grasses on inferior lands, and encouragement of farm practices which diminish run-off and prevent erosion on arable lands.

Taking care of our natural estate, together with the stopping of existing waste and building it back to a higher productivity, is a national problem. At last we have undertaken a national policy.

But it is not wise to direct everything from Washington. National planning should start at the bottom, or, in other words, the problems of townships, counties, and States, should be coordinated through large geographical regions, and come to the Capital of the Nation for final coordination. Thus the Congress would receive a complete picture in which no local detail had been overlooked.

It is also well to remember that improvements of our national heritage frequently confer special benefits upon regions immediately affected, and a large measure of cooperation from State and local agencies in the undertaking and financing of important projects may fairly be asked for.

Any division of the United States into regions for the husbandry of its resources must possess some degree of flexibility. The area most suitable as a region for the carrying out of an integrated program designed to prevent floods is the basin including the watersheds of a pivotal river. But other problems dependent upon other combinations of natural economic and social factors may require a somewhat different area to permit the most effective functional program. For instance, the problem of the Great Plains area is a problem of deficient rainfall, relatively high winds, loose, friable soils, and unsuitable agricultural practices. The natural area for solution of the Great Plains drought problem is different from that for the solution of dynamic water problems presented by the rivers which traverse that area. The rational area for administration of a Great Plains rehabilitation program crosses the drainage areas of a number of parallel major tributaries of the Mississippi River. It should therefore be kept in mind that in establishing a region for one type of comprehensive program, parts or all of the same area may be included in a different region for another type of comprehensive program with the result of a Federal system, as it were, of programs and administrative areas for solution of basically different yet interrelated problems.

Neither the exact scope nor the most appropriate administrative mechanism for regional husbandry can at the start be projected upon any single blueprint. But it is important that we set up without delay some regional machinery to acquaint us with our problem.

I think, however, that for the time being we might give consideration to the creation of seven regional authorities or agencies; one on the Atlantic seaboard; a second for the Great Lakes and Ohio Valley; a third for the drainage basin of the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers; a fourth embracing the drainage basins of the Missouri River and the Red River of the North; a fifth embracing the drainage basins of the Arkansas, Red, and Rio Grande Rivers; a sixth for the basins of the Colorado River and rivers flowing into the Pacific south of the California-Oregon line; and a seventh for the Columbia River Basin. And in addition, I should leave undisturbed the Mississippi River Commission which is well equipped to handle the problems immediately attending the channel of that great river.

Apart from the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Columbia Valley Authority, and the Mississippi River Commission, the work of these regional bodies, at least in their early years, would consist chiefly in developing integrated plans to conserve and safeguard the prudent use of waters, water power, soils, forests, and other resources of the areas entrusted to their charge.

Such regional bodies would also provide a useful mechanism through which consultation among the various governmental agencies working in the field could be effected for the development of integrated programs of related activities. Projected programs would be reported by the regional bodies annually to the Congress through the President after he has had the projects checked and revised in light of national budgetary considerations and of national planning policies. When the National Planning Board is established, I should expect to use that agency to coordinate the development of regional planning to insure conformity to national policy, but not to give to the proposed National Planning Board any executive authority over the construction of public works or over management of completed works.

Projects authorized to be undertaken by the Congress could then be carried out in whole or in part by those departments of the Government best equipped for the purpose, or if desirable in any particular case by one of the regional bodies. There should be a close coordination of the work done by the various agencies of government to prevent friction, overlapping, and unnecessary administrative expense and to insure the integrated development of related activities. There should be the closest cooperation also with the developing State and local agencies in this field, particularly the State, regional, and local planning boards and the commissions on interstate cooperation which work through interstate compacts ratified by the Congress and through interstate administrative arrangements. And provision should be made for the effective administration of hydroelectric projects which have been or may be undertaken as a part of a multiple-purpose watershed development. The waterpower resources of the Nation must be protected from private monopoly and used for the benefit of the people.

This proposal is in the interest of economy and the prevention of overlapping or one-sided developments. It leaves the Congress wholly free to determine what shall be undertaken and provides the Congress with a complete picture not only of the needs of each one of the regions but of the relationship of each of the regions to the whole of the Nation.

If, for example, the Congress could have had before it at this session a complete picture of immediate and long-term needs I think its task in providing for flood prevention and drought emergencies would have been an easier one.

For nearly a year I have studied this great subject intensively and have discussed it with many of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. My recommendations in this message fall into the same category as my former recommendation relating to the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. I hope, therefore, that both of these important matters may have your attention at this session.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 3, 1937.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me so that I may introduce a bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I introduce a bill intended to carry out the recommendations of the President, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 2555) to provide for the creation of conservation authorities, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the President's message just read, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that on the 10th of February the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and I introduced a bill providing for the consideration by regions of questions of flood control, reforestation, reservoirs, soil conservation, and practically all the things covered in the message of the President. That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, where it now is pending.

It seems to me that there ought to be some rule of the Senate by which bills shall be referred in a more consistent and uniform manner. I am not a member of either committee, and I am not concerned about which committee shall consider the subject; but it seems to me that bills of identical nature, introduced at the same session, and dealing with the same subject, should not be referred to two or three different committees. There ought to be a definite rule as to the reference of bills. Certainly two bills relating to the same subject matter ought not to be considered one by the Committee on Commerce and the other by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. With the permission of the Senator, the Chair would like to say in defense of himself that in the matter of making references to committees, when bills are introduced which cover a number of subjects, and of which various committees have jurisdiction, it is the custom of the Chair to refer them to the committees requested by those introducing the measures. The bill which the Senator from Nebraska has introduced, and also the bill which the Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] have introduced, deal with various subjects concerning which different Senate committees would have jurisdiction.

The Senator from Nebraska asked that the bill he has just introduced be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Chair does not know whether the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Ohio requested that their bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, or whether they left the disposition of the bill to the Parliamentarian.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that bills providing for flood-control legislation have heretofore come from the Committee on Commerce; and, whether or not we should request that a bill dealing with that subject be referred to that committee, the bill would go there. Of course, I do not raise any question with respect to which one of these committees would have jurisdiction of the subject. My point is that certainly two committees ought not to be considering the same subject at the same time.

In that connection I will say that the Farm Credit Administration legislation came from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and all bills dealing with the Farm Credit Administration and amendments to the present law have been referred to that committee. There are now pending before that committee three or four bills dealing with the rate of interest which is charged on commissioner's loans and land-bank loans by the Federal Farm Credit Administration. One or two bills of the same character, dealing with the same subject and almost in identical language, have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I presume, because the introducer of the bill so requested.

With all due respect to everyone involved, it does seem that there ought to be some uniformity with respect to the reference of bills which deal with subjects which are already under consideration and before the Senate. I am not concerned about which one of these committees shall consider these flood-control bills, but both committees ought not to be considering the bills at the same time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The rules of the Senate do not expressly define the jurisdiction of its committees. By precedent it has been the custom of the Senate to refer to the various standing committees measures which have relation to the titles of the committees. As stated by the Chair, frequently there is an overlapping, or rather duplication, of jurisdiction. Many bills might be referred to either one of two or more committees, and either one of those committees would have proper jurisdiction. It would be very difficult to revise the rules so as to determine or enable the Chair to determine just what committee should take jurisdiction of every bill that might be presented in this body. Some of the bills are quite peculiar. They would require a measure of analysis to enable us to know where the balance would be as to jurisdiction.

My study of the pending bill and of the bill referred to by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has not gone far enough to enable me to form an opinion as to whether the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or the Committee on Commerce had best be given the jurisdiction.

These facts are pointed out in order to make it clear that there is nothing unusual in the situation which has arisen today respecting the subject matter of the two bills. Presumably the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky, when they introduced their bill, asked that it go to the Commerce Committee because, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated, the bill deals with subjects closely related to flood control.

One can readily see that the message of the President discusses prospective plans and programs and also deals with subjects of vital interest to agriculture. It can be very easily arranged, I think, that one or the other of these committees, or subcommittees from both of them, may sit to consider the legislation to be worked out in accordance with the President's recommendation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I did not rise to object to the reference of the whole subject to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I agree that the President's message contains a discussion of many subjects, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] contains provisions touching many subjects which might give jurisdiction to one or more committees of the Senate. I doubt the wisdom of trying to have two committees consider the same measure. I think the bill should go to one committee or the other, because whenever we have division of authority between committees we have confusion and chaos. This particular bill does lend itself to reference to either one of the two committees, and perhaps to another one.

However, the subject about which I am speaking not only relates to this bill, not only relates to bills pertaining to the interest on loans, to which I referred a moment ago, but we now have a very peculiar and confusing situation with respect to legislation on the subject of child labor. The Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I happen to be a member, has held hearings on three or four bills undertaking to deny the right of interstate commerce to child-made goods. Early in the session the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] introduced a similar bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Later the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] introduced a similar bill, which first was referred to that committee and later was transferred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The other day the President sent here a message on the subject of hours of labor and minimum wages and child labor, which was a sort of composite message, being followed by a composite bill on the same subject, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. So that now it has come down almost to a race between two committees of the Senate as to which one can get a bill out of the committee and on the calendar ahead of the other. It seems to me that this confusion ought to be composed in some way so as not to have almost identical bills going to different committees and having controversies and jealousies arising between committees as to which one should report a bill out first and have it placed on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield further to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will take the floor if the Senator from Kentucky has finished.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The problem raised by the Senator from Kentucky presents many difficulties, and I do not know of any plan that has ever been suggested or that could be agreed to that would prevent occasionally arising such questions as he has raised this morning, for the reason that in the preparation of bills many subjects matter are often dealt with in a single bill and committee jurisdiction is naturally divided.

With respect to child-labor legislation, it happens that I was a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce when the child-labor bill, which was finally held to be unconstitutional, was passed through the Senate. I was charged by the committee with the responsibility of handling that bill in the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and no question of jurisdiction arose at that time. Subsequently the act was held to be unconstitutional by a 5-to-4 decision, as I remember; so that subject has been perpetuated as a question for national legislation.

I have not the slightest doubt that if the original child-labor act, which by a narrow margin was held to be unconstitutional, could be reconsidered in some way there would be a favorable decision on the act under present conditions. It is, however, impracticable, I think, if a Senator drafts a bill dealing with two subjects or more and wishes it to go to a committee of which he is a member, to devise a plan which will prevent that from occurring. If such a plan can be devised, I will be glad to cooperate in carrying it out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, I merely wish to say that while at the time to which he refers I was not a Member of this body, I was a Member of the other body, and I recall very distinctly the skill and sincerity with which the Senator from Arkansas piloted that child-labor measure through the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill was fought in the Senate for many days, and every imaginable assault was made on it; efforts were made to destroy the effectiveness of the measure by amendments the meaning of some of which it was difficult to determine. There was bitter resistance to the passage of the measure, but that bill, as I have said, came from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, although it dealt with subjects that might very well come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Committee on Education and Labor is to have jurisdiction of any important legislation, it may very well be given jurisdiction of child-labor legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, theoretically, the Committee on Interstate Commerce would have jurisdiction logically of matters dealing with interstate commerce or the regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but in the regulation of labor and the regulation of maximum hours and minimum wages another question is also involved.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not raising any point about that; I do not care what committee considers it. As one of our chief justices in Kentucky once said about the 1st day of the month, when a large assortment of bills came in, it was not the size of the bills but the numerosity of them that troubled him. I think it is unfortunate we should have races between two committees and perhaps have both of them report the same bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Usually no contest arises between committees to obtain jurisdiction of bills. It seldom happens when a Senator prepares a bill or offers a bill, and, under the custom that prevails, makes a suggestion for its reference that the reference is not made in accordance with his suggestion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a further illustration of what the Senator from Arkansas has just said, in the President's message today he recommends—

A third for the drainage basin of the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers.

Sometime last winter I introduced a bill to include the Cumberland River Valley in the Tennessee Valley Authority. I did not ask that it be referred to any particular committee, but the clerk at the desk referred it to the Committee on Commerce, and I think that committee is about ready to report the bill. Of course, I did not know at that time that a larger program was contemplated, which would take in the whole country; and so the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on that subject will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Washington yielded to me, and I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Tennessee introduced a bill to place the Cumberland River Valley under the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. An identical bill, introduced by the Senator from Tennessee, had already, in a prior Congress, been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as a part of a more comprehensive bill. It passed the Senate under the report from that Committee on Agriculture, and went into conference, where it was lost. So a year before the Senator introduced his bill and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce the Agricultural Committee had already passed on a similar measure and recommended that favorable action be taken, and the Senate had passed a bill in pursuance of that recommendation.

It merely illustrates, I think, what the Senator from Arkansas has said as to the jurisdiction of various committees. But I do not know of any rule that could be adopted, although it would be nice if one could be provided, that would make it impossible for any conflict to arise, for, in the very nature of things, there must be conflict. After all, however, the rule provides that if a reference is not satisfactory to the Senate it may take action and refer any bill to any committee it chooses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I did not ask that the bill introduced by me be referred to any special committee at all. The clerk just referred it to the Committee on Commerce. The only thing I am interested in is to have the Cumberland River Valley included in the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have listened with very great interest to the observations of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and other Senators on the question of the reference of Senate bills. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Arkansas has said as to the practice of the Senate; but it has seemed to me ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, and have become fairly familiar with Senate practice, that the matter of jurisdiction of committees in the Senate should be much more closely defined and much more rigidly adhered to than it is. In the House of Representatives one of the principal duties of the Speaker, which in actual practice is performed by the Parliamentarian, is the reference of bills. In the House of Representatives committees guard very carefully and very jealously their jurisdiction, and I believe that it works to the public interest for them to do so. In other words, under the rules of the House, if the contention is made that the Speaker has erroneously referred a bill, it is in order for any Member of the House, by direction of a committee which thinks that the committee to which the bill has been referred ought not to have jurisdiction of it, or by direction of the committee to which the bill should have been referred or to which it thinks it should have been referred, to move to change the reference. In the House of Representatives there is great jealousy between the committees in such matters, and motions to change the reference in such cases are regarded as being in almost the same status as a motion to overrule a decision of the Chair. Changes of references are frequently made by the Speaker himself, by unanimous consent, when he becomes convinced that he has made an erroneous reference; but a motion on the part of a committee to change the Speaker's reference is regarded in the House as a matter of solemnity.

In the Senate, due to the practice here of simply referring a bill, as a matter of course, to any committee its author wishes it to go to, bills dealing with the same subjects may be in three or four different committees at the same time.

The Senator from Kentucky has referred to the fact that during the present session of Congress I introduced a bill which, without any preference or prejudice as to the committee but simply with regard to the subject matter and the committee which I thought had jurisdiction, I had referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill having to do with child labor. Sometime later the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] introduced a bill dealing with the same subject; the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] also introduced a bill having to do with child labor, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr BARKLEY] introduced a similar bill. Those bills were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate. I had no particular preference or desire as to the reference of the bill, but I thought that the subject matter embraced in the different bills should be considered by the same committee, and I therefore asked, and obtained, unanimous consent to have the bill introduced by me transferred from the Committee on Education and Labor to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the primary purpose of the bill which has been introduced is or should be flood control: at least, that is the excuse that is made for the bill. But I understand that it is offered as a substitute for and in effect a postponement of the consideration of the very vital problem of flood control which concerns many sections of the United States. Legislation providing for flood control is always, so far as my information as to Senate practice goes, been considered by the Committee on Commerce. The omnibus flood-control bill which was passed at the last session of Congress was considered and reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. After all, is not the matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the Senate, and, by motion, could not all bills on a similar subject be referred, if the Senate so desired, to one committee?

Mr. CLARK. There is no controversy about that, let me say to the Senator. The Senate has absolute power to abolish any or all committees or change the jurisdiction of any committee, and as a matter of fact that has been done frequently.

Mr. ROBINSON. The fact is, as is implied in the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, that a motion may be made by any Senator to discharge from further consideration of a bill the committee to which the bill is referred, and to refer it to a different committee. The rule of the Senate in that particular does not differ from the rule of the House.

Mr. CLARK. But the practice does.

Mr. ROBINSON. The practice differs. Let me say as one who has had many years' experience in this body that I have not found very much difficulty arising out of the conflict of jurisdiction among the committees. While, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and other Senators, it would be preferable to have a clear definition of the jurisdiction of the committees. I know of no way by which that can be accomplished when a bill which is introduced embraces several subject matters. At last it becomes a matter of discretion with the Chair and a matter of judgment on the part of the Senate if an issue is raised as to the reference.

After all it is not disastrous, is not very harmful, to have the advantage of the judgment of two committees on propositions which are related. It does not make for orderly procedure, but sometimes I have felt that it would have been much better if important bills which were introduced, involving duplication of authority, had gone to two or more committees. I shall state why I have felt that way.

I have known standing committees of the Senate to report very important measures without any consideration, without a quorum present in the committee at any time, and without the committee understanding the effect of the bill. I do not want anyone to challenge me for instances.

I might be disposed to give them, and it might be embarrassing to me and to the chairmen of important committees. [Laughter.] However, there have been cases during the last session or two, and everybody listening to me knows it is true, where some of the most important committees of the Senate have reported to this body measures which no member of the committee assumed to sponsor, and left to me, because I was the nominal leader on this side of the Chamber, the responsibility of defending the reports. I am pretty tired of that sort of thing.

It would not do any harm if two committees studied subjects closely related. We would simply have the advantage, if it is an advantage, of the conclusion and judgment of the two committees. The bills, involved now, I take it, are not identical. They are quite different in important particulars. However, I do not mean to commit myself to the policy of duplicating the jurisdiction of committees. It would add to my difficulties more than to those of any other Senator. I concur in the thought that some plan should be worked out by which this subject matter under discussion may be dealt with by a single committee. I take it if the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Nebraska chooses to pursue that course they will arrange to have the Senate consolidate the measures for consideration in a single committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I feel like apologizing to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] who nominally has the floor, but I do not want this discussion to be ended until I express my views not only of the practice of the Senate, but as to the reference of the particular bill which brought on the discussion. I shall not proceed now except with the permission of the Senator from Washington; but I should like to occupy the floor for a few moments on that subject, if he is willing.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Washington.

Mr. President, this is a subject which, in my humble opinion, never can be solved satisfactorily so that it will apply to every possible situation that may arise in the Senate. The history of the proceedings of the Senate shows, however, that we have gotten along pretty well. When we have gotten into a controversy, the Senate itself has decided it.

For instance, the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] the other day, attempting to carry out the recommendations of the President in his special message, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I think it should very properly have been referred to that committee, but practically the same bill, or at least one having the same object in view, to regulate hours of labor, was introduced by the Senator from Alabama several years ago and referred to the Judiciary Committee. That was at a time when I had the honor of being chairman of that committee. The bill was given very thorough consideration by that committee. First, it was referred to a subcommittee of which I had the honor to be chairman, and unlimited hearings were held. The subcommittee made a favorable report to the full committee, and the Judiciary Committee as a whole, acting on that report, made a favorable report to the Senate. The Senate passed the bill and it went to the House of Representatives and died there at the end of that session of the Congress.

There is an instance where two committees very logically could have had control of identical legislation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me, if the Senator will permit me to say so, that the illustration which he used is a very excellent illustration that there ought to be some specific jurisdiction provided for the committees. I was very strongly in favor of the bill to which the Senator referred. I made a speech in favor of it on the floor of the Senate; in fact, I made two or three speeches in favor of it. I am in favor of enacting some sort of legislation along that line. However, it does not seem to me that the bill ought to be handled by the Judiciary Committee in one Congress——

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not.

Mr. CLARK. And then be handled by another committee in another Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me to proceed, I shall reach the point he is raising. I am going to refer to several other instances which come to my mind as a matter of recollection where the same thing has occurred.

The first "lame duck" amendment to be proposed to the Constitution, which afterward became a part of the Constitution of the United States, came from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It did not go to that committee by accident. The resolution relating to it, which did not propose any amendment but merely asked for a remedy for the situation, grew out of resolutions adopted by an organization in West Virginia, as I recall, calling attention to the fact that the then session of Congress was a "lame duck" session, and that those who had been elected Members of the succeeding Congress could not get into their offices. The resolutions asked for a remedy of that situation. In an open session of the Senate the late Senator Thad Caraway, of Arkansas, who had presented the resolutions and had them inserted in the RECORD, was asked by the Chair to what committee he would like to have his resolution referred. He said, "I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry." Many Senators smiled; but the Chair said, "Is there objection?" The Chair waited a long time before proceeding. No objection was made; the matter was handled openly in the Senate, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Afterward quite an animated discussion ensued when that committee reported a proposed amendment to the Constitution to cure the evil mentioned in the resolution which had been referred to that committee for consideration.

A great many power bills or dam bills have been referred to the Committee on Commerce. Some have been referred to one committee, and some to another committee. I think, although I have not examined the matter with that question in view, that this suggestion will apply to the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky which went to the Committee on Commerce. I do not think it contains provisions that would take it to the Agricultural Committee to the extent that the bill which I have introduced today does.

Coming now to the particular kind of legislation, the Agricultural Committee has had jurisdiction of bills of this kind for 20 years. This bill is almost a copy of the T. V. A. Act. It contains page after page that is a verbatim copy of the T. V. A. Act; and yet in the bill a complete system of condemnation proceedings is set out that might very legitimately send the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. Nobody, however, has even suggested such a reference. There is more agriculture than any other one thing in the bill I have introduced. As I see the matter, the bill will do more to bring about agricultural relief than any other one thing, although under the Constitution it probably hangs on the constitutional peg of navigation and flood control.

More than 20 years ago, when the first Muscle Shoals bill came from the House to the Senate, the question of its reference was taken up in open Senate; and by the acquiescence of the Senate, after full notice, the bill was referred to the Agricultural Committee. At that time I had the honor of being chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. In the House the bill had been referred to the Military Affairs Committee. It came to this body, and the question arose in the open Senate, Where shall the bill go? I asked that the bill go to the Military Affairs Committee. As I look back to that day, I think I then saw that there was a great fight ahead, and I trembled. I did not want to get into it. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee at that time, a Senator from New York, I think saw the same thing; and he asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We had an open discussion of just a few moments in the Senate, and the bill finally was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

That was practically the same bill as the one I have introduced today covering a wider scope of country, and the subject matter has been before that committee ever since.

Every piece of legislation on the subject, all the amendments to laws on the subject, have gone to the Agricultural Committee, including bills similar to the one to which the Senator referred a while ago, pertaining to the Columbia River, which now is pending in the Committee on Commerce. The same subject matter was before us; and the Agricultural Committee in the aggregate have had months and months of hearings. I doubt whether there ever has been any legislation before Congress that had more extensive hearings than that, not before a subcommittee but before the full committee. The entire committee held the hearings on the so-called Muscle Shoals bill, and finally reported bills on the subject time and time again. It reported several bills. Two of them were vetoed. One received a pocket veto from President Coolidge. Another received a direct veto from President Hoover.

All those bills came from the Agricultural Committee. For 20 years no law on this subject has been passed that did not come from the Agricultural Committee; and why should we now change the procedure? I concede that there are things in the bill that would carry it to the Judiciary Committee. There are things in the bill that would carry it to the Military Affairs Committee, without any question. It would not be wrong to refer the bill to the Military Affairs Committee. The Commerce Committee would have jurisdiction, too, although, in my judgment, not nearly to so great an extent as the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator concede that from time immemorial the Commerce Committee of this body has had control both of navigation and of flood-control projects?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. That has been the case year after year.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Military Affairs Committee has had control of the building of dams by the engineers of the War Department. I would not say that the bill could not be referred to the Commerce Committee. There are some things in it that relate to commerce. In my humble opinion, however, the Military Affairs Committee has a larger degree of jurisdiction than has the Commerce Committee.

The bill I have introduced pertains to soil erosion. It is hung on the constitutional peg of navigation and flood control. Every year literally millions of tons of the finest soil God ever made flow down the Mississippi River, coming from its tributaries, and are carried into the Gulf of Mexico. Agriculture has more at stake in the bill than any other one interest on earth; and there is no doubt whatever that the Agricultural Committee ought to have control of it, particularly when at the last session of Congress the Agricultural Committee had control of a bill which was introduced at that session, very similar to this one, pertaining to the Mississippi River and all its tributaries. That bill was referred to the Agricultural Commitee. The Agricultural Committee appointed a subcommittee to consider it. I see sitting here now listening to me the honorable chairman of that subcommittee, the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. FOPE]. The subcommittee had extensive hearings on the bill in the last session of Congress. Nobody objected. Nobody found any fault. Nothing was covered up. It was all open. Nobody has questioned it to this day.

Every word of those hearings has a direct bearing upon the bill I introduced today. If we wish to be fair, the Agricultural Committee should not be deprived of the work of that subcommittee and the hearings they had, which will have just as direct bearing on this subject as on the bill pertaining to the Mississippi River. The only difference is that that bill referred only to one river, to the great Mississippi Valley, while this bill refers to the entire country. So I take it nobody is anxious to change the reference that has been made, although a motion to do so would be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. It is true, as the Senator from Kentucky has said, and I agree with him, that it would be well if we could agree on some plan by which we could obviate this apparent confusion—which so far has not hurt anybody very much, but it is a confusion—and by which there would be more regularity about the reference of bills in the Senate. I should be delighted to see that done. I doubt whether we can do it, however. At least, we cannot do it today, in my opinion. It would require the framing of some rule, with a great deal of consideration, to work out the matter so that an injustice would not be done anywhere.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I want the Senator to understand that I did not raise this question because of any objection I had to the reference of the Senator's bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not take the Senator's remarks that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely took advantage of this situation to point to what seems to me to be a growing confusion here.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator was justified.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether or not there is any remedy for it.

Like the Senator from Nebraska, I served for a long while in the House of Representatives. The rules of the House definitely fix the jurisdiction of committees; and while there is a borderland between some of them, there is not any great difficulty as to where a bill should be referred under the rules of the House. The rules of the Senate are different, and the practice is different. Nevertheless, I felt that, even at this session of Congress, there had been such confusion and conflict between committees over measures of identical character that, if possible, some plan ought to be worked out by which there would be no such confusion in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator from Kentucky in trying to work out something of that kind. I suggest that he prepare an amendment to the rules, and let it be referred to the Committee on Rules, and see if we can get a better situation than we now have.

Recurring to the reference the Senator has made to the rules of the House, and also to the reference made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], it would be improper and unethical for me to discuss the rules of the House with any idea of finding fault or complaining about them. I have no disposition to do so. If I were a Member of the House, and a criticism of its rules came from the Senate, I should resent the criticism. But I can say that in my humble opinion some mistakes that have been pointed out as having occurred in the Senate, have occurred to just as great an extent in the House of Representatives. I doubt whether their rule is as good as ours, although I will not say a word in criticism of it; but a good deal could be said on the subject. It is a difficult matter to decide upon rules to apply to all bills as to their reference to committees, when practically all important bills contain provisions which could very legitimately cause their reference to one of several committees.

I suppose that will always be true. In order to remedy the situation completely we should have to divide up the bills, which everyone can see at a glance would not work. But we have gotten along pretty well here. We see bills going to one committee under certain circumstances, and under different circumstances we see similar bills going to some other committee, but no harm has come from it.

I do not suppose any of the members of the Judiciary Committee thought for a moment of complaining about the reference the other day of the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to his Committee on Education and Labor. I was here when the bill was introduced. I heard what took place. I had no objection to the reference of the bill, although I presume the bill is a little more comprehensive in its scope than the earlier bill which went to the Judiciary Committee; and yet I remembered the time I had spent in the investigation of the question of hours of labor on the former bill which was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

We shall not be able to devise a perfect plan, and we shall have these conditions existing; and so long as it is within the power of the Senate, if it thinks an injustice has been done, to change a reference, there will not be any trouble. From my experience with committees of the Senate, I find that there is not the jealousy here that the Senator from Missouri referred to as existing in the House between members of the different committees. It is common, ordinary practice in the committees on which I have served, when we take up some bill, to have the suggestion made, "This bill ought not to be here. This is not the committee that should handle it." When that occurs, the question is discussed. If it is decided by the committee that it ought to go to some other committee, the chairman is instructed to report it back and have it go to some other committee. Such things occur nearly every day in the Senate. There has not been any controversy, at least none of a bitter nature. We have been getting along pretty well under the practice, and I think the reason for that is that after all the Senate has control of the matter when it wants to exercise it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have had the floor for about an hour, and have yielded for that time.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator make it an hour and five minutes, and let me have the 5 minutes?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Very well.

Mr. COPELAND. I am perfectly clear that this bill ought to have gone to the Committee on Commerce. The main feature of the bill relates to the control of the waters of the country. I cannot speak of what has occurred for 150 years, but, so far as I know anything about the history of the Senate, measures having to do with navigable rivers and flood control have been dealt with by the Committee on Commerce. I know that has been the case for 15 years, during which time I have been a member of that committee.

There is a very serious matter involved beyond the reference of this bill. I am not going to raise any controversy, so far as I am concerned, about the reference of the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, but we are in very serious danger of getting through the session without doing anything in a practical way to control floods.

Last year, without any dispute whatever on the part of anyone, the flood-control bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It was reported back to the Senate at the first session, and was rejected and sent back to the committee, and after about 3 or 4 months of effort the Committee on Commerce evolved a bill which was reported and was unanimously passed.

We have before us today another bill, a bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska. There is in the Committee on Commerce, over which I have the honor to preside, a bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] along the same line exactly as the one proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. Likewise, there is one affecting the Columbia River. There is bound to be conflict. There cannot be any coordinated effort. There is bound to be confusion. A few days ago the Senator from Nebraska spoke of having been a prophet in times past regarding taxation. I am going to prophesy that we are going to have much trouble because of the conflict.

Outside of that, however, there are 40 States in the Union interested in flood control. Last year we passed an authorization bill providing $300,000,000 for flood-control projects. That bill contained a specific authorization of $50,000,000, to be appropriated last year. Not a cent was appropriated. If we get into confusion over this matter, the present session of the Congress will expire without an appropriation for flood control.

A few days ago I asked the Senator from Nebraska if he could see any conflict between the large plan contemplated by his bill and the plan which the Commerce Committee has under consideration with reference to the control of the largest streams and the waters tributary to them. He said, no, that he did not, and I venture to say that he would say the same thing today. But it will be a misfortune if the present session of the Congress should adjourn without providing an appropriation for flood control.

It is sometimes said that lightning never strikes twice in the same place. We thought that because of the great floods on the New England rivers and the Ohio River of last year there would not be such floods perhaps for 10 years. Yet the same kind of floods occurred this year. So we are in danger, as I see it, of having Congress adjourn without taking any action whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. What has the reference of the bill in question to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to do with getting an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the so-called Flood Control Act? There is nothing in this bill aimed at preventing that. What has it to do with it?

Mr. COPELAND. The President states in his message of this morning——

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think there is anything in the President's message to that effect. There is no attempt on the part of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or upon my part to prevent the appropriation of money to build the flood-control dams provided for in the law to which the Senator refers. I do not see that there is any connection. They are harmonious, as I see it. The bill to which I have referred has nothing to do with the appropriating of the money to carry out the authorization to which the Senator refers.

Mr. COPELAND. I would say they were harmonious if we had any evidence that there was a desire on the part of the administration actually to appropriate money enough this year to take care of the flood-control projects.

Mr. NORRIS. The administration does not appropriate money; Congress does that.

Mr. COPELAND. The Budget, however, has made a recommendation which is perfectly absurd in the smallness of the amount recommended.

Mr. NORRIS. What has that to do with the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. COPELAND. Because we have a message from the President pointing out what ought to be done in the control of floods, soil erosion, and forestation, and the major part of this message, as I read it, relates to the control of the main rivers and the streams above them, and the bill presented by the Senator from Nebraska this morning carries out exactly in a formal way what is thus proposed.

Mr. NORRIS. But what has that to do with the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? The Senator is referring to a law passed by the last Congress, waiting for an appropriation to give it effect. The reference of this bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry does not interfere with that. I should be glad to help the Senator, if I had any ability to help, to obtain an appropriation to carry out the law. I voted for the flood-control bill, and I have no objection to any appropriation which can be made within reason to carry it out and give it effect.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is very generous. That is his position. But it may be said by those who wish to oppose flood-control appropriations, "We have a larger plan in the Committee on Agriculture, and we must not spend any money until that larger plan has been developed." I can see an opportunity for a great deal of confusion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. As a matter of fact, the argument has been many times advanced, has it not, that appropriations for the prevention of these immediate destructive floods should be postponed? It has been advanced as an argument against the appropriation for the prevention of floods that some plan may be brought in which will call for a general, comprehensive review at some time in the future, for a survey, or a recommendation, or an estimate, which will at the same time come to the Congress, which will postpone any substantial appropriation for the immediate relief of the emergency which now exists.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is correct. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I am in sympathy with what he is proposing to do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on the question the Senator from Missouri raised?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think this illustrates that it would be dangerous to refer this bill to the Committee on Commerce, if that is the way the Senator feels about it, that it is going to delay the consummation of the measure which he had passed last year. If the Senate is friendly to this kind of legislation and refers it to the Committee on Commerce, and the Committee on Commerce, with the agitation for the act to which the Senator refers, is going to delay carrying out the flood-control program, he would hold it up.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, on the issue raised by the Senator from Nebraska, to submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. So am I.

Mr. CLARK. I will do so at the proper time, as soon as the Senator from Washington shall conclude his statement, by submitting the question to the Senate as to whether the jurisdiction of the committee is to be determined, as the Senator from Nebraska says, by speculation as to what the Committee on Commerce will do with the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment? I have to go to a meeting of a subcommittee, and I desire to ask just one question of the Senator from Washington, whose concurrent resolution is now before the Senate. Before I go to the meeting of the subcommittee I should like to ask him a question.

As I understand, the Senator's concurrent resolution, which is now pending before the Senate but which is not being discussed, applies to no appropriations to be made but only to appropriations which have already been made, and are now in the hands of the President.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct. All the money would come out of the revolving fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. Out of the revolving fund already appropriated?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator that I am heartily in favor of his concurrent resolution, and I hope it will be adopted as soon as possible.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I sincerely hope that the discussion about the rules and the reference of bills will end before all those who are in favor of the concurrent resolution have to leave, because one by one they are going. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will allow me to have the last word, I will conclude.

I do not wish to see anything happen that will cause the immediate burden which rests upon us to be dealt with unwisely by the Congress. Whether the bill is considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or by my committee—and I do not care where it is considered—I want the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to have an opportunity for a full hearing, in order that the matter may be adequately presented. But in justice to my committee and to myself I cannot fail to say to the Senator that the Congress should this year make the necessary appropriations in order to carry out the main purposes of the authorization law passed last year. Of course, if we do that we shall in no sense interfere with the larger plan and the more comprehensive plan in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska. I hope, however, there may not be confusion and misunderstanding which may lead to delay of consideration of his bill and of our bill, and result in the adjournment of Congress without having made any appropriation for this great work.

I thank the Senator from Washington for yielding to me. He has been very generous.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, I give notice that at the proper time I shall move to discharge the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the consideration of the bill introduced today by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce. I shall not make the motion at this time, because the majority leader has informed me that it is the purpose of the leadership to have the Senate adjourn until Monday. The matter deserves consideration, and action on it should not be taken hastily; and I do not desire unnecessarily to hold the Senate in session this afternoon. I give notice, however, that at the proper time I shall make that motion, in order that the jurisdiction of committees may be settled.

AUTHORITY TO COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO REPORT BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as I am compelled to leave the Chamber, I should now like to have an order entered, if it is agreeable to the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow today's session the Committee on Appropriations may have leave to submit reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AID FOR SCHOOLS IN HAZARDOUS CONDITIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11), which is as follows:

Whereas, in response to Senate Resolution 97, the Administrator of Public Works has filed with the Senate the list of pending non-Federal projects for the construction of schools to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of the students; and

Whereas there remains in the Public Works Administration revolving fund an ample sum, without further appropriation, to make the necessary loans and grants involved in such applications: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works be requested to grant such of the applications above described as may meet the engineering and financial requirements of the Public Works Administration without requiring that the applicant have on hand prior to the granting of the application all of the funds necessary for the completion of the project, and without requiring that the sum or sums granted to the applicant be expended exclusively for relief labor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the pending resolution requests the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works to remove the restrictions of two rules which have recently been adopted by the President and the Administrator concerning certain projects, a list of which was submitted to the Senate last month by the Administrator, and the applications for which are based upon the hazardous conditions of the schools for the construction of which the applications are made.

The first rule adopted by the President and the Administrator requires that the applicant—in most instances a school district—have on hand, before the application is approved, 100 percent of the amount of money necessary to construct the building. In other words, the applicant is required to have on hand not merely its own part of the money but also the part of the money which the Government intends to furnish through the P. W. A.

The second rule provides that there shall be monthly audits after the work is started, and that the Government then will reimburse the school district for the amount of money which the school district has paid for relief labor, plus 15 percent of the amount thus paid to relief labor.

The result of those two rules is that in most instances it has been absolutely impossible for the schools to comply with the rules. There are 1,178 applications pending under this category. Of the 1,178 applicants, only 35 were able to comply with the rules.

The only purpose of this concurrent resolution is to request the President and the Administrator to relax the provisions so far as these two rules are concerned. The resolution does not require any appropriation. It does not make any change in percentages of amounts that should be furnished by the Federal Government or the applicant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the concurrent resolution should be agreed to, would there be any rule or regulation at all as to any amount required to be on hand before the loan is made?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the resolution should be agreed to, and the President and the Administrator should accept it, the old rule of 45 percent and 55 percent would apply.

Mr. BORAH. It would apply?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. All that this concurrent resolution does is to ask for the removal of the rule which requires an applicant to have all of the money on hand before its application may be approved.

Immediately after the New London, Tex., disaster I submitted a resolution asking the Public Works Administration to make a report to the Senate concerning the applications received for building schools which applications were based upon hazardous conditions of schools now being used; and a report, dated May 11 of this year, was made by the Administrator to the Senate, and is printed as a Senate document. It shows that 1,178 applications have been received from schools in hazardous condition, such schools being distributed throughout every State in the Union except one.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest to the Senator that he ought to state in the body of the concurrent resolution the particular character of these projects, because if the preamble should all be stricken out, under the resolution as prepared, there would be nothing to indicate the kind of loans the Senator has in mind.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My understanding is that in a concurrent resolution the preamble is not stricken out. If agreed to, the measure does not become a law, and it is not drawn as a law. It simply is a concurrent resolution of the Senate and the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. My suggestion would be, I think, in the interest of orderly procedure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I appreciate the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas, and before we get through I shall ask leave to amend the concurrent resolution in order to include in the bill the language suggested by him. I thank the Senator from Texas for his suggestion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I also suggest to the Senator from Washington that the objection which the concurrent resolution seeks to meet is merely a regulation of the Public Works Administration. It is not a law. Is that not correct?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. So the Public Works Administrator can, if he chooses, do what he is requested to do in this instance without the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The purpose of the concurrent resolution is to have Congress request certain things to be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. Its purpose is to request a certain officer to do something which, perhaps, we ourselves ought to do in the first instance.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The original law gave to the President and to the Administrator certain powers. In the exercise of those powers the President and the Administrator have made certain regulations; and in this concurrent resolution the Congress is asking that the President and the Administrator relax those regulations so far as this particular project is concerned.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Washington well knows that at the time a great many of these applications were filed some of the local school districts held elections with respect to bond issues, or resorted to other means for raising 55 percent of the amount of the cost of the project. All those steps were taken in anticipation of a 45-percent grant. The Senator stated that if the concurrent resolution were adopted and met the approval of the President and the Administrator of Public Works, the applications would be approved on the basis and on the conditions that were laid down at the time the applications were filed.

Does not the Senator think it might be well to amend the concurrent resolution in some way to assure that additional restrictions or changes will not be adopted by the Administrator of Public Works so as to make it impossible for the school districts to secure the funds applied for by them? For example, in page 2, in line 5, the concurrent resolution requests that the applicant be not required to expend exclusively for relief labor the amount granted. A new regulation might be promulgated which would require 75 percent of the funds to go for relief labor; and some of the most meritorious of these projects are in communities where absolutely no skilled relief labor is available.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me say to the Senator from Georgia that I purposely limited the concurrent resolution as I have done because I did not want to go back into the basic legislation under which authority was given. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], earlier in the day, submitted a resolution on the basic subject of P. W. A., which takes care of the problems which the Senator from Georgia suggests.

Mr. RUSSELL. That resolution might not be agreed to, and I am confident that the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington will be agreed to. I should like to see the Senator take all possible precautions to see that these school projects are completed under the terms that existed prior to the change in regulations.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the Senator wants to offer such an amendment, I certainly shall cordially join with him in urging it. If he will suggest the proper wording within the next few minutes, I shall be glad to have the amendment made.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think we should at least strike out the word "exclusively", in line 5, on page 2.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No, Mr. President; that would not meet the situation, because the purpose of that phraseology is to do away with the present regulation. If there were added the words "on the basis of the regulations of the Public Works Administration at the time the applications were filed", I think that would take care of the situation.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Does the list which has been made out, and which is referred to in the preamble, cover all approved P. W. A. school projects?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It covers all approved school projects which have as their basis the fact that their present school facilities constitute hazards to the lives or health or safety of the children.

Mr. POPE. Is it the understanding of the Senator that there are some projects which have been approved on another basis?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I cannot answer that question, but I assume that to be true. In other words, there may be an entirely new school project which does not involve any present conditions at all. I assume that there are such instances throughout the country.

Mr. POPE. Will the Senator state the number included in this list?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The number is 1,178.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In the original public-works program and in the building of the many schoolhouses which have been erected all over the country under that program, the question of hazard was not involved.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. This is the first time the question of hazard has been involved at all in the treatment of the question.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator's concurrent resolution merely picks out those particular schoolhouses and seeks to have them removed from the regulations which now exist?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 5, I move to strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words "and that said applications be granted on the basis of regulations and conditions in force and effect at the time of filing such applications."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has submitted an amendment. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the clerk state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, before the period, it is proposed to insert:

And that said applications be granted on the basis of regulations and conditions in force and effect at the time of filing such applications.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia just what is the meaning of the amendment and what is contemplated by the reference to "regulations and conditions."

Mr. RUSSELL. I merely sought some safeguard against the promulgation of new regulations and conditions that would make impossible the completion of the projects by those who have gone forward in good faith and issued bonds or raised funds for the purpose of completing schoolhouses or building new schoolhouses on the basis of 55 percent provided by the sponsors of the project and 45 percent provided from Federal funds, for which arrangement I believe the Senator from Kentucky was responsible when the life of the P. W. A. was once before extended. Under the resolution as drawn there is nothing to suggest to the Administrator of Public Works that it would not be improper to issue a new regulation requiring that 75 percent of the labor involved in constructing a schoolhouse be taken from relief rolls or to issue other regulations imposing new conditions on the sponsors of the project.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. RUSSELL. What I am seeking to do is merely to restore it to the normal course prescribed for P. W. A. applications which all these school districts were expected to follow at the time they filed their original applications.

Mr. BARKLEY. I inquire if the resolution is limited to schools, or does it apply to other projects?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is limited to schools which have as a basis of their applications the hazardous condition of their present facilities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have in mind, for instance, a courthouse for which the people went to the expense of holding an election to enable bonds to be issued to the extent of $55,000, on the assurance that they would get $45,000 from the P. W. A. to enable them to erect a $100,000 courthouse. I can appreciate the fact that a courthouse probably does not stand on the same basis as a schoolhouse, and yet there are many such public buildings in the country the sponsors of which have gone to the extent of providing their 55 percent of the total expense, and I wondered whether there were so many of them that it would not also be wise to include them.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that there have been numerous suggestions to me that certain other projects should be added, but I feel that the particular subject of schools should so appeal to the Administrator and to the President that when the Congress adopts a resolution—merely a concurrent resolution—presenting the idea of Congress upon this one subject there will be a very great possibility of securing the acquiescence of the President and the Administrator. As a matter of fact, on Tuesday of this week the leader of the majority of the House at the other end of the Capitol indicated that the President was willing to relax the rules so far as projects affecting schools in hazardous condition were concerned. I am fearful that if we tried to take in everything else we should defeat the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia one other question. He fixes the "regulations and conditions in force and effect at the time of the filing of such applications" as the basis upon which to make a determination. I was wondering whether it would make any material difference if the words "at the time of approval of the applications by the State administrators" were substituted for the words now appearing in the resolution. Of course, the mere filing of the application carries with it no obligation on the part of the Federal Government, but the approval of the Government agent in the State does carry with it a large degree of obligation.

Mr. RUSSELL. The suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky is an admirable one, and I will be delighted to accept it and modify my amendment accordingly. It may be that some one or more of such applications were filed at a time when the projects were being carried forward on the basis of 70 percent of funds supplied by the sponsors and 30 percent by the Government, whereas I am quite sure that if the amendment should be modified as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky there would be no project that would fall within that class.

Mr. BARKLEY. It strikes me that would probably provide greater uniformity in the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia accepts the modification of his amendment.

Mr. McADOO and Mr. POPE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the pending resolution; but I know of several instances of hospital projects being in the same condition as that which affects schools. While the hospitals so situated are not so numerous as are the schools, I know of several cases involving hospitals where bonds have been voted upon the assurance that the contribution on the part of the Government would be the same as in the case of schools; and they are left really in rather a tragic position—one in particular that I have in mind in my State—because there has been noncompliance on the part of the administration with conditions under which the bonds were voted.

I suggest that there be added at the appropriate place the words "and hospitals", so as to provide for hospitals as well as schools. Would the Senator from Washington be willing to accept such an amendment?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I would not be willing to accept such an amendment, for the reason I suggested to the Senator from Kentucky a few moments ago. There have been a large number of projects suggested to be added to the resolution; but if we add too many things, the resolution itself is going to be fruitless and of no avail. The President is not going to give in as to everything we might have in mind or might suggest.

Furthermore, with reference to hospitals, while it is true that, to a certain extent, there has been a recognition by cities and States of the responsibility for the maintenance of hospitals, there has never been in this country the recognition of that responsibility to the extent that we have recognized it so far as schools are concerned. Everybody agrees that it is the responsibility of Government to maintain schools, but there is a considerable dispute and debate as to whether or not it is the responsibility of Government to maintain hospitals. It seems to me that it would be extremely unfortunate to try to add hospitals and become involved in a debate with those who do not think that the maintenance of hospitals is a public obligation. Therefore, I would not be willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I may say that I think it is generally recognized as one of the primary duties of government to help hospitals in poor financial condition take care of suffering people. I can think of no higher obligation than that. Not only have we municipal hospitals but we have county hospitals and various other kinds of hospitals, including private hospitals. I imagine there are not many cases of hospitals having made application for P. W. A. grants, but those cases which do exist, where the projects have been approved just as those for schools have been approved, I think should be included in the resolution.

I do not believe that the President, if he should act on the suggestion now contained in the resolution, would hesitate to act because hospitals were included. Certainly in my State there are no great hospitals that need any assistance. I am referring particularly to some of the hospitals in rural districts, in small communities which are involved in the situation which I have described. I hope, therefore, that the Senator will be willing to accept such an amendment as I have suggested.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am sorry that I cannot do so. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] has introduced a separate resolution covering hospitals. I succeeded in talking him out of the idea of an amendment to the pending concurrent resolution. So he has introduced a separate resolution affecting hospitals. I should like to ask the Senator from California to join with the Senator from Idaho in that resolution.

Mr. McADOO. If I thought that the amendment suggested by me would interfere with the resolution of the Senator from Washington, I would not present it, but, under the circumstances, I should like to have my amendment voted on.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, with reference to that point, the persuasive Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] convinced me that the adoption of such an amendment as that suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] might endanger the pending resolution, and because the resolution itself is desirable, and seems to be based on the particular list to which it refers, it seems to me there is some reason for his opposition.

I may call the attention of the Senator from California to Senate Joint Resolution 149, the preamble of which covers more than hospitals. It relates to such cases as the Senator from Kentucky referred to a while ago; in fact, to all cases where the people have voted bonds in perfect good faith and reliance without any notice of any change of the regulations. The resolution to which I refer relates to all non-Federal projects as to which funds have been voted or provision has been made for the money to be furnished by the municipality or other unit that was to furnish it, in good faith and in reliance upon the regulations. I should like very much to have the help of the Senator from California when that resolution comes before the Senate, but the Senator from Washington has persuaded me that it should not be presented here for fear of endangering the resolution now under consideration.

Mr. McADOO. Would the Senator from Washington be willing to accept an amendment if I should restrict it to one exigent case of a county hospital in California? [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I have a similar case in New Mexico. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from New Mexico says he has a similar case in New Mexico. I am sorry, but I cannot accept such an amendment as that suggested by the Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. Very well. In the circumstances I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I know that my colleague, of course, is very painfully aware, as I suspect all other Senators are, of the conditions relating to schools all over the country. In the State of Washington, despite the fact that vast sums have been spent on the public-school system, there has been an increasing need for more buildings, and in a number of instances we have had some pretty tragic experiences. A little school at Winthrop, with which I know my colleague is familiar, is in a crowded and insanitary building. A great many new people have come into that section. In that district only 58 percent of the taxes levied can be collected because of the difficulties the farmers have encountered there, as they have mostly only small holdings.

There is another typical example which I think shows the necessity for protecting our school system, for that the schools are the bulwark of real Americanism we cannot and should not overlook in these trying times. A general election was held in a particular school district in Seattle in November 1936. It was expected at that time that the Government would be able to contribute 45 percent. Unless that is done the plan will have to be abandoned and the little district will be denied the possibility of the school. I rather gather that there is enough money in the fund now to take care of a considerable number, if not all, of the necessitous cases, and I wish to ask my colleague if the figures he has available from Mr. Ickes indicate whether most of the projects which have been approved thus far by the P. W. A. can be taken care of?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There are ample funds in the revolving fund to take care of all the projects.

Mr. BONE. I sincerely hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I was interested in the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] and the amendment which he proposed intended to include hospitals within the terms of the resolution. As I understand, the Senator from California did not really offer an amendment, or if he did he has withdrawn it.

My peculiar interest is that in the State of New Mexico, in the town in which I reside, a hospital project was initiated, and bonds were voted by the municipality 6 months or more ago. The project has been approved by the P. W. A. under the original plan of 55–45, but because of insufficient funds the allocations have not actually been made. I believe the bonds have been sold. They are lying there, and have been for several months, drawing interest. I think it would be quite unfair now to change that basis, or to withdraw and not permit the hospital to be built. Because it is located in my home town I perhaps have more than ordinary interest in it. I conferred with the Senator from Washington about including hospitals within the terms of his resolution, but, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] said, his persuasiveness induced me to yield on that point. I have been hopeful that other plans might materialize. I am in hearty sympathy with the resolution which relates to schools where hazards exist.

Yesterday I happened to read, in the record of the proceedings of the House on Tuesday, an interesting statement made by the majority floor leader, as follows:

> The President readily agreed, and I am authorized to say, that he thought that where communities had voted bond issues, many of them had sold the bonds and the money was lying idle and the community was paying interest on it; that he thought each and every one of those projects that were sound and in proper form ought to be taken care of, and that he would do that.

Under that statement of the floor leader of the House my belief is that projects, such as the one involving the hospital I have mentioned, will be taken care of, provided the relief bill is enacted into law. Nevertheless, I shall be very glad to support the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] because it would be a clear indication of the thought and wish of the Congress as to all these projects, such as the one the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] mentioned, the courthouse, where the bonds have been actually voted and the plans all made to carry out the construction of the building on the original basis of 45–55. I think the sentiment of Congress now is that it is not quite fair to those communities for the Government to withdraw its support.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, one reason I had for being so insistent upon the separation of the question of hazardous school conditions from the other questions is that I am hopeful that by Congress itself taking action recognizing the problem and by the President recognizing the problem, we may have a better recognition throughout the country of the necessity for the protection of the lives of children in our schools.

I wish to take the time of the Senate for just a few moments to read an article which appeared on the 25th of April of this year in the New York Herald Tribune, written by T. Alfred Fleming, Director of Conservation, of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Mr. Fleming is not a local school official, he is not a man who desires to obtain some sort of contract for the construction of a school building, but he represents the National Board of Fire Underwriters. He is discussing the question of school hazards. From his article I read as follows:

PUPILS AREN'T FIREPROOF

By T. Alfred Fleming

In the reams of fact and opinion written about that Texas school disaster in the past few weeks one rudimentary detail has been beclouded by the sheer pathos of it all.

If the explosion had occurred 15 minutes later few, if any, would have died. If it had come an hour earlier—before the lower grades had been dismissed—the life loss would have been double what it was.

Since then parents in a thousand cities have thanked God that their children are not subject to the hazards of a school situated in the middle of an oil field. But to those parents I want to repeat what I have been saying during 20 years of school inspections: The factor which has spared us more tragedies like that in New London—the factor which made that one so terrible; the factor which sooner or later will give us another one like it—is dumb luck.

With two-thirds of our schools firetraps, we have five school fires a day in this country. Yet the main reason why it took until 1937 to convert one of them into a wholesale slaughterhouse is the whimsical fact that four-fifths of these fires originate when the schools are not in session.

Dumb luck, in short. Remember that cold fact when nervous inquiries in your city evoke the stock assurances that "our school buildings are the last word in construction" or "we have excellent fire drills twice a month."

Both statements may be indisputable. Yet I can count at least 125 school fires where damages have ranged from $100,000 to more than a million—and buildings must be pretty nearly "the last word" in order to roll up such large losses. Likewise, I can recall such graphic cases as the Peabody School in Massachusetts, which had rehearsed its fire drill only the day before a blaze claimed 22 lives, or the unforgettable Collinwood case in Ohio, where 176 lives were lost before my own eyes despite the fact that pupils were marching out in drill formation—until they encountered a door which wouldn't open!

I've seen brand-new million-dollar buildings where the panic bolts on the exit doors couldn't be budged by a horse, not to mention a dozen where fire-escape doors were padlocked while classes were in session. I've seen janitors who thought the fire extinguishers in the hall were insect sprays, principals whose idea of a fire drill was to notify the pupils 10 minutes in advance that one was to be staged, even a board of education superintendent who forced the resignation of a fire chief who dared point out the flagrant hazards in his schools.

I've gone through a city of 40 schools to find nearly 200 inexcusable life hazards, such as the excessive storage of gasoline in the buildings, 30 defective emergency doors, and the like. And after each new shock I thank God that we are so lucky!

To be sure, there are lots of schools where the factor of luck has been minimized by including approved fire-control principles. Once, in a New Hampshire school, while the students listened to a fire-prevention talk a blaze in the basement was extinguished by a sprinkler without the knowledge of anybody but the janitor.

What a contrast to the experience of Cleveland, S. C., where a fire starting during the commencement exercises ran up a death toll of 77!

In one instance luck failed; in the other they refused to depend upon luck at all. Yet there aren't a thousand schools in the whole country equipped with automatic sprinklers.

"The buildings are fireproof", is the explanation. But the contents aren't—and neither are the pupils.

Even though you paid a million dollars for your school, it's a firetrap if you haven't got fire control built into it—and the security of your children depends upon luck. And luck changes.

If you dislike the sound of that, have a group of competent engineers make a fire inspection that will show whether your schools are fire safe and what's to be done if they aren't. With the whole summer ahead, there is ample time to correct grievous hazards which may, if your luck changes, spawn a disaster worse than the Texas catastrophe.

Mr. President, let me say further that I feel that by the recognition in this group of cases of the desirability of the Government being of some assistance in helping school districts where fire hazards exist, it may be possible for us to be of some assistance in the general problem of fire hazards in all the schools of the country. I do not say that the Federal Government should take over the job of building schools all over the country; but we can set an example to the school districts that have the money and show the interest which the Federal Government has in this problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, after the word "labor" and the period, it is proposed to insert "and that said applications be granted on the basis of regulations and conditions in force and effect at the time of approval of the applications by the State administrators."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just a few moments ago the discussion turned to the subject of hospitals. I happened to ask the Public Works Administrator to furnish me a list of all pending hospital projects under the P. W. A. I have that list here; and I think all Senators will be interested in knowing that there are pending at this time 118 hospital projects in some 37 States, including 1 here in the District of Columbia.

I ask that this list be published in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list is as follows:

Summary of all non-Federal pending applications for projects pertaining to hospitals, as of May 24, 1937

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution, as amended.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works be requested to grant such of the applications above described as may meet the engineering and financial requirements of the Public Works Administration without requiring that the applicant have on hand prior to the granting of the application all of the funds necessary for the completion of the project, and without requiring that the sum or sums granted to the applicant be expended exclusively for relief labor and that said applications be granted on the basis of regulations and conditions in force and effect at the time of approval of the applications by the State administrators.

The preamble was agreed to.

BENEFICIAL ACTIVITIES OF THE BUREAU OF MINES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, because of my years of service with the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining, because of the preeminence of the State of Pennsylvania as a producer of minerals, and because of the fact that I spent some of the earlier years of my life in a coal-mining community, I desire again to address the Senate on the vital importance of the mineral industry to the Nation, and the excellent work rendered by the Bureau of Mines in encouraging the development of our mineral resources, and in making safer the lot of the American miner.

I have previously endeavored to stress the dependence of the Nation on its extensive mineral industries; to emphasize the fact that our far-reaching mineral empire excels that of any other country; and to make it plain that the United States, if deprived of its mineral supplies, could not endure for a day. But this is a story that needs frequent retelling. The people of the United States, the press of the country, even Congress itself, I reluctantly say, seem to have but a slight conception of this situation.

Mr. President, each and every one of us depends absolutely on the multitudinous products of the mines, quarries, and oil wells. These products are necessary in the cooking and service of our meals; in the manufacture of bed, bath, and almost every other home furnishing; for all manner of transport on land and sea and in the air; in the production of heat, light, and power; for telephonic, telegraphic, and radio communication; in the construction of homes, highways, factories, and bridges; even in the providing of our last resting places; yet we are accustomed to think of minerals only in the vaguest way. We take for granted our great mineral industries, which often need our strong support in order to progress, or even to survive. In the matter of congressional appropriations the urgent needs of the mineral industries have, for some reason hard to fathom, been sadly neglected. The Bureau of Mines, charged with fostering the development of these industries, receives about the same yearly appropriation that is given for the study of bugs or "dope" or fish.

Power is, of course, the vital force that keeps the wheels of industry spinning; and power is chiefly derived from the mineral fuels, coal and petroleum, and from harnessed and controlled water. Power, however, can only be utilized, to any considerable extent, through mechanisms and devices that convert its energy into motion. Such mechanisms and devices—propelling pistons, revolving shafts and gears, and electric transmission lines—are made of metals. Thus we see that minerals, the fuels and the metals, through engineering science, have become the very foundation of industrial civilization.

Mr. President, mineral utilization has brought more human benefit in the United States than in any other country. Our intelligent, fearless, and enterprising pioneers were ingenious in discovering and inventing new and better ways of doing things, and the results of their efforts, applied in the utilization of minerals, had made America preeminent in mineral technology before the beginning of the present century.

The achievements of our mining technologists shaped the destiny of the Nation. The territory was so large that its permanent unification under a single Government would have been practically impossible had it not been for the railroads and telegraph lines, which linked its parts together, and but for the utilization of the supplies of metals needed to build these lines and of the fuel to operate them. This gigantic task was made possible by inventive American engineers and courageous American capital.

Our far-flung network of railroads, once constructed, must, of course, be provided with vast quantities of freight to furnish the bulk of their revenues. Today minerals and their derivatives provide practically three-fourths of the freight tonnage carried by the railroads, and more than one-half of their revenue. Add to this the tremendous additional tonnage created from the outputs of smelters, refineries, lime, cement, and brick works, and one begins to realize, at least to some extent, how much our huge transportation network depends upon minerals.

Mr. President, more recently the astounding development of mineral oil and the utilization of its products have created a new epoch of rapid transport by automobiles, busses, and trucks, and these have been the cause of the rapid construction of our wonderful highway system.

The nonmetallic minerals, too, are of great importance. They insulate and save heat energy, line our furnaces, form our crucibles, insulate our spark plugs, form the bulk of industrial and commercial structures, and surface our roads and streets. By themselves they constitute an enormous industry, and now create more new wealth each year than the metals and only slightly less than coal or petroleum.

I may state just a few facts that will afford some idea of what minerals mean to our country. Of the entire wealth of the United States, conservatively valued in 1932 at more than $163,000,000,000, between 60 and 70 percent had its origin in the mineral industries. The Nation ranks first in the world in lead, zinc, and copper output, and in the consumption of metals of all kinds. We consume nearly half the world's pig iron, more than a third of its coal, and three-fourths of its petroleum. In the past 25 years our mineral output increased in annual value by 77 percent, whereas farm products rose only 17 percent. For 10 years before the depression, the minerals that were produced were worth, on the average, five and one-third billion dollars a year. In a 5-year period, mineral producers paid almost six times as much as farmers in Federal taxes. In normal times at least 25,000,000 people are directly or indirectly dependent for their livelihood upon extraction and processing of mineral products. Coal mining gives employment to more men than any single manufacturing industry. Mineral substances are produced in 2,024 counties, or approximately two-thirds of the counties in the United States. The population of the counties in which mining is the predominant industry totaled more than 40,000,000 in 1930. In my State of Pennsylvania alone there is an army of 400,000 miners. Yet Federal appropriations for the Bureau of Mines during a recent 5-year period were only about one-fiftieth of the appropriations made for agriculture.

Mr. President, the Bureau of Mines, which is part of the Interior Department of the United States Government, devotes its entire time to problems of the mineral industries—to the problems of how to get the best mineral "crop" with the least harvesting expense. The Bureau studies and describes the best mining methods and the best machinery used, so that the operator of some other mine may be able to use them and produce his minerals at a lower cost. This reduces the price that all of us have to pay when we use these products in our daily life.

Some minerals, such as stone, coal, sand, and gravel, are ready for use as soon as they come from the earth, except, perhaps, for making them the size needed or removing some slight impurity. But other minerals are only a small part of the ores in which they are found, so the ores must be crushed and concentrated to get rid of great and useless quantities of waste rock. Sometimes, as with lead and zinc ores of the Mississippi Valley region, this concentration is done by shaking the crushed ore in water, allowing the heavier minerals to settle to the bottom, where they are collected and saved. Sometimes, as in separating copper minerals, the ore is very finely pulverized and churned in water with air, oil, and other so-called reagents, to form millions of bubbles, which stick to the mineral particles, rather than the rock, and float them. The miners call this "flotation." Sometimes an electric magnet is used to pull out grains of iron ore or some other magnetic mineral. And sometimes, as in the cyanide process for extracting gold, chemicals are added to the crushed ore to dissolve the gold but leave the rock as waste.

Mr. President, all of these and other methods have been studied by the Bureau of Mines to find out the best ways of using them with any particular kind of ore, to ascertain if some improvement in the method cannot be found that will increase the amount of mineral saved and thus prevent waste of resources which, once used, are gone and cannot be replaced, and to test the various kinds of machines in use and find out which one works best under given conditions and why.

In most of the minerals from which metals are obtained the metals are combined with oxygen or sulphur or other things, and so the minerals cannot serve us, even after they are concentrated, until the metals are gotten out of them in a blast furnace or a smelter. Here, too, the Bureau studies ways and methods in order to make them better. But the Bureau's metallurgists do not stop here. They are constantly studying the metals themselves to find out the things that make them harder, tougher, or stronger; to see what happens when they are combined to make alloys, and what new and better properties the different alloys have; and to find out other facts that may show some new use, some cheaper method of production, or some way in which a cheaper alloy can do the work of some other more expensive metal.

Mr. President, petroleum, natural gas, and articles made from them furnish more than a third of the entire value of the country's mineral production. Uncle Sam's Mining Bureau studies the ways in which petroleum and natural gas occur in the ground and the ways of drilling oil wells, so it can recommend methods that will save waste when gas or oil is struck in opening a new field and that will prevent water from getting in and reducing the amount of petroleum that can be gotten from the ground. In one oil field alone, Blackwell, Okla., methods recommended by the Bureau prevented the waste of at least $20,000,000 worth of natural gas, to say nothing of the danger from fire, if this gas had been turned loose in the air. Natural gas is an important household and factory fuel in many places in the United States, but it is also a source of gasoline. The Bureau of Mines was one of the leaders in the work of finding means to get gasoline from the gas, and as a direct result of its studies the amount of gasoline that can be obtained from this source has been increased by more than 30 percent.

Mr. President, the Bureau has also made engineering studies in most of the large oil fields of the country to find ways of increasing the recovery of petroleum, for it is not possible to get all of the oil out of the ground even with the best methods in use today; sometimes as much as half of it must be left behind. Some of this work is very technical, such as measuring the speed with which oil or gas will travel through sand such as that in which these minerals occur, or finding out the amount of gas that will dissolve in the oil, or separating oil and water that are mixed in an "emulsion", as it is called, while other work has to do with piping compressed air or compressed natural gas back into the well to force the oil up to the surface. But the purpose of it all is to save our national resources of petroleum and gas and to make sure that for years to come we may have gasoline for our automobiles and have the hundreds of other things that are made from crude petroleum.

At the refinery crude petroleum is made into gasoline, kerosene, and other things by fractional distillation. The Bureau's studies of refining have shown many ways of cheapening the process, as well as ways of making better products. Two engineers of the Bureau of Mines invented a method by which the crude oil is "cracked" by distilling it under pressure and at a higher temperature, and by which a much greater amount of gasoline is made from the oil. Without this and other cracking processes, which make it possible to get three or four times more gasoline from a barrel of crude oil than we were able to get 25 years ago, we would not have enough gasoline at anything like the price we pay today to run the 28,000,000 automobiles now in use.

Some natural gas—chiefly that found in certain areas in Texas—contains small amounts of helium, which is the only gas, except hydrogen, that can be used to make balloons and dirigibles float. Helium will not burn or explode, while hydrogen is very inflammable, and therefore dangerous, because of the chance that it may be ignited by fire or even by lightning. The memory of the terrible disaster that befell the German dirigible Hindenburg, which used hydrogen as a floating agent, is still quite vivid. Before the World War all airships were floated with hydrogen, and helium was a curiosity that had been made only in very small amounts and at a cost of more than $2,000 a cubic foot. The Bureau of Mines first found out which natural-gas fields had helium in them, and then worked out a process for getting the helium cheaply from the natural gas. Today in its plant near Amarillo, Tex., the Bureau is able to make all the helium the Army and Navy need to float their great airships and at a cost of less than 1 cent a cubic foot.

Mr. President, nobody who looks after a furnace likes to carry out more ashes than he has to, and everybody who buys coal likes to get as much heat for his money as he can. This is why the Bureau of Mines has analyzed more than 200,000 samples of coal; and these analyses, which show the amount of ash and other impurity in the coal, as well as its heating value, make it possible for the buyer of coal to know exactly what he is getting.

In order to get the most heat from coal it must be burned in the right way and in the right kind of a furnace. So the Bureau has studied these things, too, on battleships, in large power plants, and in small household furnaces. The knowledge gained saves hundreds of thousands of dollars in the country's yearly coal bill.

Mr. President, we as a nation use or consume large amounts of more than 150 minerals each year. Without exact figures as to what this consumption has been in the past, our mineral industries would not be able to plan intelligently to meet our needs today and in years to come. The Bureau of Mines supplies this demand for facts by collecting and publishing figures showing production, value, and distribution of all the many important minerals. Some of these figures are published every week or every month, so that businessmen may have up-to-the-minute facts, while others are published once a year to give a larger picture. All these reports are widely used by industry to keep in touch with the mineral markets and to help in solving the problem of how or when to supply us with coal, metals, gasoline, building materials, and all the other mineral products.

Someone has said that the most precious thing that comes out of a mine is not coal, or iron, or even gold, but the miner himself—which is just another way of saying that human life is more important than "great possessions." The Bureau of Mines, from its very beginning, has held this point of view, and a large part of its work has always been to see that the miner does come out of the mine safe and sound. In fact, one of the chief reasons for the creation of the Bureau in 1910 was the strong feeling that something must be done to prevent loss of life in coal-mine explosions, such as those that shocked the Nation by killing more than 1,100 men in a single year, 1907.

Mr. President, at first it was thought that these disasters were all due to a gas called methane, or firedamp, which comes out of the coal bed in many mines and which can cause an explosion if set on fire by a flame or an electric spark. One way of preventing this is to sweep the gas out of the mine at once with a current of air. But this cannot always be done surely in all the holes and corners of the mine; so the Bureau recommends that "closed lights"—such as electric lamps, or safety lamps in which the flame is guarded by a very fine wire screen—shall be used in all coal mines; that gunpowder shall not be used at all in blasting down the coal; and that blasting shall be done only with certain kinds of dynamite which the Bureau has tested and found to be free from the danger of starting an explosion of firedamp. The Bureau also recommends that no electrical machinery shall be used in the places where the coal is dug, unless the machinery has been thoroughly tested to make sure that it will not spark; and that any electrical machinery that cannot pass these tests, and so cannot be approved as "permissible", shall be used only in places where the ventilating air current is fresh from the outside, and is not mixed with gas picked up in the mine. All of these recommendations are now followed in most mines where methane is found.

It was discovered later that very fine coal dust, made while coal is being dug, is just as explosive as gas if it is stirred up and mixed with the right amount of air; but the Bureau has proved, also, that a coal-dust explosion can be prevented if powdered limestone, or some other rock dust, is mixed with the finely pulverized coal. The studies of this subject were made at a coal mine specially opened by the Bureau, and equipped with measuring instruments for this work. It is the only mine in the world that is owned and used by a government for no other purpose than to make scientific studies of things that have to do with safety in mining.

Mr. President, nearly 2,000 large-scale tests have been made at this mine; some in which gas, gas and coal dust, or coal dust alone, were deliberately allowed to explode, and others in which rock dust was used to prevent the explosion, or to stop its travel through the mine after the explosion had started. This mine is also used to test methods and appliances for putting out mine fires; the use of dynamite in blasting; the use of safety lamps in air containing methane; the use of apparatus and masks which miners wear when going into air they could not safely breathe; and to measure the strength of pillars of coal or rock that are used to support a mine roof.

Partly, at least, as a result of the Bureau's work, the lurid headlines of the daily newspaper of 10 to 20 years ago telling of coal-mine disasters are seldom found in the daily press of today or for the past several years. Coal mines continue to have accidents, just as our streets and highways, our industrial plants, even our homes, continue to have accidents, many of them resulting in death. However, accident occurrence and the accident rate in coal-mining are being slowly but very definitely reduced, while accidents and the accident rate in the United States at large are increasing.

Twenty-five years ago, five or more deaths were occurring every year for every million tons of coal produced. For the past 4 years, for every million tons of coal produced, fewer than three fatalities were caused. There are now numerous coal mines employing large numbers of workers and producing large quantities of coal without the occurrence of any kind of lost-time accident for months. Dozens of mines have even operated a year or more without a lost-time accident, and a few of our coal mines have operated 2 or more years without causing a single lost-time accident.

Mr. President, mine-explosion disasters are all but a thing of the past, as may be seen from the following figures:

During the 4 years 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910, the coal mines of the United States had 67 major explosion and fire disasters—a major disaster being one in which five or more persons are killed—and these 67 disasters caused 2,249 deaths. In the 4 years 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 our coal mines had 12 major coal-mine disasters, and they caused 101 deaths. Hence, for every disaster in the past 4 years there were nearly six in the 4 years 1907–1910, and for every fatality from major disasters in our coal mines in the last 5 years there were 22 in the 4-year period 1907–1910. To put it in another way, major disasters have been reduced 75 percent in number, and the fatalities from them have been reduced more than 95 percent.

In spite of this, however, mining is still a dangerous job. The miner has to work in close quarters underground, and usually without enough light to see the dangers that surround him. A slab of rock may fall and crush him. He may be hurt in riding on the cars that carry ore or coal, or he may be squeezed between a car and the wall of a tunnel. He has to handle dynamite daily and constantly—and dynamite could not be what it is, and what it must be, without being a dangerous work-shift partner, especially in a small and half-dark chamber underground. He has to handle heavy materials and tools, and is often hurt in doing so. When his tools, or the machines in the mine, are driven by electricity, he must always be on guard against electric shock, especially in mines where the very walls drip water, and the dangers of short-circuit and imperfect insulation are always present.

Mr. President, the Bureau of Mines has studied all these dangers, and has recommended ways of preventing the accidents they cause. It has trained nearly 1,000,000 persons in first-aid and safety methods, which not only teach the miner what to do for an injured buddy in the first important minutes after an accident when doing the right thing will often save a hand, or a leg, or even a life, but also teach him that his carelessness may mean injury or death for others, even if he himself should escape.

The Bureau has its own trained crews of rescue men who are sent at once to mine disasters in special railroad cars or special automobile trucks which carry all the apparatus and equipment the men may need in this recovery work. The Bureau has examined hundreds of mines to find out whether any unsafe practices are used, and, if so, to recommend ways of correcting them.

Mr. President, I wish to repeat a statement which I made to the Senate some time ago, that every year in the United States the hideous monster that we call accident disables nearly 10,000,000 persons. If all this pain and anguish were concentrated in my own State of Pennsylvania, it would mean that every citizen in this, the second State in the Union, would be laid low. The Nation's annual accident toll concentrated in Pittsburgh would cripple for life half the persons in that splendid metropolis, or it would kill every person in the bustling city of Allentown.

At a time when foreign dispatches carry news of armed legions and bristling ultimatums, it is refreshing to think of the life-saving activities of an organization like the Bureau of Mines. In pleasing contrast to the march of bayonet-bearing millions to the roll of the drums, I offer you the leisurely stride of the peaceful army of underground workers returning to the loved ones at home safe and sound in body and limb.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, I submit that we should not be niggardly in the consideration of appropriations for the Bureau of Mines. Economy in Government expenditures is, of course, necessary; but let it not be achieved at the risk of the millions who toil beneath the earth's surface to produce the minerals that we must have if our national culture, our splendid business organization, and, indeed, our very lives, are to go on.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the following nominations:

Chester E. Dimick to be a professor with the rank of commander in the Coast Guard, to take effect from date of oath;

Chief Boatswain (L) Frank E. Allison to be a district commander with the rank of lieutenant in the Coast Guard, from date of oath;

Commander Stanley V. Parker to be captain with rank from May 1, 1937;

Lt. Comdr. Joseph Greenspun to be commander with rank from May 1, 1937; and District Commander William M. Wolff to be district commander with the rank of lieutenant commander from January 31, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of L. Elizabeth Dunn to be postmaster at Conchas Dam, N. Mex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 7, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 3 (legislative day of June 1), 1937

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

T. D. Webb, of Tennessee, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for a term of 6 years from July 22, 1937. (Reappointment.)

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

James M. Landis, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1942. (Reappointment.)

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Ron Stephens, of Oklahoma, to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Oklahoma, vice W. S. Key, resigned. (This nomination is submitted at this time for the purpose of correcting an error in the nomination as submitted to the Senate on May 24, 1937.)

Joseph Newman Alderson, of West Virginia, to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for West Virginia.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

John O'Keefe, of Pembina, N. Dak., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 34, with headquarters at Pembina, N. Dak. (Reappointment.)

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Dr. Dwight K. Shellman to be assistant dental surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Victor H. Krulak	Robert E. Hommel
George C. Ruffin, Jr.	Frank C. Tharin
Harold O. Deakin	Henry W. G. Vadnais
Maurice T. Ireland	John W. Sapp, Jr.
Samuel R. Shaw	Samuel F. Zeiler
Robert S. Fairweather	Lawrence B. Clark
Joseph P. Fuchs	Lehman H. Kleppinger
Henry W. Buse, Jr.	Floyd B. Parks
Bennet G. Powers	John E. Weber

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 3 (legislative day of June 1), 1937

POSTMASTER

NEW MEXICO

L. Elizabeth Dunn, Conchas Dam.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate June 3 (legislative day of June 1), 1937

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Ron Stevens to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Oklahoma.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, we pray that the silent ministry of Thy spirit may have a place in our thoughts; in quiet and in confidence may this fellowship be our strength today. Give us the help and the undergirding that we need, and we shall have but few distractions as we follow the path of duty. In burden bearing, in temptation, call us to the realities which abide—godliness, unselfishness, and the riches of a wholesome influence. These make up the splendor of character which gives the radiance of the divine to our actions. These will live when the god of covetousness and the chaff of worldliness shall be no more.

Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name.

For the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum until a message can be received from the President of the United States?

Mr. RANKIN. I withhold the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker, but I think we should have a quorum present to hear the message.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on June 2, 1937, the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1280. An act for the relief of Horace Hutcheson, a minor;

H. R. 4550. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.;

H. R. 4655. An act to accept the cession by the State of Arkansas of jurisdiction over all lands now or hereafter included within the Hot Springs National Park, Ark., and for other purposes;

H. R. 5177. An act to declare the Benton Harbor Canal at and above the west line of Ninth Street, Benton Harbor, Mich., a nonnavigable stream;

H. R. 5468. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.;

H. R. 5579. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Mississippi to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pearl River at or near Jackson, in Hinds County, Miss.;

H. R. 5595. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of two bridges, one across a part of Lake Michigan at or near the entrance to the Chicago River, Ill., and the other across the Michigan Canal or Ogden Slip, in city of Chicago, Ill.;

H. R. 5694. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges across the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Youghiogheny Rivers, in the county of Allegheny, Pa.; and

H. R. 6866. An act authorizing the obligation of funds for work at Government-owned establishments.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 79]

Anderson, Mo.	Drewry, Va.	Jenks, N. H.	Robsion, Ky.
Andresen, Minn.	Eberharter	Kelly, N. Y.	Sadowski
Bell	Ellenbogen	Kloeb	Schuetz
Bernard	Ford, Calif.	Kvale	Scott
Binderup	Ford, Miss.	Lambertson	Secrest
Bradley	Fulmer	Lamneck	Shafer, Mich.
Buckley, N. Y.	Gasque	Lord	Smith, W. Va.
Cannon, Wis.	Gavagan	Lucas	Sutphin
Chandler	Gilchrist	McGehee	Sweeney
Chapman	Goodwin	McGroarty	Taylor, Colo.
Clark, Idaho	Green	McMillan	Taylor, Tenn.
Clark, N. C.	Greenwood	Maas	Terry
Collins	Griswold	Millard	Thomas, Tex.
Cravens	Haines	Miller	Thomason, Tex.
Creal	Hancock, N. Y.	O'Connell, Mont.	Wadsworth
Curley	Harlan	Peyser	Wearin
Dempsey	Hartley	Phillips	Wene
Disney	Healey	Pierce	Whelchel
Ditter	Hill, Wash.	Poage	Wolcott
Dixon	Hoffman	Rees, Kan.	Wood
Douglas	Hook	Reilly

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 349 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COLE of Maryland, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

TRIAL OF CERTAIN FEDERAL JUDGES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 929), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 227

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 2271, a bill to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 930), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 228

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5969, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

DEPORTATIONS OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. DIES, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 931), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 229

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6391, a bill to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

PAIRS

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the RECORD be corrected. I was not able to be present night before last when votes were taken on the relief bill. I left instructions as to how I desired to be paired, which instructions were not carried out.

On roll call 73, page 5227 of the RECORD, I asked to be paired "for." I desire the RECORD to be corrected accordingly.

On roll call 76, page 5231, I left instructions to be paired "against." I ask that the RECORD be corrected accordingly.

On roll call 78, page 5234, I am paired "for."

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman have any agreement as to his pairs?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I left general instructions with the pair clerk.

The SPEAKER. Suppose the pair clerk could not secure pairs as the gentleman desired?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not know how it arose, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Might the Chair suggest to the gentleman from Indiana, inasmuch as this question may be of some importance hereafter, that the presumption is that a Member desiring to be paired will have the arrangement made with some Member with whom he desires to pair before his departure from the building or the Capitol. There is no objection to the gentleman making the statement he has made, but the Chair thinks it important that all Members should understand that there is no obligation upon the pair clerk to secure pairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—NATIONAL PLANNING BOARD (H. DOC. NO. 261)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Congress of the United States:

Nature has given recurrent and poignant warnings through dust storms, floods, and droughts that we must act while there is yet time if we would preserve for ourselves and our posterity the natural sources of a virile national life.

Experience has taught us that the prudent husbandry of our national estate requires far-sighted management. Floods, droughts, and dust storms are in a very real sense manifestations of nature's refusal to tolerate continued abuse of her bounties. Prudent management demands not merely works which will guard against these calamities but carefully formulated plans to prevent their occurrence. Such plans require coordination of many related activities.

For instance, our recent experiences of floods have made clear that the problem must be approached as one involving more than great works on main streams at the places where major disasters threaten to occur. There must also be measures of prevention and control among tributaries and throughout the entire headwaters areas. A comprehensive plan of flood control must embrace not only downstream levees and floodways and retarding dams and reservoirs on major tributaries but also smaller dams and reservoirs on the lesser tributaries, and measures of applied conservation throughout an entire drainage area, such as restoration of forests and grasses on inferior lands, and encouragement of farm practices which diminish run-off and prevent erosion on arable lands.

Taking care of our natural estate, together with the stopping of existing waste, and building it back to a higher productivity is a national problem. At last we have undertaken a national policy.

But it is not wise to direct everything from Washington. National planning should start at the bottom, or, in other words, the problems of townships, counties, and States should be coordinated through large geographical regions and come to the Capital of the Nation for final coordination. Thus the Congress would receive a complete picture in which no local detail had been overlooked.

It is also well to remember that improvements of our national heritage frequently confer special benefits upon regions immediately affected, and a large measure of cooperation from State and local agencies in the undertaking and financing of important projects may fairly be asked for.

Any division of the United States into regions for the husbandry of its resources must possess some degree of flexibility. The area most suitable as a region for the carrying out of an integrated program designed to prevent floods is the basin, including the watersheds, of a pivotal river. But other problems dependent upon other combinations of natural economic and social factors may require a somewhat different area to permit the most effective functional program. For instance, the problem of the Great Plains area is a problem of deficient rainfall, relatively high winds, loose, friable soils, and unsuitable agricultural practices. The natural area for solution of the Great Plains drought problem is different from that for the solution of dynamic water problems presented by the rivers which traverse that area. The rational area for administration of a Great Plains rehabilitation program crosses the drainage areas of a number of parallel major tributaries of the Mississippi River. It should, therefore, be kept in mind that in establishing a region for one type of comprehensive program, parts or all of the same area may be included in a different region for another type of comprehensive program, with the result of a Federal system, as it were, of programs and administrative areas for solution of basically different yet interrelated problems.

Neither the exact scope nor the most appropriate administrative mechanism for regional husbandry can at the start be projected upon any single blue print. But it is important that we set up without delay some regional machinery to acquaint us with our problem.

I think, however, that for the time being we might give consideration to the creation of seven regional authorities or agencies—one on the Atlantic seaboard; a second for the Great Lakes and Ohio Valley; a third for the drainage basin of the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers; a fourth embracing the drainage basins of the Missouri River and the Red River of the North; a fifth embracing the drainage basins of the Arkansas, Red, and Rio Grande Rivers; a sixth for the basins of the Colorado River and rivers flowing into the Pacific south of the California-Oregon line; and a seventh for the Columbia River Basin. And, in addition, I should leave undisturbed the Mississippi River Commission, which is well equipped to handle the problems immediately attending the channel of that great river.

Apart from the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Columbia Valley Authority, and the Mississippi River Commission, the work of these regional bodies, at least in their early years, would consist chiefly in developing integrated plans to conserve and safeguard the prudent use of waters, water power, soils, forests, and other resources of the areas entrusted to their charge.

Such regional bodies would also provide a useful mechanism through which consultation among the various governmental agencies working in the field could be effected for the development of integrated programs of related activities. Projected programs would be reported by the regional bodies annually to the Congress through the President after he has had the projects checked and revised in light of national budgetary considerations and of national planning policies. When the national planning board is established I should expect to use that agency to coordinate the development of regional planning to insure conformity to national policy, but not to give to the proposed national planning board any executive authority over the construction of public works or over management of completed works.

Projects authorized to be undertaken by the Congress could then be carried out in whole or in part by those departments of the Government best equipped for the purpose, or, if desirable in any particular case, by one of the regional bodies. There should be a close coordination of the work done by the various agencies of government to prevent friction, overlapping, and unnecessary administrative expense and to insure the integrated development of related activities. There should be the closest cooperation also with the developing State and local agencies in this field, particularly the State, regional, and local planning boards and the commissions on interstate cooperation which work through interstate compacts ratified by the Congress and through interstate administrative arrangements. And provision should be made for the effective administration of hydroelectric projects which have been or may be undertaken as a part of a multiple-purpose watershed development. The water-power resources of the Nation must be protected from private monopoly and used for the benefit of the people.

This proposal is in the interest of economy and the prevention of overlapping or one-sided developments. It leaves the Congress wholly free to determine what shall be undertaken and provides the Congress with a complete picture not only of the needs of each one of the regions but of the relationship of each of the regions to the whole of the Nation.

If, for example, the Congress could have had before it at this session a complete picture of immediate and long-term needs, I think its task in providing for flood prevention and drought emergencies would have been an easier one.

For nearly a year I have studied this great subject intensively and have discussed it with many of the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. My recommendations in this message fall into the same category as my former recommendation relating to the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. I hope, therefore, that both of these important matters may have your attention at this session.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 3, 1937.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Flood Control and ordered to be printed, and on that I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the President's message be referred to the House Committee on Flood Control and ordered printed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. MANSFIELD. To propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would it be in order for me as chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to move, as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, that the message be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield in order that the Chair may answer the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas propounds a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair as to whether the gentleman would be entitled to offer as a substitute for the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi a motion to refer the President's message to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Chair, anticipating that this question might arise, has looked rather fully into the precedents in reference thereto and finds that on April 4, 1933, when Mr. Rainey was Speaker of the House, this identical proposition was presented.

At that time it will be recalled that a bill was pending with reference to the refinancing of farm-mortgage indebtedness. Two committees claimed jurisdiction of the subject matter of that bill, the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Agriculture.

When the President's message was read the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], moved that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Thereupon the specific inquiry now propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] was made.

The Chair reads the query and the answer of the Speaker:

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire at the proper time to submit a substitute motion that the message be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. JONES said:

Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for that purpose.

The Speaker stated:

The gentleman from Texas does not yield. It is necessary to vote down the previous question before that motion will be in order.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is entitled to 1 hour, and the Chair understands he has perfected an arrangement with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] by which he will yield to the gentleman from Texas one-half of that time. At the conclusion of the debate of 1 hour the Chair assumes the gentleman from Mississippi will move the previous question on the motion referring the message to the Committee on Flood Control. If the previous question should be voted down, then the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] would have the right and privilege of offering an amendment to the motion to refer the message.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is recognized.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the agreement to which the Speaker has referred, without prejudice I yield for the purpose of debate only and not for the purpose of a motion, 30 minutes of the 1 hour allotted to me to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. Speaker, the question involves the reference of the message of the President of the United States to which you have just listened and the bill to be introduced in pursuance of that message. If there is one word, if there is one great internal improvement more than another referred to in that message, I submit that word is floods.

I submit, in the second place, if it were not for the great question of flood control confronting this country, for which in season and out of season the Committee on Flood Control has advocated legislation or authorization bills at this session, I doubt that this message would be here at this time.

In national legislation there are often several questions involved. In flood control there are involved navigation, power, the conservation of national resources, upstream control and soil-erosion prevention, and downstream works consisting of levees and river walls.

What has the House done heretofore? Where have similar bills involving the establishment of planning agencies and planning authorities gone in this House? I have before me for the information of the House a list of all the bills involving the establishment of planning agencies and authorities, with respect to flood control, navigation, and the development of power heretofore introduced, and commencing with the Sixty-ninth Congress every one of those bills, with the exception of one that I now recall, has been by the present Speaker and by the previous Speakers referred to the Committee on Flood Control. I, therefore, invoke the doctrine of precedents, as I speak for the members of the Committee on Flood Control and by their direction, in asking that this message for the creation of planning agencies and authorities contemplated by the message be referred to that committee. I should like to say I have only the kindliest feeling for my distinguished friend the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], and for the membership of that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I could refer to a number of cases where bills are now being referred to committees on the ground of precedent that might not be referred to those committees as original propositions. In passing, I may say if this message is referred to the Committee on Flood Control, it provides for planning agencies; it provides for the consideration of agencies that the administration desires and suggests, before there can be comprehensive flood-control legislation. It does not contemplate, and the language in the message is that the executive authority, the authority of the Flood Control Committee, the authority of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the Committee on Reclamation, or the Committee on Agriculture shall not be in anywise superseded by the suggestions contained in this message. It contemplates the setting up of planning agencies, whose reports will be submitted to the Congress. It is my view they should be submitted to the Congress just as they would have been under the 39 planning bills heretofore referred to the Committee on Flood Control in this and in previous sessions, on any job on which unfavorable reports have been submitted by the War Department or the Director of the Budget.

Now, what about the authority for reference? I read from Cannon's Procedure, page IV:

It is more material that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is; that there may be uniformity of proceeding in business.

In the past, legislation with respect to the T. V. A. was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Future legislation will be so referred. I doubt if that would be true now as an original proposition. If it had not the purpose to manufacture fertilizer in peace and munitions in time of war, the legislation would probably have been referred to the Committee on Flood Control or to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the first place.

Precedents should be followed where possible.

I admit navigation is involved. I admit that conservation is involved. I have no desire, and it is not the desire of my committee, that they shall be in anywise superseded but I do insist that the one outstanding problem confronting the Nation, insofar as our national resources are concerned, is the great question of national flood control. I submit further, whether you be a friend of one committee or the other or a member of one committee or the other, that there are precedents in this and in previous Congresses where similar bills have been referred to the Committee on Flood Control. Therefore, in right and in fairness, this bill should go there also.

It is a great advantage to the Congress to have before it the decisions of previous Congresses. If the decisions of the past, carefully considered, made by Speakers, Chairmen, and by the House itself, are to be disregarded, confusion and uncertainty would constantly prevail.

This quotation is from Cannon's Procedure, page IV.

In Congress after Congress these planning agency and authority bills have been referred to the Committee on Flood Control, and I submit that authority should control in the present case.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. I want to make this further statement before I yield to the gentleman from Texas. I promised I would yield to him first.

Mr. Speaker, flood control is of recent origin so far as the Federal Government is concerned. The first great appropriation was made for flood control on the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River in 1928. One hundred million dollars of the authorization, according to the bill itself, and according to the hearings, was primarily for navigation, but the big money in the bill to be spent on the Mississippi and on the Sacramento was for flood control. The Flood Control Committee reported the act.

In 1936 the Congress of the United States passed two acts reported by the Committee on Flood Control, one involving the authorization over a 6-year period of the expenditure of $272,000,000, the other involving $300,000,000 over a similar period. This act provides that flood-control works in two-thirds of the States of the Union shall be under the War Department, and provides incidentally for river and harbor improvements. However, the big money in the bill is for flood control. Morever, the act establishes that there should be upstream control, and provision was made in the flood-control policy for conservation and reforestation to be under the supervision and direction of the Department of Agriculture. However, the Committee on Flood Control had authority, because of the big money in the bill, to take jurisdiction.

In connection with the great flood of 1937 the Committee on Flood Control asked the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to submit a project to prevent the recurrence of the 1937 and other record floods. In the report of the Chief of Engineers, which is being published and will be available to Members of Congress, the expenditure of $800,000,000 over a period of 10 to 20 years is contemplated. The big money, the dollars you will be called upon to appropriate from the Public Treasury, are for flood control. There will be navigation, there will be development of power, but I say here and now, once and for all, that we adopted a forward and progressive policy in the Flood Control Act of 1936. This act provides for the construction of pen stocks and for hydroelectric facilities, if feasible and practicable, in every one of the approximately 35 dams authorized in the act. For my part, in connection with any flood-control measures in the future, as in the past, and any construction of dams and reservoirs upstream and on the tributaries, wherever it is practicable and possible to provide for the development of hydroelectric power for the benefit of the people of the United States, I shall stand for such a development. [Applause.] But I am first for flood control. However, it is fair to say, and I repeat it, that the large amounts and the big money that we are asked not to authorize are for flood control. We are asked to provide for the establishment of planning agencies, not administrative, not executive. These agencies will submit their reports, and, in my judgment, should be required to do so, to the Committee on Flood Control for flood control, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for projects properly under their jurisdiction, and to the other committees of the House, including the Committee on Reclamation, for projects under their jurisdiction.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield for just a question.

Mr. COX. It would seem to me the consideration which should guide the House in the action it should take on the motion of the gentleman would be the condition which is responsible for the message coming to us and the activity which is given first importance in the message itself.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think so. For that reason I emphasize that it was floods which were mentioned, and floods are emphasized throughout this message, especially in reference to the great flood of 1937. Also, the Committee on Flood Control has been asked to withhold its report on the bill growing out of that flood pending consideration by these proposed authorities, so that that bill may be embraced in and be coordinated with the policy resulting from such consideration.

If you stand for a policy of national flood control, I respectfully submit that under precedents, under reason, and under authority this bill should be referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have yielded to the gentleman from Texas for 30 minutes for the purpose of debate, without yielding the floor. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Oregon in a little while.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the suggested bill which has been presented here deals with every possible feature of river treatment. It devotes pages, almost, to the subject of pollution. It refers in a number of instances to the question of navigation. It refers extensively to the question of the production and distribution of hydroelectric power, and various other matters pertaining to river improvement. All of these questions under the present rules of the House, except the question of flood control exclusively, are now under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That committee deals with all the legislation for dams for hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and has done so from as far back as 1888. It has dealt with it on the Mississippi River, on the Missouri River, on the Muskingum River, and on various other rivers of the United States. It cannot be claimed the Committee on Flood Control would have jurisdiction of that feature if the bill were stripped of the combination of subjects which are embraced in the entire program. It cannot be claimed the Committee on Flood Control has jurisdiction over navigation. It cannot be claimed the Committee on Flood Control has jurisdiction of any feature of this bill except flood control.

When the Committee on Flood Control was created by Congress, the reason given for its creation was that it should exercise jurisdiction for that purpose only, and on that ground, and with the assurance given to Congress in the debates at the time—the assurance was given by Mr. Finis Garrett, afterward the Democratic leader of the House, and by all who participated in the debate at that time—that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control would be limited to flood control only, and that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would not be deprived of jurisdiction of any other feature of the case, the Committee on Flood Control was created. I do not have time to discuss all that debate at this time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. For a brief question.

Mr. MAPES. It is not quite clear to me just what legislation is contemplated from listening to the reading of the President's message. The gentleman has referred to a suggested bill. Is it contemplated that the suggested legislation to which the gentleman has referred will actually provide for flood control and the other matters referred to in the message of the President, or is it contemplated only to set up regional boards in these different regions to make studies and report back to Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The suggested bill provides for setting up these regional boards, which will constitute planning boards. Legislation will hereafter be submitted to Congress in accordance with their findings, as I understand.

Mr. MAPES. However, no affirmative action is to be taken except upon the recommendation of these boards, and the boards have no authority to go ahead without additional legislation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They will have to have additional legislation.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am sorry, I cannot yield; I have but 10 minutes.

One of the most important features of this whole program was completely overlooked by my good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], the question of hydroelectric power.

This is one of the main reasons that this message has come here today. For flood control only there is no need of it, because we have a flood-control program now.

Furthermore, it excludes the Mississippi Commission, which deals with perhaps 95 percent of the flood-control program already. So it could not have been primarily upon that ground that the message was sent.

Power development is one of the main features to be considered by the Congress in the near future. We have had our navigation programs, our flood-control programs, and all those are in successful operation; but this new program of hydroelectric power, by which America is to be electrified in the near future, if possible, is a feature that is in no sense of the word within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the distinguished leader of the Republican Party.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand there is a bill already prepared accompanying this message?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is a suggested bill.

Mr. SNELL. It is a bill sent up here to be introduced?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman states, from a reading of that bill, which I suppose he has read, the particular purpose of the bill is a power proposition and not flood control.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I say that is one of the main features, as I understand it. Flood control is also one of them.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask the gentleman if this bill comprehends any change in any jurisdiction so far as the Corps of Army Engineers is concerned? The message indicates there will be several independent set-ups.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have not had time to read all these papers, but it sets up these regional boards very much in line with the T. V. A., and the gentleman knows as well as I do how that is done.

If I may be permitted now to proceed in regard to this matter, I may state that the river is the basis for all this legislation for all purposes. Congress has jurisdiction over it on the theory of navigation, and navigation only. This has been decided by the Supreme Court from the days of John Marshall down to the present time. The Court has never decided that Congress has jurisdiction over flood control, and in order to give Congress jurisdiction over flood control they link it with navigation in order that the question of jurisdiction may not be raised. The question of flood control has yet to be decided, and I call attention to the fact that $300,000,000 worth of dams that are now being installed and nearing completion, including the Fort Peck Dam, the Grand Coulee Dam, the Bonneville Dam, the Tygirt Dam, the Parker Dam, all of these great propositions have been erected under river and harbor legislation reported and enacted into law in a river and harbor bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the Flood Control Committee is a committee of limited jurisdiction. That committee was created in 1916 and I have before me the debates that took place at that time.

The Flood Control Committee was carved out of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the argument made for the establishment of that committee at that time was to the effect that they were to have jurisdiction of flood-control matters only and that all other matters over which the Rivers and Harbors Committee had jurisdiction at that time should remain with the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I could quote you parts of this debate that would substantiate this statement, but my time will not permit.

Now, let us look at our rules and see what they say in reference to this question. Our rules provide for the establishment of a Flood Control Committee to which all matters pertaining to flood control, other than appropriations therefor, shall be referred. Our rules also provide for a Rivers and Harbors Committee to which all matters relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, except flood-control matters, shall be referred.

Mr. Speaker, these rules do not say that only matters pertaining to commerce and navigation in relation to rivers shall be referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but the rules plainly state that all matters pertaining to rivers shall be referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Therefore I say, without any question, as a matter of proper jurisdiction, there is not any doubt, even remote, as to where this message should be referred. It should be referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

As I listened to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, I thought this message dealt with flood control only, but when you read the message, you see that flood control is only one of the many things mentioned prominently in the message. The President, as I understand the message, proposes to establish a river authority, a drainage basin authority, in a number of regions, to solve the problems of these drainage basins. It might well be that flood control would not be a problem within the basin at all, but any river of any considerable size has the problem of navigation, it has the problem of power, it has the problem of pollution, and it has many other problems. Let me quote just these few words from the message of the President which was read here a few minutes ago:

> The work of these regional bodies, at least in their early years, would consist chiefly in developing integrated plans to conserve and safeguard the prudent use of waters, water power, soils, forests, and other resources of the areas entrusted to their charge.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee at the present time has jurisdiction of a number of these matters. You will recall that this House a few weeks ago passed a pollution bill that was considered and reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee at the present time is considering a bill with reference to the disposition of the power at the Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River, between the States of Oregon and Washington. This message, Mr. Speaker, comes clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and should be referred to that committee. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DRIVER). The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to the bill that was passed in the Seventy-fourth Congress (Public, No. 738; H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control and for other purposes, and wish for a moment, gentlemen, you would hold clearly in your minds the words of the President's message while I read the policy section of the flood-control bill, and you will realize that the Flood Control Committee anticipated this message with legislation, so much so that I agree with the chairman of our committee when I say it was the activity of the Flood Control Committee and our incessant activity that brought agitation for this legislation before the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I cannot yield at this time. I read:

> SECTION 1. It is hereby recognized that destructive floods upon the rivers of the United States, upsetting orderly processes and causing loss of life and property, including the erosion of lands and impairing and obstructing navigation, highways, railroads, and other channels of commerce between the States, constitute a menace to national welfare; that it is the sense of Congress that flood control on navigable waters or their tributaries is a proper activity of the Federal Government, in cooperation with States, their political subdivisions and localities thereof; that investigations and improvements of rivers and other waterways, including watersheds thereof, for flood-control purposes are in the interest of the general welfare; that the Federal Government should improve or participate in the improvement of navigable waters or their tributaries, including watersheds thereof, for flood-control purposes if the benefits, to whomsoever they accrue, are in excess of the estimated costs, and if the lives and social security of people are otherwise adversely affected.

Is this House going to take away jurisdiction over this matter from the committee that instituted this type of legislation and put it in the hands of the committee that failed to act on this type of legislation all the time that they have claimed to have jurisdiction?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I confess that upon a hurried reading of the message it appeared to me to relate to flood control, but the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] has placed his finger, in my opinion, upon the crucial point in the message, which is to be considered in the light of the bill that is reported to have been prepared to carry out the message. For a long time I have thought it very unfortunate that our rules did not permit references to the different committees having jurisdiction of the general matters in a message. My committee suffered a few years ago from that omission, but, fortunately, the injury was remedied by adjustment with the other committee. The section of the message to which the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] has directed attention refers to the prudent use of waters, establishes regions, and then deals practically with the entire use of those waters, which matter, in my opinion, involves matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where that jurisdiction has been exercised admirably and efficiently. I refer particularly to matters dealing particularly with navigation, with hydroelectric power, and with pollution. If there could be some dividing line whereby the flood-control features of the message could be separated from these other things, I should not raise my voice. I do desire to register an emphatic protest against any reference of a message or of a bill which would transfer navigation interests, pollution, or hydroelectric power from the committee that is expert in the handling of those particular questions. [Applause.]

I fear very much that the enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control under the language of this message, as interpreted by the bill that has been submitted, would accomplish that result, and in my opinion that would be unfortunate for navigation upon our waters and for the other questions involved. Therefore, I shall support the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. This bill, as I understand it, contemplates the creation of valley authorities for the conservation of natural resources. Does the gentleman feel that his committee, being expert in navigation and the maintenance of water for navigation purposes, would thus be better qualified to pass on the conservation of the natural-resource problems in these valleys?

Mr. BLAND. I consider the other factors the major portion of the bill, and I believe, if it cannot be divided, that it should go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It would not go to my committee, for I have not the honor of being a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the matter referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON], if not connected with these other matters, would be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FERGUSON. I think that is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested in the discussion today having to do with the reference of this bill.

Coming from the Middle West as I do, it has been very interesting to me to hear the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. MANSFIELD] ask for reference of this bill to his committee, and we have heard the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries speak regarding the reference of this bill. For the life of me, as I read this message, I can find very little reference to either of those agencies. As I read the message I find that the President is deeply interested in the conservation of water, the conservation of soil, and the conservation of natural resources.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Not just now. I only have 5 minutes.

It seems to me that the Committee on Flood Control is the committee which should logically consider this legislation. This committee has not been asleep during this session of Congress, and in this connection I want to call the attention of the House to House Joint Resolution No. 175. Our committee has conducted hearings on this resolution. It has been reported to the House and we are hoping to ask for a rule for its consideration in the very near future. Having this in mind, I wish to state that it is not necessary to introduce a bill calling for the legislation that the President mentions in his message, except for the section establishing the eight authorities he has mentioned.

We have sponsored the legislation and have already had hearings on it. House Joint Resolution 175 deals with water conservation, with flood control, with hydroelectric power, with water retardation; and we have placed the supervision and construction of these projects in the hands of the Army engineers and the Secretary of Agriculture. For many years our committee has been dealing with these problems. Last year we brought in two flood-control bills of major importance. We brought in the omnibus flood-control bill, a bill that deals with flood control and water conservation on practically every stream in the Nation. We also brought in the Overton lower Mississippi River bill. It seems logical and reasonable that this committee should consider the legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. For the benefit of the neutral Members of the House, I would like to ask the gentleman which committee can be depended upon to spend the most money?

Mr. CARLSON. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am very proud of the chairman and the membership of the Committee on Flood Control. We are a conservative committee. We have held hearings and cooperated with the Army engineers in securing flood-control legislation. I will say for our committee that when we allocate money we do it with the approval of the Army engineers. I do not believe there is a Member on the floor of this House who is not willing to turn over to the Chief of Engineers and his organization any and all projects that deal with flood control and water conservation.

Last year our committee brought in these bills which authorized the projects I have already mentioned. Therefore, I feel that our committee is well qualified to handle this work.

In the interior part of the United States there are river problems and drought problems. This committee, in my opinion, should handle those problems because we are versed with them. We have cooperated with the other agencies, and, therefore, I hope the House will refer the bill to our committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is true, is it not, that at the present time all the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority is done outside the activities of the Army engineers?

Mr. CARLSON. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The Tennessee Valley Authority was constructed under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is that not right?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes; I so understand. In other words, if you want to be sure to keep this in the hands of the Army engineers you should refer it to the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Just to correct the gentleman, it was done under the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CARLSON. I thank the gentleman for the correction.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. This message it seems to me comprehends the establishment of a number of set-ups and agencies similar to the Columbia River Valley Authority, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and others, which are outside the jurisdiction of the Army engineers. Very probably, if carried into effect, it will take that jurisdiction away from the Army engineers which they have heretofore exercised. I want to ask the gentleman what his opinion and his attitude is going to be about that if it is referred to his committee?

Mr. CARLSON. I will state to the gentleman from Oregon that as far as one member of the Committee on Flood Control is concerned—and I believe I can speak for that committee—we have always cooperated with the Army engineers. We always get reports from them. We confer with them on any and all projects.

Mr. MOTT. Would the gentleman be willing, for example, to set up a flood control and conservation area and turn the operation and control of that over to the Interior Department, for instance, instead of the Army engineers?

Mr. CARLSON. No; I would not. I am going to fight to retain that in the hands of the Army engineers. I expect to use all the power and influence I have in that direction. Whenever we take the control of rivers from the War Department and the Army engineers, in my opinion we have gone a long way toward destroying the use of one branch of our military service during peacetimes. We must keep it there if we can. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not make myself clear. One gentleman at least seems to have misunderstood me. I did not ask to have this referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I asked to have it referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, 9½ minutes, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the Speaker of the House has decided to let this matter be settled in this way. If the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was making a fight for jurisdiction of this bill, I would probably have no objection, because the big thing in this bill in the immediate and in the distant future is the power question. But under no circumstances is the Flood Control Committee of this House entitled to any jurisdiction whatsoever. The Flood Control Committee was not created until 1916. The Rivers and Harbors Committee was created in 1883, and this committee reported all of the river and harbor appropriations up until appropriation bills were consolidated under the Appropriations Committee. This committee has also reported all of the river and harbor improvements. It has also reported on the public works for the benefit of navigation and on the use of the water power on improved streams, on oil pollution, on stream pollution, and on the international arrangement as to the use of water at the outlet of the Great Lakes, thus giving the Rivers and Harbors Committee precedence in receiving communications and bills which have been referred to this committee upon all of these subjects.

The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] has explained what the debates reveal when the Flood Control Committee was created. The late Speaker Champ Clark stated that it was for flood control only, and it was created for that purpose after two or three major floods occurred in 1913 and 1916 in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys.

Let us see what subjects are dealt with by the bill that is to be referred to one or the other of these committees. The title reads:

To provide for the regional conservation and development of the national resources, and for other purposes.

Under title I the purpose and policy of the act are set out as follows:

It is the purpose and policy of this act to develop, integrate, and coordinate plans, projects, and activities for or incidental to the promotion of navigation.

That is the first major item in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question at this point?

Mr. PARSONS. I am sorry, I cannot yield. I have but a few minutes.

Certainly this purpose so stated, should send it to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The next purpose is for the control and prevention of floods. This is the only item in the title that would give the Flood Control Committee any reason for asking that this bill be referred to their committee.

Another purpose is the reclamation of the public lands in order to aid and protect commerce among the several States. Bills for this purpose, so far as they concerned water and navigation have repeatedly been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Next the safeguarding of navigable waters: Does the gentleman from Mississippi maintain for one moment that the Committee on Flood Control should have jurisdiction of a bill safeguarding navigable waters?

I have just read from the manual a statement showing that bills for that purpose have been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and that it has jurisdiction. Let us see what further the bill provides. Item 1: "The promotion of navigation." There is no question as to which committee should have jurisdiction of this subject. Item no. 2: "The control and prevention of floods, to prevent destruction and interference with navigation." That is in the bill. If the Committee on Flood Control, therefore, should claim jurisdiction by reason of item 2, still the second provision of that very item would provide an equally strong reason why it should go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understood that the discussion was upon the reference of the President's message. I do not understand what the gentleman is arguing about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DRIVER). The Chair holds that the discussion is germane to the subject matter under consideration, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. PARSONS. The President's message mentioned flood control and a number of other items, the ones I am here enumerating.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that of the bills mentioned by the gentleman from Mississippi as having been referred to his committee, not a single one involved power, involved navigation, or related to a single one of these items except flood control. Under the rules of the House and under the intention of Congress as evidenced by the debates at the time the Flood Control Committee was formulated, that committee was to have no jurisdiction over any bills whatsoever except those dealing entirely with flood control. By no stretch of the imagination in respect to the President's message of today and the accompanying bill can the Committee on Flood Control claim exclusive jurisdiction.

In the immediate future and in the distant future, Mr. Speaker, the big thing in this bill will be power development on the rivers of this continent.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us to what bill he is referring?

Mr. PARSONS. I am referring to the bill which accompanied the message of the President.

Mr. SNELL. Where did that bill come from? We are entitled to know.

Mr. PARSONS. We will answer that later.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman, then, refuses to tell the House who wrote the bill about which he is talking? [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. I refuse to yield, Mr. Speaker; I have only a very few minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I want the RECORD to show that the gentleman refuses to tell where the bill came from about which he is making a speech on the floor of the House.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman will find out in due course where the bill came from.

Mr. SNELL. We are entitled to know its source, and I want the RECORD to show the gentleman's refusal to disclose it.

Mr. PARSONS. We are not discussing the merits of the bill; we are discussing the question as to which committee should have jurisdiction in the matter. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman's entire speech has been devoted to the merits of the bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, every major power project and every major water-conservation project except Boulder Dam and Muscle Shoals originated under the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I submit, therefore, that this message with the accompanying bill should be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and I hope and trust that the House will vote down the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if a certain bill is printed and on the floor of the House, why is it that Members cannot get a copy of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I presume the gentleman knows the proper repository for bills.

Mr. RICH. Could the Speaker tell us where to go to get a copy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. I think possibly the document room may be able to give the gentleman a copy.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] referred to the fact all power-producing dams that have been constructed in navigable waters, except Muscle Shoals and Boulder Dam, were under legislation recommended by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. PARSONS. Exactly.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not also true that neither Muscle Shoals nor Boulder Dam were under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control?

Mr. PARSONS. That is true, because Boulder Dam was built under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation and came from that committee of the House. Muscle Shoals was originally constructed as a national-defense proposition, therefore came from the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Flood Control has never properly had under their jurisdiction any bill that pertained to the construction of dams other than for the purpose of flood control. It has never had under its jurisdiction, properly, any bills for the construction of hydroelectric power projects. Certainly, under the rules of the House, it is not entitled to have jurisdiction of any bill that provides for that now.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the most convincing statement made here today is the statement regarding the creation of the Flood Control Committee which made its jurisdiction one of limitation to flood control only. Anything beyond that still remains in the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. PARSONS. That is true. I submit, Mr. Speaker, up until the last 3 years no bill of any kind or nature was ever referred to the Flood Control Committee except ones involving the express curbing of floods, and this was done by the Speaker, and no contest was made by our committee to claim jurisdiction.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to refer briefly, as I appeal to your judgment on the record and on precedent and reason, to some of the statements made by gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to this motion. I am not going to deal in ancient history. I am not going to refer to the committees of the House as they were in 1833. I am going to refer to the precedents of the House. I am going to refer to the authority for the references. I am referring to the real substance of the legislation.

I stated in my opening remarks that 39 bills similar to the measure which provided for planning agencies and authorities have been referred to the Committee on Flood Control. No one has disputed that statement. What better authority could I give you? What better reason could I assign than to ask you to refer this measure to the committee that has consideration of other bills of this nature? Every one of those bills provided for the matter of navigation, for the matter of flood control, and conservation of national resources.

Mr. PARSONS and Mr. MANSFIELD rose.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I decline to yield.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, there must not be any dispute about the facts. There is a lot of work involved and there are fundamental questions involved in this measure. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] stated that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—and I have a high regard for him—had constructed the Bonneville Dam, Grand Coulee, the Parker Dam, and Tiger Dam. What are the facts? Those bills were not reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Every Member on the floor knows these projects were authorized by the President of the United States out of relief funds. They were put into the River and Harbor Act because that was the first act to come up where it was convenient to deposit them.

Let us be fair. What dam has Congress at any time authorized the Rivers and Harbors Committee or any other committee to construct primarily for power? If any Member can name a single dam, let him point it out. They say the T. V. A. is for flood control and navigation. There never was a dam primarily for power originally reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee. If you are interested in the control of floods, then you should refer this message to the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No; I decline to yield. The gentleman has already made too many erroneous statements, and I have not the time to correct them.

Mr. PARSONS. What dams has the Committee on Flood Control authorized?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. From 35 to 40 in the acts of 1936.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] spoke of pollution. He made the statement that the bill he held in his hand was devoted page after page to pollution. I have just examined the bill. There are about 12 lines in the bill about pollution.

The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] said that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors ought to have and should have control over all rivers. Where would you have any reclamation if you did not deal with the rivers? Where would you have any flood control if you did not undertake to control the waters in the rivers of the country?

The distinguished gentleman from Virginia, my distinguished friend, Mr. BLAND, said that this bill ought to be referred to the committee where the greatest amount of money would be appropriated or authorized. This is the only sound statement he made. The message should go to the Committee on Flood Control, according to every authority. The gentleman has overspoken himself.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. The gentleman had the opportunity to speak twice.

Mr. BLAND. I just wanted to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman does not and cannot deny that the contemplated large expenditures are for flood control.

Mr. Speaker, what is contemplated by the message? Much has been said about the President's message. What did he say about navigation in his message?

I stated in my opening remarks that he referred to flood control, the dust storms, and the drought. Where does he mention navigation? Where did he suggest it is necessary to build a dam in order to provide for navigation? He states in substance, in this message, when dams were constructed for upstream control and for the control of floods that provision wherever it was possible should be made for the conservation of power.

I recall no case or precedent where this Congress or any preceding Congress has ever authorized in the first place the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to provide for the construction of reservoirs for navigation. Regardless of the jurisdiction in 1883, I may say, it might as well be said the Committee on World War Veterans has nothing to do with World War veterans, because the Committee on Pensions handled such matters in 1883. Whatever may be said about the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control, in 1936 that committee reported for the first time a national flood-control bill, which provides for projects in two-thirds of the States of the Union, and provides for conservation and reforestation under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to reinforce the downstream control which must be by flood-control works.

As I said in the beginning of my remarks, I want power wherever it can be had. However, the thing uppermost in my mind is not the great question of the navigability of our rivers. What about the Ohio River? The navigation projects on that stream, for which we have spent $200,000,000, are now practically completed. What about navigation on the Mississippi River? The need is for both flood control and navigation. In the Ohio Valley the need is for flood control. One hundred and fifty-five cities, towns, and communities were subjected to flood and 400,000 people were driven from their homes in 1937. I have insisted, in season and out of season during this session of Congress, as I insist now, that the great question of flood control shall not be sidetracked, that if there is to be any planning such planning should give first consideration to the pressing problem before the people of this country—the problem of flood control.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I have reserved my time.

What about the constitutionality of flood-control legislation? Such legislation has been passed ever since 1879, in a small way, and was for the first time recognized in 1917 in a larger way. The Supreme Court of the United States has never declared any flood-control act invalid or void. What about the constitutional authority for flood control? It is ample.

May I summarize with respect to the constitutionality of flood-control legislation by saying—

First. Flood-control work is a proper function of the Federal Government, and Congress is the sole judge of the circumstances under which appropriations may be made.

Second. The power of Congress is not limited to navigation, or to cases that are incident thereto, but may be predicated upon the basis of aid to commerce and the destruction, injury, or impairment of the agencies engaged in commerce.

Third. The commerce clause is not the only constitutional basis for flood control, though perhaps the clearest.

I have reached the said conclusions from well-considered decisions of the Supreme Court rendered in recent years. I do not have to go back to John Marshall. I do not have to go back to the time when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created in 1883. The flood-control or conservation program is not static, it is progressive.

I maintain there is at stake in this legislation the question of whether or not the Congress of the United States will discharge its duty, and, upholding the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control, make adequate and proper provision, in the plans which may be submitted to us, primarily for the control of the floods of our Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I shall be pleased to yield if I have the time remaining.

I insist that under the precedents and, appealing to your judgment and your reason, and with the very kindliest of feelings for my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], the message should be referred, as has been every one of these 39 previous bills dealing with planning agencies and authorities, to the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. Speaker, under the leave to revise and extend my remarks, permit me to say that in reason and under the precedents of the House to protect the integrity of the Flood Control Committee and to promote national flood control, I make the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Flood Control. Similar bills have been referred, with one exception, as I have heretofore stated, commencing with the Sixty-ninth Congress, to the Committee on Flood Control.

H. R. 5025, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, provided for Waterways and Water Resources Commission. It was referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

H. R. 12803, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, creating the Mississippi-Arkansas agencies, was referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

In the Seventieth Congress, first session, H. R. 5786, H. R. 6992, H. R. 8909, and H. R. 9576, creating the Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, and Red River Commissions, were referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

In the Seventy-first Congress, second session, H. R. 11723 was referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

It was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] that none of the planning or authorities bills referred to the Committee on Flood Control provided for power. He betrays another unfamiliarity with the bills.

Commencing with the Seventy-third Congress, first session, and up to and including the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, to date 29 bills were introduced providing for valley authorities, and every one of the 89 mentioned, with two exceptions, mentioned power and contemplated the preservation of power. Evidently these bills were not satisfactory to the administration; unfavorable reports were submitted by the Director of the Budget on the outstanding of these bills. A bill with the support of the administration will be introduced in accordance with the terms of the message.

For the RECORD, I am enumerating the bills heretofore introduced and referred to the Committee on Flood Control, involving, in the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses, as their constitutional basis flood control, navigation, interstate commerce, national defense, and the conservation of national resources, as well as the preservation of the power resources of the Nation.

SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

H. R. 6224. Arkansas Valley Authority Act.

H. R. 6368. Arkansas River Watershed Authority Act.

SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

H. R. 6897. Bureau of Reclamation to survey Missouri River Basin.

H. R. 7339. Arkansas, Red and White Rivers Basin Commission.

H. R. 8143. Bureau of Reclamation to survey White River Basin.

H. R. 9669. Wabash Valley Authority.

SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

H. R. 3608. Bureau of Reclamation to survey White River Basin.

H. R. 3609. Bureau of Reclamation to survey Arkansas, Red, Ouachita, and White.
H. R. 3621. Wabash Valley Authority.
H. R. 3622. Arkansas Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 3623. Appalachian Authority Act of 1935.
H. R. 4235. Wabash Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 4241. Bureau of Reclamation survey, Missouri River Basin.
H. R. 4683. Upper Mississippi Valley Authority Act of 1934.
H. R. 4684. Upper Misissippi Valley Authority Act of 1934.
H. R. 4685. Upper Mississippi Valley Authority Act of 1934.
H. R. 8556. Arkansas Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 9248. Coal Authority of the Middle Mississippi Valley Act of 1935.

SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

H. R. 11958. Missouri Valley Authority Act of 1936.
H. R. 12673. Wisconsin Valley Authority Act of 1936.

SEVENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

H. R. 182. Mississippi Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 275. Wisconsin Valley Authority Act of 1937.
H. R. 3592. Arkansas Valley Authorities.
H. R. 3686. Ohio Valley Authority.
H. R. 3788. Upper Mississippi River Valley Authority.
H. R. 4347. Upper Mississippi Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 4398. Ohio Valley Authority Act.
H. R. 4549. St. Croix Valley Authority.
H. R. 4603. Flood Control Authorities Act of 1937.
H. R. 4811. Connecticut Valley Authority.
H. R. 5175. Hungry Horse Power Authority.

All of these bills provided for the establishment of regional authorities and they followed the outlines of the bill referred to by the gentlemen from Texas to be introduced under the message of the President.

Planning agencies are to be provided for the drainage basins of the Nation in the bill mentioned. The fact that the term "drainage basins" characterizes the location of the authorities shows that floodwaters are uppermost in the proposed legislation and in the message. I repeat, to emphasize, that the Authorities contemplated the development of power. The so-called Secrest bill (H. R. 4603) may be taken as a type of the authority bills introduced. This bill and the so-called planning agencies in the bill referred to by the gentlemen from Texas are synonymous. The Secrest bill provided for the control of floods, for the improvement of navigation, for the preservation of wildlife, and the conservation of national resources.

All these bills involving power, navigation, flood control, conservation, and reclamation were referred to the Committee on Flood Control.

The rules of the House are largely made up of precedents. If precedent is followed, we know what to expect. I quote again from Jefferson's Manual, Cannon's Procedure, page IV:

> It is more material that there should be a rule to go by than what the rule is; that there may be uniformity of proceeding in business.

I quote again from Cannon's Procedure. The quotation is from the late Speaker Gillett. It is to be found on page IV of Cannon's Procedure:

> It is extremely important that precedents should be followed.

> Precedents should be followed where possible. It is a great advantage to the Congress to have before it the decisions of previous Congresses. If the decisions of the past, carefully considered, made by Speakers, Chairmen, and by the House itself, are to be disregarded, confusion and uncertainty would constantly prevail. The Chair would prefer to follow a precedent clearly established, though the question, if originally presented to him, would receive different treatment.

If precedents are to rule, by sending the message and the bills to follow to Rivers and Harbors, then there would be confusion with respect to jurisdiction of other committees. It would be in order at any time, no matter whether 39 or more bills had been referred to a committee, for similar bills to be referred to other committees.

As I have stated, legislation often involves questions that may properly be considered by several committees. How can there be flood control unless rivers are controlled?

It must be admitted that originally the Flood Control Committee reported legislation on the Mississippi and the Sacramento Rivers, but as the country has grown and developed, as floods have multiplied, the flood-control problem in 1936 was declared national. Three hundred millions of dollars on other rivers than the Sacramento and Mississippi were authorized and provision was made for approximately 35 dams or reservoirs. I am an advocate of reservoirs for flood control where practical, but I must be frank. Reservoirs for flood control and reservoirs for power are often incompatible; the two are inconsistent. It takes an empty reservoir for flood control and it takes a full reservoir to develop power. There is one outstanding river east of the Rocky Mountains where there are both flood control and power development; that river is the Tennessee. In the Southwest there are rivers where flood control and power development can be combined. The Colorado River is a notable example. Other notable examples are along the Red, White, and Arkansas Rivers.

There is no one solution for flood control. It is established that forests will consume 12 inches of rainfall annually. Reservoirs will fill from eroded lands. In the Flood Control Act of 1936 provision was made for watersheds and measures for run-off and waterflow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds. Upstream planning, reforestation, and conservation supplemented downstream river walls, levees, and floodways. There is no conflict. Again, as I have said, section 5 of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, provided that pen stocks and other similar facilities should be included in the flood-control reservoirs authorized by that act.

What is the reason for the message? What works are planned? Are the works planned primarily for navigation along the rivers? Are the works to be planned primarily for power? We have but scratched the surface of the flood-control problem. That is conceded, hence the importance of the subject matter of the pending message. It is recognized that that policy must be expanded and must be enlarged to provide for the great flood of 1937 that occurred after the act of 1936 was passed, and to provide for other major floods in other parts of the country.

I have stated the Chief of Engineers of the United States has recommended projects aggregating $800,000,000. The works are primarily for flood control. In reason, therefore, the legislation contemplated by the message, and the plans provided in the bill that has been suggested are primarily to provide for flood-control works. The amounts to be appropriated will be by and large to detain and prevent floods. Navigation and power will be incidental. In reason, therefore, as well as by precedent, the bill should be referred to the Committee on Flood Control. The same reasons obtained for the reference of the previous 39 planning bills.

ADVISORY AND NOT ADMINISTRATIVE

With respect to flood control and navigation, I understand the bill to be introduced provides for advisory and not administrative agencies. This is most important. The Committee on Flood Control and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should be fully advised. The President is entitled to full information, but I maintain that the approval of projects and the allocation of public funds is the responsibility of the Congress, and that the administration of flood control and river and harbor work should rest with existing agencies to prevent, as pointed out in the message, duplication.

HYDROELECTRIC POWER

A moment's reflection will convince anyone that the Rivers and Harbors Committee was not established in 1883 to develop hydroelectric energy. There were no power dams, there were no reservoirs. Our cities were not lighted by electricity, we did not have electric lights. The development of hydroelectric power was not contemplated in 1883, and with due regard to the views of the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee respecting power is neither original nor is it exclusive.

The Wilson Dam on the Tennessee River was constructed under legislation reported by the Military Affairs Committee. Boulder Dam was constructed under legislation reported by the Committee on Reclamation. In many reclamation projects provision is made for power, but the Reclamation Committee has jurisdiction over the projects. It is fair to say that there is some power in navigation dams that have been constructed under legislation originally reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but the power development is incidental to all legislation prior to the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933, reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I repeat that Parker Dam, Bonneville, Grand Coulee, Tygirt, and Fort Peck were not originally authorized in legislation reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors but they were begun and prosecuted under allotments made by the President of the United States under the relief appropriations of $3,300,000,000. They were subsequently deposited in a rivers and harbors bill.

It is not a question of when the Flood Control Committee was established; the question is that provision should be made for national flood control, and that adequate authorizations should be made for such works based upon all available legislative and constitutional authorities. Such is the aim of the pending measure. The planting of grasses, the planting of trees, the conservation of the soil, and the preservation of the forests upstream will supplement and enforce the downstream flood-control works that are imperative to prevent a recurrence of major floods.

The authority of committees is not confined to the language creating them. There is nothing said about referring power projects in the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; there is nothing said about the conferring of power and navigation upon the Flood Control Committee, but in the progress and advance of both navigation and flood control, provision should be made for the preservation of our natural resources, and for the protection of the public in all hydroelectric developments and in all dams where it is feasible to provide for flood control and navigation.

It is true that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors reported a pollution bill at this session. The fact is, however, that other pollution bills have been referred to other committees.

On reason and under precedents, inasmuch as construction of flood-control projects will require the large appropriations contemplated in the pending measure, the bill should be referred to the Committee on Flood Control. The future work will be to prevent and control floods. The yardstick, where various interests are involved, is the amount of money that will be required. No well-informed person will dispute that primarily the money to be expended, as contemplated by the measure, will be for flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. A vote against the previous question is a vote to refer the message to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair cannot answer the inquiry in the affirmative. Voting down the previous question will leave the matter still pending before the House, if it desires to pursue the matter, as to which committee should have jurisdiction.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming the previous question is ordered, we will then vote on whether the message shall or shall not be referred to the Committee on Flood Control?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered, the next vote will be on the motion to refer it to the Committee on Flood Control. If the previous question is not ordered, then it leaves to the determination of the House what course shall be taken with reference to the President's message.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTINGTON) there were—ayes 61, noes 166.

So the motion for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and on that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, there is now pending the motion I made that the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Flood Control. It occurs to me the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is improper, and that the proper motion would be to amend my motion, if the gentleman desires that the message be referred to his committee. My point is there is a motion pending and an independent motion would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, upon reconsideration, is of the opinion the proper procedure would be for the gentleman from Texas to offer an amendment to the pending motion, to the effect that the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANSFIELD moves, as an amendment to the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], to refer the President's message to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the action of the House, I beg to say that that amendment is agreeable to me; and for the sake of the RECORD, I should like to have permission to withdraw the motion I made, and I ask unanimous consent so to do, in order that the gentleman may present his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Texas to move that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and if it is in order on that, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANSFIELD moves that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and upon that he moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Is it fair to assume that the Speaker will also construe it to be the sense of the House that the bill accompanying the message be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that one of the purposes, or at least one of the desires, the Chair had in mind in having this controversy, with reference to jurisdiction of these questions, decided by the House was that it might be a guide to him in the future with reference to bills of a similar nature, and unless something should occur in the actual bill that is introduced entirely contrary to the purposes expressed in this debate the Chair would refer the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I concur in that statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask whether or not, as a matter of fact, any bill has been introduced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no such bill having been introduced.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 394. Joint resolution making an appropriation for expenses of the Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Jackson, Miss., in 1937.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4408) entitled "An act to provide for the renewal of star-route contracts at 4-year intervals, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 16. Concurrent resolution relating to the enrollment of H. R. 4408.

OIL CONSERVATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 216.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. SNELL rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to raise the point of order?

Mr. MAPES. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there are some special orders on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. All special orders are contingent upon being called after the disposition of privileged matters.

Mr. MAPES. The calendar of today does not so indicate, and that is the only point I have in mind.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the special orders are in order at this time in preference to a resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. This question has been raised several times, and I have forgotten the date, but the RECORD will show that the Chair announced that from then on all special orders for addresses would be subject to, and would follow, any privileged matters to be brought up on that day.

Mr. SNELL. Then, if there has been a ruling of the Chair, it should so state on the calendar that has been printed for today.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state in regard to the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York, that a good many days ago, in fact, several weeks ago, the Chair stated, not only once but probably two or three times, that where special orders were agreed to for gentlemen to address the House the understanding upon the part of the Chair would be that they should follow, and not precede, privileged matters that might be subject to be brought up by the House leadership or the Committee on Rules.

In this particular instance the RECORD of May 27, at page 6604, shows that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] submitted a request to speak today, as the Chair understands it, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the majority leader, said:

> Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I must, of course, ask that the gentleman's time come after the disposition of privileged matters, such as conference reports, special rules, and so forth.

And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] said:

> I understand that.

So the gentleman evidently acquiesced in that statement.

Mr. SNELL. I think the Chair is right about that.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Does that mean that hereafter when there are special orders for gentlemen to speak, that if the Committee on Rules wants to consider any bill, it takes precedence over the special orders.

The SPEAKER. That is the statement made by the Chair and acquiesced in by the House. It is a matter entirely with the House, of course, if an appeal is taken from that decision.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York, if I have the floor.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, Rules Committee never call up a rule without first consulting the Speaker and the majority leader.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand. Here is what I am driving at. It certainly is not my view, and I doubt if it is the view of the House, that the Rules Committee can bring in a rule to consider any legislation and take a Member off the floor who has obtained unanimous consent to address the House. If that is the case, it simply means that the House is subservient to the Rules Committee so far as these special orders are concerned.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I think this ought to be settled.

Mr. SNELL. That is the reason that I raised this point at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, being in the position that I am, I have to try to protect the program of the House. At least three times when unanimous consent has been requested I have made the statement that at all times I would object unless it were understood that the time asked for would come after conference reports, privileged bills, and special rules.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas this question. There are at least three or four gentlemen who have special orders to speak today. If the Committee on Rules steps in under these orders and takes up the remainder of the afternoon, does that mean that these gentlemen shall have this time tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it does not.

Mr. RANKIN. Does it mean entirely taking the time away from them?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is it.

Mr. RANKIN. I submit that is not fair, and I do not believe it represents the wishes of the House. I think it is entirely wrong. If there were a special order that did not take up time for debate, I think it would be different; but to take a man entirely off the floor, who has obtained a special order for time to speak, I do not think is right and I do not think it is the view of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that the gentleman is not being taken off the floor. It was understood when consent was given him that he would not have time if the program of the House interfered.

Mr. RANKIN. It was not so understood by the gentleman from Mississippi, and I am sure that it was not so understood by the other gentlemen that the Rules Committee had the right to take them off the floor for the consideration of a general bill, such as this so-called "hot oil" bill.

Mr. TABER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. TABER. To call the attention of the Chair to a situation in connection with this.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TABER. To discuss this point of order.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. RICH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. I rise to have the attention of the Chair and to express to him what was meant when the majority leader asked me if I understood that this would follow the matters on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RICH. For the purpose of explaining to the House and to the majority leader that I expected only the same courtesies to be extended to any Member of Congress. I am not asking for any special favors and do not want any special consideration by the leaders or the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 216

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5366, a bill to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

This is a rule for the consideration of the so-called "hot oil" bill, extending the life of that bill for 2 years. The rule is an open rule providing for 2 hours of general debate.

I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to answer a number of questions which have been directed to me in reference to why Senate Joint Resolution 155, to create a joint committee on tax revision, was not called up. I expected to call it up today immediately when business started. Yesterday, believing it would be a matter of great interest and expedition, the Committee on Rules held a meeting in the afternoon and reported out the rule. I am informed that it is not the desire of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], who introduced the resolution, that it be called up at this time. For that reason I did not call up this resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The understanding is, then, that the other rule will not be called up this afternoon?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I cannot enter into that understanding. I am ready to call it up at any time. It may be called up later this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes, and reserve the remainder of the time.

The purpose of this bill is to extend for a period of 2 years what is commonly known as the Connally "hot oil" bill. The bill as originally introduced by myself in the House provided for the permanent extension of this law, but the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce saw fit to make it 2 years. The real purpose of the Connally Act is to enable the oil-producing States to effectuate a policy of conservation. Before the State of Texas began its program of conservation, we all know what was happening in that State. Oil was flowing without restriction, with the result that the valuable natural energy which was responsible for lifting the oil to the surface at the cheapest known cost was being exhausted. We in Texas have seen some of the results of the policies of waste and exploitation. In my own congressional district at one time we were regarded as the greatest timber region in the United States, but by reason of the greedy and inconsiderate policy of exploitation we have lost that great natural resource. It has been estimated that 65 percent of our timber was wasted in order that the sawmills might recover the remaining 35 percent. Today we are expending millions of dollars in an effort to reforest those lands denuded of timber. What is true in reference to timber, is equally true in reference to our land which has, in many regions, been robbed of its fertility on account of waste and exploitation.

So in order to avoid the mistakes of the past the oil-producing States have inaugurated a conservation program. Whenever a field is discovered in the State of Texas—and what is true in respect to Texas is true with reference to the other four States which have instituted or inaugurated conservation programs, if the wells are permitted to flow without restriction within 90 days they may cease to flow, and from then on they are compelled to recover the oil through the expensive pumping process, which means that in the end the consumer will have to pay more for his petroleum products than if it were recovered in the natural way. That is because associated with oil is a substance known as gas, which makes it possible for the oil to flow. The water backs up against the oil, and when that gas is in the oil, the oil will flow and the water pressure will bring the oil to the surface at the cheapest known cost of recovery; but when a well is turned loose, the gas escapes and the oil loses its mobility. It becomes thick like molasses and the water dissipates in different directions, and from 75 to 80 percent of the oil may be left in the ground and only a portion of it can be recovered by pumping.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Obviously there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 80]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

On motion by Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

OIL CONSERVATION

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, there are five States that have conservation laws—Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Kansas, and New Mexico—but in the State of Texas we have approximately 72,000 producing wells. On the average those wells are limited to 17 barrels a day. To show what the effect of conservation has been on our supply of petroleum, during 15 days when the east Texas field was flowing without restriction the natural pressure in the field declined more than it has during the entire 2 years that conservation has been in effect. According to various estimates of engineering experts, the amount of oil that will be recovered in the east Texas field alone has been increased from 600,000,000 barrels to 2,000,000,000 barrels. The reason for that, of course, is manifest. There are two kinds of waste in the production of oil. One is the above-ground waste, or the production of a larger supply of oil than the market can absorb. That occurs when huge quantities of oil are produced and the market does not need it. The oil is stored temporarily to await market demand. During the time it is stored many of the vital elements of the oil are lost through evaporation or shrinkage, and the hazard of fire. Not only that but the cost of storage is great, adding to the ultimate cost to the consumer.

The underground waste occurs by the wasteful and unsound means of production and recovery. So that the oil-producing States, in inaugurating a program of conservation, should be commended and encouraged by the Nation at large. In the first place, it is distinctly in the interest of the independent producer. About 47 percent of our wells in Texas are owned by independent producers. Before we had conservation, when an independent producer brought in a well there was no dependable outlet for his oil. He was compelled to go to the major companies and sell the oil for any price he could get for it. But since conservation has been in effect we have had a stable market. The wells are prorated. A well that would flow 30,000 or 40,000 barrels a day is limited to 20 or 25 barrels a day, no matter who owns that well. That means instead of recovering about 25 percent of the oil underground and wasting 75 percent, we will have a recovery which, in the east Texas field, is now estimated at 97 percent.

The only opposition to this measure which I have ever discovered is on the part of a small minority of jobbers, jobbers who say that the margin of profit which they are receiving is not sufficient. The margin of profit enjoyed by the jobber, the middleman, the man who has little or no investment, the man who stands between the producer and the ultimate consumer today is approximately 2 cents on a gallon of gasoline. He wants more margin of profit. This means that if he gets what he wants, the price of gasoline instead of averaging 14 and a fraction cents, as is the average over the United States today, will be increased by the amount of additional profit that the jobber receives.

When oil was flowing without restriction, and even after we passed our conservation law, we had the racketeers who went into the east Texas field and produced in excess of their allowable. If they were given 17 or 20 barrels, or some other amount they would produce 1,000 or 2,000 barrels. Under the law of the United States, when they tendered that oil to the railroads the railroads were compelled to accept it because it was interstate commerce and the State of Texas had no jurisdiction over it. All that we are asking in this bill is an extension of the act which denies the facilities of interstate commerce to the man who wants to steal the oil of his neighbor. For instance, suppose there are 150 owners of a given pool. The surface rights can be segregated; I may own 10 acres, you may own 5 acres, and so forth; but underneath all of the surface rights there is a common pool of oil. Under the law of capture, the man who reduces that oil to possession gets it. In order, therefore, that each man might have his share in that common pool, and in order that one man may not dissipate the natural energy of the gas and the water pressure which elevates that oil to the surface and enables oil to be produced at the minimum cost under proration or under conservation we say that each man is given his share of oil underneath the soil.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes, briefly.

Mr. MAY. I know but very little about the bill and am in that position where I must decide how to vote after I have listened to the debate; but one thing I did get from the reading of the bill known as the Connally bill, which set up a national bituminous-coal commission and practically nationalized the coal industry, is that it is going to result in monopoly in the coal business in favor of the big operators. I am just wondering whether or not this bill is going to have the same effect.

Mr. DIES. Let me answer the gentleman right there on the monopolistic feature. If I am an independent producer and have a stable market for my output, I can develop my leases. Today in the fields of Texas, and I presume in all the other oil-producing States, for the first time the independent producer is able to borrow money at 3½ percent to finance the development of his leases, because he has a stable market. It is a fact that 70 percent of all the known oil reserves in the United States is in the stripper-well area. A stripper well produces from half a barrel to 10 barrels a day. The cost of production is very great, because the stripper well must be pumped. When the "hot oil" thieves were in the saddle in Texas they were dumping oil at 10 cents. They had to get it out of the State and then turn loose of it quick, and they were dumping it on the market at any price they could get. It did not hurt the big companies, for they could store thousands and millions of barrels and wait until the demand increased or wait until the first flow was gone, the cream of the oil was gone. Of the 350,000 wells in the United States, 250,000 are stripper wells. They could not compete with 10-cent oil; they could not produce for a dollar a barrel. What happened? According to the Interior Department, thousands of those stripper wells closed down permanently; so that not only was there an economic loss in the fact that many small producers were driven from the field, but we permanently lost a large supply of oil underneath the stripper-well area.

This bill, therefore, is distinctly in the interest of the little producer. What about the consumer? The charge is made that we in the oil-producing States are only concerned with our own interests.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question in connection with stripper wells?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. DISNEY. When the stripper well is abandoned, it is abandoned for good; it is a loss.

Mr. DIES. It is practically lost. But let me hasten on. Let us see whether or not this bill in any sense promotes monopoly. All this bill provides is that when a man steals oil, when he takes his neighbor's oil, he shall not have the privilege of shipping it in interstate commerce. Consumption has increased, even since the conservation program went into effect, because the number of automobiles has increased and the return to prosperity has made a tremendous demand for oil.

We do not hold down the production in order to increase the price of gasoline to you. The production today is much larger than it was, even before conservation went into effect. Why? Because it is to the interest of the oil-producing States that they produce and sell their product to the nonproducing States at the cheapest possible cost.

Let us see whether or not the figures bear that out. I have here the figures covering the price of gasoline from the year 1919, at which time it was 25 cents a gallon. It has been falling steadily until the price now averages 14.76 cents on gasoline.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, here are the figures covering the increase in the commodity prices of petroleum and petroleum products as compared with everything else. These are not my figures. The increase from 1934 to the present time in the price of gasoline has been 2.3 percent; in food it has been 8.6 percent; in housing, 3.1 percent; in other words, the increase in the price of gasoline to the consumers in the nonproducing States has been less than the increase in many other commodities.

Let us see where this leaves the consumer in the long run. If we turned loose all these wells, for 90 days they could flow at the rate of 10,000, 20,000, or 30,000 barrels a day. But within 90 days you would have lost all of your gas energy. Your oil would no longer be mobile. Your water would have dissipated itself. Then you would have to pump, and when you go to pumping you will never recover a large part of the oil under the ground. What does that mean? You have only a limited supply. No one knows how much. It is estimated at 12,000,000,000 barrels. It may be double that amount. We may continue to discover new deposits. On the other hand, we may never discover any more. So conservation is the efficient use of the natural resources and does not mean, as some Members seem to think, reservation. Of course, if we would say, "We only have 12,000,000,000 barrels. We will never have any more. We are going to hold that in the ground", in 10 years they may discover a substitute for oil and render our deposits worthless. On the other hand, the carburetors can be improved to the point where they may run automobiles, as they do in Europe, on much less gasoline than in the United States. So that conservation does not mean reservation. It means an efficient use of these natural resources.

Why do these jobbers complain? Is it because they were buying oil at 10 cents and selling it for $1? Is it because they want to make it impossible for our oil-producing States to conserve this great natural resource, not only for national defense but for the benefit of all the States?

Mr. Speaker, the oil-producing States cannot conspire, because the minute we conspire, under the provisions of the Connally Act the President can suspend the operation of the act. In other words, if we were to reduce the supply below the market demand, then immediately the President has the right in connection with the protection of the nonproducing States to suspend the act.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. If conservation is the purpose of this law, will the gentleman explain to the House why our exports of oil have increased and why we are sending our oil to other countries rather than keeping it for home consumption?

Mr. DIES. The export of oil has nothing whatsoever to do with this act, which only applies to stolen oil shipped in interstate commerce. It may be that for conservation purposes it is a foolish thing to export such huge quantities of oil. On the other hand, it may be argued we ought to import oil; but when we undertake to do that, what happens? If we were to import the cheap foreign oil into the United States you would close down all of your stripper wells and lose more of your supply underneath the stripper wells.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. May I ask the gentleman how many States have passed the conservation law?

Mr. DIES. Five States have passed that law.

Mr. REED of New York. Could the gentleman give me the names of those States?

Mr. DIES. Texas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Kansas, and Oklahoma.

Mr. REED of New York. When does the conservation law in the gentleman's State expire?

Mr. DIES. The conservation law expires in 2 years in my State.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DIES. I must decline to yield. So that when the jobbers undertake to propagandize Congress with the statement that this is a monopoly, may I say the reason for their objection is they do not get enough margin of profit out of the sale of gasoline. That is the basis of their objection and, mind you, complaint has been received from only about 10 percent of the jobbers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). The Chair will count.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order for a moment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

AN APPEAL TO REASON

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, time, in its course, has produced a strange epoch in the history of our Nation. In the 8 years following the speculative crash of October 1929 strange events have taken place in our country. A collapse presumably but a periodical depression has assumed all the aspects of permanency.

One-third of our people are still suffering from the unbridled greed of the comparative few, who brought down upon our Nation the necessity for an economic readjustment.

For that one-third of our population some measure of responsibility must be accepted by the other two-thirds. The Federal Government, cooperating with the various State and local authorities, are but the instrumentalities whereby that responsibility may be discharged. In an orderly procedure intended to ameliorate the conditions of that one-third, whom the President describes as "ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed", there arises a situation against which we must carefully guard else we will make poverty a permanent feature of our national life. Our planning and our spending for those in need of aid should be only of a character designed to permanently improve the economic status of those who are willing but unable to be self-sustaining. For these, the security wage—a dole in fact—can never be substituted for wholesome employment in productive enterprises.

The boondoggling projects of the past lower the morale of the worker and subject the Government to criticism and ridicule. These must give way to a saner program which directs the spending into channels whereby the people as a whole will be better fed, better shod, better clothed, better housed, and more self-respecting.

There should be no question as to what our selection ought to be when it comes to choosing between parks, monuments, and recreational projects or homes, schools, hospitals, and roads.

In asking the Congress to "take further action to extend the frontiers of social progress" the President sets forth "the overwhelming majority of our population earns its daily bread either in agriculture or industry." No truthful remark could be more deceptive. If we consider those who produce nothing but service as being engaged in industry—which is no more logical than considering the person who consumes the product of the farm as being engaged in agriculture, we may accept this statement without question.

THE FACTS ARE DIFFERENT

In 1929 there were, according to statistics compiled by the Bureau of Census, 8,839,000 workers gainfully employed in the manufacturing industries of America. These workers produced new goods and services to the value of $70,430,000,000 and received in salaries and wages the sum of $34,149,000,000.

In the same year, 38,261,000 persons—including those engaged in agriculture—listed as gainfully employed by the Bureau, produced goods and services of a value of but $10,452,000,000. They received in salaries and wages $28,183,000,000, or nearly three times what they produced. Here we have in a nutshell the two great classes of wage earners contributing to the national economy. In the first class are most of the producers of added values, 8,839,000 in number, receiving an annual salary or wage averaging $3,868. This class make up for the most part the home owners and the taxpayers of the Nation.

The second class of wage earners, 38,261,000 in number, who add but a small part in the aggregate to the national income—outside of those engaged in agriculture—are those principally engaged in the service trades and professions. We might justly class their labors as social enterprises. While we are duly appreciative of this class of labor, we are not unmindful that, in an emergency demanding economy, self-service becomes a factor of primary importance. We must realize that the income of this second class, the servers, if you please, must be drawn primarily from the workers engaged in the production of capital or consumer goods. The welfare and continuing prosperity of the serving class is entirely dependent upon the welfare and prosperity of the producing class. The farmer in turn depends upon both classes as consumers of his products. Industry is now enjoying a small measure of prosperity. Men from the professions and service trades walk the streets seeking opportunities for employment where none exist.

Many of these, unthinkingly, blame the machine and technological developments for their present plight. They place no blame, whatsoever, on a commercial system which has sold the average citizen the idea that he is entitled not only to a share in the necessities of life but the luxuries as well. For these the ownership of an automobile and other household accessories have become more important than the ownership of a home. In many of the rural sections an expensive automobile stands beside a shack unfit for human habitation. A large portion of our population have sacrificed the necessities of life to the demands for conveniences. In the bitterness of their present woe they demand we halt the march of science by beating the drums of retreat. These must be taught new lessons of thrift and economy, and that the machine is ever man's friend. In the early days of the Republic the only energy available outside of that of man and the horse, was that furnished by the windmill, the treadmill, and the waterwheel.

Today with the power of coal, gas, oil, and water transferable into electrical energy, we have at our command in many sections of the country, at the mere touch of a button, energy available to perform Herculean tasks with machines that never tire.

The ownership of this energy, the distribution of its benefits are questions of great public interest and momentous concern. Of these I will later speak.

To extend the frontiers of social progress, the President no doubt has in mind added regulations of those engaged in the back-scratching industries. We can, perhaps, look forward to a new attempt at regimentation of the pants pressers and the bootblacks, for social legislation cannot be extended exclusively to those on the farm or in the productive industries. True it is that those who produce most of the Nation's wealth are a minority. In this minority are those who carry the burden of government, who pay the taxes, who build the factories, who furnish what little there is left of stability to our country's progress. Under the Constitution, we cannot by legislation, social or otherwise, deny the individual the right to work, or lawfully interpose an agency of the Government in the relations existing between employer and employee. Such a situation would be possible only under a political despotism or an absolute dictatorship.

More than 200 years ago a great philosopher said:

> It is the secure possession of property from the invasions of despotism that gives vigor to industry and spirit to enterprise.

Although the "innate decency of this small minority" is admitted by the President, he makes no mention of the fact that 122 industrial, railroad, and utility companies in the 10 years from 1925 to 1935 paid out $44,720,432,313 in salaries and wages to their employees, not counting millions in dividends to stockholders. Taxes paid by the same companies in the same period totaled no less than $7,824,079,064.

These are the companies that are recognized as the principal employers of skilled labor in America. They make up the economic royalist class that Candidate Roosevelt so bitterly attacked at Philadelphia last summer. They also are the principal targets of the new attempt to extend the frontiers of social progress by the regulation of wages and hours of labor.

Mr. Speaker, I bring up these issues to remind the Congress that after spending $35,000,000,000 in an attempt to buy prosperity for the forgotten man that everyone now knows that the minute this orgy of spending is stopped we will find ourselves worse off than when we started on our spending spree because we are now almost hopelessly in debt.

Mr. Speaker, it is entirely un-American to continue a system of wasteful spending which delivers unborn generations into a bondage of taxation for which there is no escape except by death or human drudgery. We must come to a realization that the road to economic recovery cannot be paved or smoothed with debts and taxation. It is obvious that this Government cannot borrow neither can it spend its way to prosperity. Mr. Speaker, we must attack the commercial side of our economic problems to solve our country's ills. We must be concerned with providing all our people with the necessities of life in abundance rather than insuring profits to a few.

Shorter hours and increased wages can operate in an economy where millions are unemployed only to lower the standard of living for many and make for decreased economic security for those who depend for their livelihood on accumulated savings from more prosperous days. The plan to regiment labor depreciates the value of both the saved and invested dollar. It extends temporary relief to those actually at work, at the same time penalizing all who consume either goods or services. Any added burden of taxes placed upon the employers of workers in industry, necessitated through new social legislation, will be reflected in decreased opportunity for income for those in the service trades, for taxes and governmental costs must of necessity come before voluntary wage increases which are most improbable with the present reservoir of employables, millions in number, clamoring for jobs.

Mr. Speaker, the New Dealers have been most efficient in their efforts to publicize their doings, and at the same time hide the fact that poverty is today our outstanding national problem.

Let me briefly review some of the events of the past 4 years. The President entered on his first term with all political opposition inclined to be cooperative. The temper of the people was bad; in spirit they were hopeful; they were ready for a new leadership.

Mr. Roosevelt had promised well. Then in quick sequence came a number of changes striking at the foundations of the then existing social order but narrowing the horizons of individual effort.

Under the blue eagle industry was regulated and labor ushered into the field of social regimentation.

In the mad scramble to codify all business the money changers and the exploiters were either entirely forgotten or actually aided by the Government.

The little fellow, still out of work, but with a few possessions left, watched the cost of living rise, paid while he could and nursed his faith in Roosevelt.

The small merchant, who had survived the onslaught of the chain stores and price discrimination, kept his doors open and lived from his own shelves, meanwhile hoping for the impossible miracle to happen. He, too, was a Roosevelt booster—and the exploiters kept right on exploiting. More home and farm mortgages were foreclosed. Stocks and bonds were forced to new lows in a selling market dominated by speculators. Heads of families, with no means of meeting their obligations, became the victims of financial pirates, the money lenders and the loan sharks. Usurious interest as high as 250 percent per year was charged on salary loans in some cities. Many were squeezed of their last bit of collateral.

One-third of the Nation was, in fact, at the crossroads of destitution. To the Nation-wide demand for action the Congress replied by shouldering onto the President the added responsibility of administering the relief they now voted.

The President had asked for money and authority—both were his for the asking. Thus the power of the Executive began to grow. This is the power he fights to retain.

Then came the new alphabetical agencies, the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. I do not need review the long list of wasteful projects that have been instituted under the Works Progress Administration, but I bring to your attention the services rendered in a great majority of the projects are not of the kind the average citizen would buy in the market. Besides the alphabetical agencies our Government has set up numerous other independent offices and establishments. Some of these have been a great expense to the taxpayers of the Nation.

Right here I will digress for a moment to make a few remarks concerning the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The act creating the Authority sets up several objectives—navigation, flood control, national defense, and the agricultural and industrial development of the Tennessee River drainage basin and such adjoining territory as may be materially affected by the development consequent to the act.

Boiled down for convenience, the plan for T. V. A. is to spend a sum which may ultimately reach $700,000,000 in the world's greatest social experiment—a plan, according to Gen. Hugh Johnson, that will cost all of the people a whole lot of money to benefit a few.

At the beginning of the present fiscal year the Tennessee Valley Authority, with principal headquarters in Knoxville, Tenn., was employing approximately 15,000 persons. Of this number, 5,263 of the directors, officers, and employees received salaries or compensation at the rate of more than $1,500 per annum; 109 persons drew salaries greater than $5,000. Included in this number are persons, several of them, listed as coordinators, assistant coordinators, and what have you. From some of the tales which trickle into Washington from Knoxville, I have been impelled to look over the annual report, a book of 378 pages, which, strangely, was not published as a public document and distributed to the Members, as is the usual custom. The reason, while obscure to some, is now perfectly apparent to me. In studying this report I find that in addition to numerous small contracts for the sale of electrical power to several cities and villages in Tennessee, the directors have during the last year entered into an agreement with the Monsanto Chemical Co., of St. Louis, to supply them for the next 10 years with almost the entire output of energy generated at Wheeler Dam, and at a price sufficiently low to warrant the chemical company building a new plant at Estes Bend, on the Duck River, near Columbia, Tenn. This contract, at a rate averaging a fraction over 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour for energy, contains the option of renewal for a 10-year period.

Now, if this contract is considered with the one entered into quite recently by the Authority with the Aluminum Co. of America to deliver to their plant at Alcoa, Tenn., secondary power at 2.51 mills per kilowatt-hour, even the most sanguinary person will wonder, "Who are these dams being built for—the trusts or the people?"

An examination of the Budget shows that we have already spent upward of $150,000,000 on the T. V. A., and this year we are asked for more than $40,000,000 more.

In looking over the report of land acquisition for the Norris Dam and Reservoir, I find that we have spent an average of $55.12 per acre so far in acquiring title to the 153,000 acres in the reservoir, although but slightly over 49,500 acres will actually be submerged in floodtime on the Clinch River.

Likewise, $47.32 was spent per acre in the acquisition of the 102,000 acres in the Wheeler Dam and reservoir.

The lands purchased at a cost of $13,305,000 were acquired by a land-acquisition department with a staff of employees running as high as 187 in June 1935.

It is charged, by parties who claim to know, that the overhead alone of the land-acquisition department was $9 an acre for every acre purchased.

It is claimed that all of the land acquired by T. V. A. was bought upon the recommendation of an appraisal board consisting of Joe L. Burdette, salary $5,600, a city real-estate man of some years experience who had been raised among the hills of Georgia; a Mr. W. E. Sanford, of Sheffield, Ala., salary $4,800; and Mr. W. P. Hemphill, salary $4,800, who had some experience as a real-estate agent and a deputy tax assessor. None of these men are said to have any special knowledge of land values in the Norris Dam area.

Reports of unusual payments are current gossip around Knoxville. It is said a T. V. A. employee owned a farm between Careyville and Jacksboro for which he paid $4,000. He claimed he put about $500 in improvements on it. T. V. A. is said to have acquired this property for $16,500. Another T. V. A. employee is said to have owned a half interest in a farm near Walnut Grove in Campbell County, and it is alleged that $4,000 would have been a big price for it. The T. V. A. is said to have paid $11,000 for this farm. I am informed a certain State official and a prominent doctor owned a farm in Union County that cost $2,000. The T. V. A. is said to have paid $9,000 for it. A banker at La Follette is said to have held title to a piece of bluff land just about the mouth of the Cove Creek which was appraised by one of their former employees at $1,200. They filed a declaration of taking in the Federal court and tendered a check for $3,400. Whether or not these stories that come from the Tennessee are true, the very fact that they are persisted in should warrant an investigation. Last year the T. V. A. generated 778,378,000 kilowatt-hours of energy. Their market to approximately 6,000 farm customers and 26,000 others receiving energy at T. V. A. rates was sufficient to use up approximately 32,000,000 kilowatt-hours of this energy, leaving a balance on hand of 746,000,000 kilowatt-hours. Surely no sane man will believe, as has been here repeatedly declared, that this small amount of current can be used as a yardstick in computing electrical rates elsewhere in America. The fact is, new and improved high-pressure steam boilers, coupled with improved turbines, and generators, have worked to reduce the cost of energy generated from coal.

Competition in the industrial centers with natural gas, oil, and other prime moving units, such as Diesel engines, have done the work which T. V. A. advocates now claim credit for.

The T. V. A. is delving into many lines of human endeavor, which reminds me of another story current around Knoxville. This is the story of the jackass that died of a broken heart.

It seems, besides experiments in agriculture, the T. V. A. also went in for experiments in animal husbandry. It is said that several years ago a committee was appointed to look around and buy a jackass for the Norris farm. The committee, so I am told, journeyed hither and yon, even out to Calloway County, Mo., in search of a suitable jack. After running up an expense account of $2,080 the committee is said to have found exactly the jack they were looking for nibbling the bluegrass on a farm near Columbia, Tenn. They made a deal and bought the jack from the reluctant owner for $2,500.

The jackass was finally hauled in state in a truck to Norris, and there he became the best cared for, the most tenderly cared for jackass in the whole State of Tennessee and probably in all history. When springtime came the time to use the jackass was opportune. For some reason he just did not fill the bill, so I am informed the jackass was finally sold to a farmer by the name of J. B. Waters, in Sevier County, for the measly sum of $300. Down on the Waters farm, in surroundings something like he had been used to, the jackass seems to have taken a new interest in life. Anyway, so the story goes, the jackass did well until one day this spring he just laid down and died. Mr. Waters and a couple of his neighbors went out to the field and looked over the remains and came to the conclusion the jackass had died of a broken heart, because he was the only T. V. A. jackass who could not make good.

This is only a parable.

But there is one bright spot in the T. V. A. spending. If there has been any waste here, you can be assured the New Dealers planned it that way. I refer to the model village of Norris Town, which nestles in the hills about 4 miles from the big Norris Dam.

This is an idealistic community of 334 homes, both large and small. In the springtime, with the blossoms of the dogwood and the red bud silhouetted against the verdant green of the hillside, no prettier picture can be painted. Here all Nature seems to be in harmony with life. Beautiful dogs play on green lawns with happy children and mothers sing as they go about their household tasks.

But how come all this happiness, this beauty in a region where just a few miles away many are still ill clad, ill nourished, and ill housed? What has brought this miracle about? Where do these people find the means to live in a manner apart from the rest of the world, in a little heaven all their own? The answer is T. V. A. and jobs in Knoxville.

Three million dollars has been spent in building this village to house T. V. A. employees. In Norris we find simplicity at its best. The houses are quaintly designed and easy to look at. Inside every convenience is provided. Tourists pause and gaze upon them in envy. Here the Government has done for every family what few can do for themselves.

Norris Town is strictly a Federal city, more so than Washington, for no one except the Government can own any property or maintain a business unless by permission of the T. V. A. All of the conveniences of the modern city are provided, including fire and police protection, controlled through a short-wave radio station, although the population is only 1,200. At one time the village had as many as 226 employees at a monthly pay-roll cost of $24,704. This amount is greater than the total income from rentals from all the properties. The city manager, who is supreme in authority, is retained at a salary of $5,200 per year.

No record of the income and expenditures of Norris Town is to be found in T. V. A.'s annual report. Other figures concerning T. V. A. expenditures have likewise been made practically inaccessible to the taxpayers. Even the authority of the Comptroller General of the United States has been resisted in his attempts to audit the accounts of the T. V. A. in the past.

The T. V. A., in its annual report, makes this ringing declaration of independence:

> The Authority contended then, and still contends, that the Comptroller General is not entitled to enforce a departmental style of audit upon a Government corporation of the T. V. A. type, and that he is without authority to settle or disallow accounts.

Surely the taxpayers who provided millions so generously for T. V. A. activities are entitled to an accounting of their money. But almost without exception, I am informed, efforts have been made to keep terms and conditions of T. V. A. contracts, which have been made, from the public as long as possible. This situation has led to numerous charges of irregularities which are in my possession and about which I propose to speak at some later day. In passing may I briefly mention that what the Government has accomplished at Norris Town points a way to help the homeless and idle of our Nation in a constructive program of building homes for themselves. Such a program is essential as a permanent step in the reconstruction of our economic order.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to criticize others. I know full well that what has happened cannot be recalled. The money we have sunk in experimenting, although "gone with the wind", would be well worth the sacrifice could we see some relief in sight.

Economics is, at most, an inexact science. Value is the most important factor of this science, and this is constantly changing. An appraisal of our present economic situation must not be confused with economic values. America is still a great nation. None of her material resources have been irreparably changed or destroyed.

Time and human behavior are inseparable factors in the present situation and should govern our next attempts to restore prosperity to our country. We cannot blindly assume that the future will be anything like the past. We know that there are no more frontiers to conquer, excepting the far-flung frontiers of scientific advancement. We are able to estimate that our population will by 1975 have reached that point where, under present productive methods, all of the available land will have to be put into use to maintain the present standard of living.

We do know that the demand for food, clothing, and housing is both a permanent and growing one. We know that there is a limit to our resources, and when that limit is reached we must either resort to substitutes or our standard of living will of necessity be lowered.

We know we must halt the accumulation of our national debt. So, Mr. Speaker, I make this appeal to the reason of Congress and all men: That we now commence to practice that principle of philosophy which needs no explaining—thrift.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on for hours and hours citing examples of how our resources have been wasted. The waste of money is but a drop in the bucket by comparison. There is much that can be done in the way of conserving and building for the future of our country. Projects of this kind should be substituted for those in which—

> The workers toil and toil, of toil no end to know,
> But endless toil and never-ending woe.

I believe that we have been elected to this Congress with a duty to perform other than putting an unwilling stamp of approval on the Executive's desires.

The Congress cannot, in good faith with the people, surrender to the temporary judgment of the Executive or the caprice of his appointees the full supervision of relief spending.

Mr. Speaker, the W. P. A. have heretofore approved 226,000 different projects with a total cost of over six billions of Federal funds. Of these projects, work has actually been started on 121,240 at an involved cost of three and one-half billion dollars. Of Mr. Hopkins I know but little. There must be some irresistible curiosity which spurs him on, for there is a halo of mystery around many of these projects which makes one wonder what new way they have thought of to waste the taxpayers' money.

Some of these projects I am informed may cost as much as $5,000,000 or more. Although Mr. Hopkins has doubts that any single project heretofore has cost that much, I again call the attention of the Congress that the money has been allocated in the sum of $6,750,000 for that real-estate unloading scheme in St. Louis, in which only $150,000 will actually go for work relief. I refer to the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial scheme, the promoters of which quite properly might be made the subject of a Federal investigation.

Mr. Speaker, in closing my remarks, let me take you back to 1929. It is obvious that, although a crash came, the troubles of our country were not due to the restriction or suppression of any right of the average person; but we had, through carelessness, built a commercial structure which exposed the masses to ceaseless exploitation. In the crash our social structure was seriously damaged.

Fundamentally the commercial structure has not been changed. The exploiters are still at work, and, in addition, we have in our social program nursed to maturity a new crop of Communists, labor racketeers, and political entrepreneurs, who would wade through the blood of their fellow citizens and sacrifice our liberty and democracy to substitute the red flag of anarchy for the stars and stripes.

The bulwark of their alien hope is that a constitution, designed to perpetuate all that is best in a government of, by, and for the people, can be so interpreted that liberty is mistaken for license to set up in America a new order bordering on anarchy.

The New Deal has sought to bring about changes in our national economy by experimenting with the social side of the problem.

The exploiters have not been curbed; the "money changers" still occupy "the temple."

The "rendezvous with destiny" has not been kept. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, the measure now before the House to continue the "hot oil" law should pass. All the arguments which were offered in behalf of this measure at the time of its adoption are still valid. We had full hearings before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and after hearing all the evidence which was presented, that committee brings us its recommendations that the measure should be enacted.

There are many strong arguments for our immediate adoption of the proposal to continue this law which expires by limitation of time on June 16. Some of the more important of these arguments I would briefly summarize:

First. This law has demonstrated its worth over 4 years of practical tests, beginning with the section on "hot oil" which occurred in the N. I. R. A. and continuing with the present Connally "hot oil" law which was adopted in February 1935.

Second. It has proved effective in enabling the oil-producing States to carry out their conservation programs which could be defeated by interstate shipments of illegally produced petroleum over which the State could not exercise any authority.

Third. By this law the Federal Government cooperates with the States in their effort to enforce laws intended to prevent the waste of a natural resource. Under the conservation policies which have been adopted by important oil-producing States, provision is made for orderly production on the basis of consumptive demand. Production in excess of that demand creates waste.

Fourth. This law, by closing the channels of interstate commerce to illegally produced oil, will promote conservation of a natural resource important to the whole country. Excessive production of petroleum creates such a competitive situation that wells of settled production whose costs are higher than flush wells would soon be eliminated. These wells reach the most important reserves of the country, which would be lost if the wells were closed. "Hot oil", therefore, would defeat the conservation policies of the States and would threaten the loss of the greater part of the Nation's petroleum reserves. Should these wells of settled production be closed, the Nation would be in a position of merely skimming the cream off its oil fields, abandoning each field in turn when cheap flush production ended.

Fifth. By making possible a stable condition within the petroleum industry and eliminating great quantities of illegally produced oil, usually sold much below the market price, this bill would aid in eliminating costly price wars, for which the consumer of petroleum products ultimately pays. Best assurance of reasonable prices to consumer would come from maintenance of competition. First effect of a demoralized industry is to eliminate smaller units which furnish competition. "Hot oil" was doing this until stopped. The demoralized price structure caused by "hot oil" would make it impossible for many retail marketers to continue to supply the consumer. Wild fluctuations in price would give an advantage to dealers who were supplied with the products of illegal oil.

Sixth. The Connally bill would help labor by insuring maintenance of a broad production program in all the oil-producing States, which includes many wells which employ more workers than flush fields. Turning a valve on some flush wells may be the only work required to produce illegally more oil in an hour than many thousands of other wells, all employing regular workers, could produce in the same period. Stabilizing the petroleum industry by eliminating "hot oil" enables the industry to employ more workers on a stable basis and pay better wages than it could when demoralized by "hot oil."

Seventh. The "hot oil" law in practice insures supplies of crude for each refiner. Without this law to make effective State laws and regulations only refiners with connections in flush fields could be sure of supplies, since wells in other fields might be forced to close through inability to compete.

Eighth. Bankers and financial institutions in the petroleum States consider this "hot oil" law an important element in the business life of that section. Banking institutions depend on a stable basis rather than on a quick turnover. They must base their operations on known conditions over a long period rather than upon uncertainties. These institutions in the oil-producing States would be adversely affected if the petroleum industry was demoralized by renewed "hot oil" production. The loss of many millions of dollars by the industry would be a staggering blow to the financial institutions of the whole country.

The importance of this measure to the oil-producing States might easily be illustrated in the experience of Texas. Texas is the principal oil-producing State in the Union. Within her borders lies the great East Texas field, one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, oil fields known. It has been estimated by competent geologists that this field, if opened up to its full producing potentiality, could produce many times as much oil as the entire world consumes. If we did that, however, we would waste an incredible amount of petroleum and make impossible the high ultimate recovery which we might expect. It is because of this situation that we feel that the aid of the Federal Government, through this "hot oil" law, is an important factor in our Texas conservation program, which is based upon the prevention of waste.

The petroleum industry is of great importance to my State. It has paid to the farmers of Texas $54,533,000 in rentals and royalties during the year 1934, the latest for which statistics are available. It has leased from these same farmers 44,000,000 acres, at an average of 44 cents per acre, bringing to the farmers $17,600,000, or only $1,000,000 less than the total amount of taxes levied on Texas farm property during 1934. It has invested in petroleum production $1,310,000,000, $70,000,000 in natural gasoline, $309,800,000 in pipe lines, and $114,482,000 in marketing properties.

Over 50 percent of the total taxes collected by the State government of Texas is derived from taxation of the products and the properties of the petroleum industry, of which $31,640,000 was collected through the State gasoline tax.

In addition to an annual pay roll of $150,000,000 the oil industry in Texas expends approximately one-half billion dollars a year for material and supplies and services.

The values to the State of Texas which these figures represent have been made possible only through the approach to stabilization of the petroleum industry which has been reached since Congress, through this "hot oil" law, closed up the channels through which those products "hot oil" were demoralizing one of our principal industries.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to discuss this bill not from the viewpoint explained by my friend the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. DIES]. In order to give the House the best available information I could about this matter I sent a telegram to Colonel Thompson, of the Railway Commission of Texas. I have a reply signed by Mr. C. V. Terrell, chairman of the Railroad Commission of Texas. The telegram reads as follows:

Colonel Thompson on his way to Paris, France, to represent United States at World Petroleum Congress. Approximate number producing wells in Texas this date 71,000, which have a combined potential for proration purposes of 34,000,000 barrels daily, but these wells allowed only 1,360,000 barrels daily. East Texas field has 22,790 wells, with allowable of 462,825 barrels daily, total potential east Texas being 13,761,275 barrels daily. East Texas has produced approximately 1,000,000,000 of its 4,000,000,000 barrels of oil, and field is still in its flowing life, which can be attributed to regulated production. Hard to estimate life of any field, as this is dependent on rate of withdrawals, but believe field should flow 5 or 8 more years under proper withdrawal regulations, and that oil will be taken out of field 50 years hence. Pressures in several fields of Texas have actually increased past several months under regulated withdrawals, showing splendid condition of fields.

There has been testimony before the committees of the House and of the Senate distorting what Colonel Thompson testified before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am going to read a letter from Colonel Thompson, and you can judge its value.

HON. MORGAN SANDERS,
Chairman, Texas Delegation, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SANDERS: I understand that a few jobbers have taken incomplete sentences from my testimony before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the purpose of making it appear that I do not think that the Connally Act is necessary for the effective enforcement of our State conservation laws, and that I am opposed to a permanent extension of this law. Of course, it is possible to take anyone's testimony and isolate certain sentences so as to distort the views of the one who testified. I am sure that if my testimony is read as a whole, it will be very clear that I am heartily in favor of the permanent extension of this very helpful law. Of course, I would not presume to tell a committee of the Congress of the United States what they should do in reference to the time limit placed upon the bill, but I did clearly state that in my judgment it would be very helpful to make the law permanent.

I tried to make it clear that insofar as intrastate shipments are concerned, Texas is capable of enforcing its conservation law, and I specifically stated, as is shown on page 58 of the report of the hearing before the Subcommittee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as follows:

"The State of Texas is doing, and will continue to do, everything within her power to carry out the high policies underlying the legislation referred to. In the past she has been greatly assisted by the proper exertion of Federal authority in the form of what is commonly called the Connally Act, and she believes that the continuing of such Federal action is essential to the complete success of her efforts."

May I express the hope that you will communicate this information to the members of the Texas delegation, and use it otherwise as you see fit.

Faithfully yours,

ERNEST O. THOMPSON.

Mr. Speaker, one Congress cannot bind another. The whole question in this matter is whether you are going to continue this law for 2 years or make it permanent. I personally think it ought to be made permanent. We are going to pass this bill because every Member here believes in conservation of the oil resources of the United States, not only for present purposes, but for the purposes of war, if we should have one, so I have no thought but what the bill will pass.

Suppose we pass this bill covering a period of 2 years. Then it is going to bob up here 2 years from now, and you will have to consider it again. If you do pass the bill as an extension for 2 years, the next Congress can repeal it if it wants to. Why not make this permanent and have the thing out of the way until conditions are such the Congress of the United States thinks the bill ought to be repealed?

Let me say I am a friend of this great committee. They wrote one of the fairest reports on this bill I have read on any bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter quoted in the report of the committee from Charles West, Acting Secretary of the Interior, which is very helpful. In this letter he comments on this proposed legislation and states he thinks it ought to be made permanent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 19, 1937.

HON. CLARENCE F. LEA,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEA: Replying to your letter of March 9, 1937, requesting a report on H. R. 5366, proposing to make permanent the law of February 22, 1935, which regulates interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law.

By giving strong support to the oil and gas conservation laws of the oil-producing States, the law of February 22, 1935, generally known as the Connally Act, has contributed materially to the advances made during the past few years in the prevention of avoidable physical waste in oil and gas production and to the resulting increased ultimate recovery of oil.

By eliminating contraband oil products from interstate commerce, the law has been one of the principal factors which have made it possible for nearly all independent and nonintegrated petroleum refiners to operate without incurring the substantial losses which threatened their existence immediately prior to the enactment of that legislation.

The law also has removed one of the most persistent elements in the vicious "price wars" which were prevalent prior to the enactment of the legislation and which threatened the existence in business of numerous independent retailers of petroleum products.

The law has made this contribution to the conservation of the Nation's oil and gas resources and to the economic stability of the petroleum industry without causing any material increase in the retail prices, ex taxes, of gasoline and other petroleum products.

The law has been supported with uniform success in the Federal courts in Texas and Louisiana.

In administering this law during the past 2 years, I have received full cooperation from the oil and gas conservation authorities of the several States and from the petroleum industry.

The need for the conservation of the Nation's oil and gas resources is of equal importance in periods of scarcity as in periods of excess supply and, in my opinion, the legislation which supports the State oil and gas conservation laws should be made permanent by eliminating section 13 of the law of February 22, 1935.

The Bureau of the Budget has advised that it has no objection to the enactment of S. 790, a like bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator TOM CONNALLY. Hearings on S. 790 were held on February 12, 15, 16, and 17, before a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate.

The enactment of H. R. 5366 is recommended.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES WEST,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I also yield the gentleman from Iowa 5 minutes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of conservation of the oil resources of the United States. I am in favor of the producers making money. I am in favor of the refiners making money. I am in favor of their pipe lines making money. But I think it is dead wrong to enact a law which will accomplish these things at the expense of the little independent fellow at the other end of the line, and it is entirely unnecessary to do it at his expense. You can enact this law to extend the Connally Act another 2 years, and at the same time amend it to protect the little independent fellow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman know the independent operators are enthusiastically supporting this proposed legislation?

Mr. BIERMANN. Oh, no; I do not know any such thing.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a number of telegrams refuting the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It will take a lot of them to refute it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The telegrams referred to follow:

DECORAH, IOWA, May 24, 1937.

Hon. FRED BIERMANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Galen Finnegan and Harry Fee, representative Iowa independent oil jobbers, will be in Washington to oppose the Dies bill, H. R. 5366. Would appreciate your giving them a hearing and opposing this attempt to make non-oil-producing States pay more tribute to producing States and monopoly.

W. E. SCOTT.

CRESCO, IOWA, May 25, 1937.

Hon. FRED BIERMANN,
Representative, Washington, D. C.:

As filling-station operators we are vitally interested in the defeat of the Dies bill, H. R. 5366. This bill, if passed, will penalize the consumer. Increased gasoline prices result in decreased consumption, which in turn will reduce the revenue for Iowa road-building program.

HOWARD COUNTY PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION,
AUREL C. BIEL, Chairman.
F. E. HOOPMAN, Secretary.

CRESCO, IOWA, May 25, 1937.

Hon. FRED BIERMANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

This department is keenly interested in having the Dies bill, H. R. 5366, defeated. Howard County consumes approximately 70,000 gallons of gasoline and 20,000 gallons of heating oil. If H. R. 5366 is made law, it will increase our operating costs considerably. We believe you can serve the best interests of all consumers by defeating this bill.

L. L. LOWRY,
County Engineer, Howard County.

CRESCO, IOWA, May 25, 1937.

Hon. FRED BIERMANN,
Representative, Washington, D. C.:

In special meeting May 24, the City Council of Cresco, Iowa, together with the mayor, passed the following resolution: "We sincerely believe that the Dies bill, H. R. 5366, should be defeated. The consumers of petroleum are now paying a premium for gasoline and heating oils, due to the Connally bill, which expires June 1, 1937. We do not believe that it would be wise to continue controlled production. The city of Cresco consumes large quantities of heating oil and motor fuel. We solicit your support in defeating this measure.

Mayor H. G. ADDIE.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman stated he is in favor of protecting the little independent dealer at the other end of the line by an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. DISNEY. What kind of an amendment would the gentleman attach to the bill?

Mr. BIERMANN. That is a fair question. I propose at the proper place to offer this amendment as a new section:

It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation or affiliate thereof to engage, directly or indirectly, in interstate commerce, in the marketing of crude oil, or any of the products thereof, if he is engaged in production, refining, and transportation of oil or in any of these activities.

This amendment does not separate these activities into four groups but merely separates the marketing from the other activities in connection with oil.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not think the gentleman has thought the matter clear through. The gentleman is not on sound ground there.

Mr. BIERMANN. That may be, but I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] or the other supporters of this bill are on firm ground when they propose to continue for 2 years a law which has ground down the little independent fellows and has driven some of them out of business.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. I have not been able to find an independent association in the United States which has not endorsed this measure, with the exception of the jobbers or the middlemen. I would like the gentleman to show me any independent producer or refiner or association——

Mr. BIERMANN. I am not talking about producers or refiners.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is talking about jobbers?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am talking about the fellows who run the filling stations, the little jobbers, the kind of people we have in Iowa. I have heard from scores and scores of them in Iowa who are being ground down by this law. It is not necessary. Your people can have the benefits of this law without hurting the rest of the independent marketers.

My amendment proposes that you continue to make money on your producing and refining and on your pipe lines, but also to allow the independent marketers to make a little money.

Mr. DIES. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time, because he only has a few minutes, but if the gentleman does not object, I would like to ask him this question: Is not the real ground of objection from the jobbers due to the fact that they want a larger margin of profit, and instead of a margin of profit of 2 cents they want 4 or 5 cents?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think there is something in that, but the specific objection we make to this bill is that the Standard Oil Co., for example, the Shell Oil Co., the Continental and the other fellows, engage in all four branches of the oil business and make money on their production, refining, and transportation, and lose it on the marketing end in order to drive out the little, independent, filling-station fellow.

Mr. DIES. Is not that true of many other industries or, in fact, is not that true of all the big business in the United States?

Mr. BIERMANN. That may be true; but I am saying it is not necessary in this instance and I think your committee will have a much better bill if they amend it to protect these little fellows that I have referred to, and that is all I want.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I, too, have received some protests from independent distributors. I do not know whether you would call them jobbers or distributors in the trade but they are men who have an oil business in my home town, for instance, and sell to a large number of independent filling stations. They claim, as the gentleman has stated, that the large concerns make more money on refining and in the other fields of the industry, and as a result they are able to undersell them and drive them out of business. I have not had an opportunity to study the gentleman's amendment, but I think the amendment gets right down to the meat of the matter and I believe it would be helpful to the bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. I cannot see how my amendment is going to hurt any legitimate business, and it will certainly protect the little fellows who cannot afford to come here and appear before committees.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the gentleman's amendment is a good one.

Mr. BIERMANN. On page 139 of the hearings you will find that the Texas Corporation on February 5 of this year, in a statement by Mr. DeGolyer, states, in effect, that that company makes a business of losing on its marketing end and of making up the loss in the other three departments. This is the kind of practice that we think is unjust about this bill.

I wish the proponents of this bill, who are going to have most of the time, would explain to the committee or to the House what injustice would be done by adopting this amendment. Do not say it is not germane to the bill because, if you do not object, it will go in.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Would the gentleman be willing to put that same principle into effect with respect to all business, prohibiting anyone in the production end from refining or selling its own product.

Mr. BIERMANN. Of course, that has nothing to do with the pending matter. We are just talking about oil now, but I may say that for 30 years the law of the United States has prohibited companies mining coal from engaging in the transportation of it.

Mr. DIES. But would the gentleman be willing to apply that principle of all business?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am not ready to answer that question, but would the gentleman be in favor of repealing the Hepburn Act, which prohibits the same company mining coal and transporting it over the railroads?

Mr. DIES. Of course, that has been the law for a long time.

Mr. BIERMANN. Would the gentleman be in favor of repealing that law?

Mr. DIES. I would like the gentleman to show the similarity between that situation and this measure which only applies to the shipment of "hot oil." How could this be connected even remotely with the question of monopoly or any other question of that sort?

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman can call it "hot oil", but it just means that these five States which happen to have this natural monopoly of the oil can curtail production, which means setting the price.

Mr. DIES. No; we have increased the production by 900,000 barrels a day, and the President can suspend the act the very minute there is any indication of a conspiracy to injure the consumer.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman is going to have a lot of time and I wish he would tell the House what injustice would be done if we protected the little, independent, filling-station fellows and the independent jobbers scattered all over the country who cannot afford to come to Washington and appear before your committees.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DISNEY. The amendment the gentleman has goes into the question of the disintegration of a business by separating it into divisions.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; there is no disintegration about it. My amendment simply provides that a concern engaged in producing, refining, and transporting oil—all three or one or two of them—cannot engage at the same time in the marketing of it.

Mr. DISNEY. In effect, that is what it amounts to, does it not?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not think so.

Mr. DISNEY. Has the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce gone into this subject and studied the gentleman's amendment to the extent they can speak authoritatively upon its effect?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think they can.

Mr. DISNEY. I do not understand that they have.

Mr. BIERMANN. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I understand, had an amendment that did provide for breaking the oil business down into four separate activities. My amendment does not provide for that, and is not as drastic as that amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to take only a moment or two to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] a question relative to the support of this bill. As I understand the proposition, the small independent producers in every part of this country are in favor of this legislation.

Mr. DIES. Absolutely, and they have endorsed it by resolution and have urged Congress to pass it.

Mr. SNELL. And a stable market is more to their benefit than it is to the benefit of the large producer.

Mr. DIES. There is no question about that.

Mr. SNELL. Because when the independent operators do have a stable market they go on and build up their business and they are not obliged to sell out to the large operators?

Mr. DIES. That is true, absolutely, and in connection with the statement about the jobbers, who are now receiving 2 cents, it must be remembered that even when oil is 10 cents you have certain fixed charges. You have your labor cost, your taxes, which average over the country over 5 cents, and the jobbers now are getting half as much as the average tax, so that when you deduct your taxes of 5 cents and what the retailer gets for selling it and the jobber gets and the storage and the tank cars, transportation charges—those are fixed charges which the consumer must pay whether oil is 10 cents a barrel or a dollar a barrel—you will find that what these jobbers want is more profit. They are middlemen in the field. These gentlemen are there between the retailer and the refiner and the whole basis of their objection is that they are not getting enough out of it.

Mr. SNELL. And the only opposition that I know of to this bill comes from these independent retailers who want to buy on a distressed market.

Mr. DIES. Not the independent retailers. There are 52,000 of them in their association who have endorsed this bill. According to the testimony of one of these jobbers, he admitted freely the reason he was opposed to it was because when we had cheap oil he could buy it at his own price.

Mr. SNELL. And we are really protecting the independent producers and aiding conservation by passing this act.

Mr. DIES. There is no question about that. The Secretary of the Interior is in favor of this and three Presidents have been in favor of conservation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. To ask a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. Going back to that question of monopoly and the power of the small producer to operate, it is my idea that on a stabilized market, say at a dollar a barrel for oil, he can go ahead and operate regularly and run regularly?

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. MAY. While, if the market is fluctuating up and down from 10 cents to a dollar a barrel, he cannot.

Mr. DIES. No; and the question of stability, while secondary to conservation, nevertheless is a material factor in any conservation program.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. In my district there are more large producers, more large wells than in any other district of its size. There are hundreds of independent producers, but up until this pro-ratio law was enacted, they were driven out of business completely because oil was 10 or 15 cents a barrel, but since the pro-ratio law was enacted, every independent producer joined with the large companies in maintaining that scale, and today every one of them has written or telegraphed me to be here to support this bill.

Mr. SNELL. That is the way I understood the situation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. All up and down every road in the United States there are hundreds upon hundreds of small filling station men and retailers depending upon those oil filling stations for their living. How are those men affected by this bill, in the gentleman's judgment?

Mr. DIES. This bill has absolutely nothing to do with their problem, and whether the bill be passed or not, the problem of the independent retailer is identical with the problem of the independent motion-picture producer, who is confronted with 4,000 theaters in competition, where the product is produced and exhibited by the same corporation. That problem has nothing to do with this.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. He is not harmed by this?

Mr. DIES. Not in any sense of the word, unless it is his purpose to use stolen oil. He could go down and buy stolen oil at 10 cents and go out and ruin the market for his legitimate competitor.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Have these people expressed themselves on this measure?

Mr. DIES. Yes; they have endorsed it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, in answering the many questions which have been asked the gentleman has stated that this law is endorsed by the independent producers and those generally engaged in the production of oil. The gentleman is slightly in error to this extent, is he not? This law provides that the ban on the shipment of hot oil through interstate commerce shall be extended for 2 years. It is the opinion of the gentleman, is it not, that this should be the permanent law and should not be enacted for only 2 years—that it should be made permanent?

Mr. DIES. It is my opinion that this law, if it is a good law—and it has been demonstrated that it is—should be made permanent law, but the committee saw fit to extend it for only 2 years.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I only ask for these 2 minutes for the purpose of interrogating the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] on a matter that has not been brought out in this discussion. As a matter of fact, when you get down to the rock bottom of this particular legislation it means in addition to those things which the gentleman has claimed for it, an increase in production not only for the present, which has been shown, but an increase in production over the long run in the future; in the future availability of the natural resources?

Mr. DIES. That is correct. As I said, in the east Texas field alone the conservation policy has increased the reserve by 2,000,000,000 barrels, according to the most optimistic estimate.

Mr. KLEBERG. Now right there, the gentlemen who are complaining in this particular instance of being injured by this bill are interested, not in the features of this bill other than that which applies to the production of illegal oil, which they can buy at a low figure, which illegal oil, if permitted to exist, will defeat the potential purpose of this act and the future enjoyment of this great resource?

Mr. DIES. Not only that but this illegal oil, sold cheaply, will be used as a substitute for coal. A vital element will be wasted in addition to the other problem.

Mr. KLEBERG. I would like to continue this a little further. The original purpose of this bill and the final effect of it was to outlaw the production of uncontrolled oil through barring its shipment interstate?

Mr. DIES. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUECKE].

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation has corrected the situation at the wells. There is no argument against that. It has brought up the price of oil at the wells from 10 cents to perhaps a dollar. That is not in dispute. But as much as we all agree in conversation—and, of course, everyone must agree to that—this bill, in endeavoring to conserve the oil supply and do away with hot oil, has backfired on the independent small jobber. There is no question about that. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] made the statement that these small jobbers are complaining because they cannot make over 2 cents a gallon on their gas. That is true; but this is the point: That unless they can get 10 cents a gallon for the gas, or at least until the gas is priced at 10 cents a gallon, they come out on the short end. Not so long ago I went through a town in Michigan, where I saw a sign "12 gallons for a dollar." All of these charges had to come out of that, which in the end means that the most this jobber was making on that gas was about a cent and a quarter a gallon. In addition to that, according to the hearings which I have before me, I find this:

Integrated companies also at the present time are leasing expensive service stations at rentals of one-quarter to 1 cent per gallon, such stations having an average monthly gallonage of 3,000 to 8,000 gallons. It is impossible to justify leasing expensive locations for practically no return whatever on the investment.

In other words, they are doing that just to get rid of the retail end of the business. In my estimation, that is nothing more than dumping. We have laws against the dumping of foreign products on the American market, and I think we ought to have laws against the dumping of domestic products.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas that conservation is a fine thing and we must have it; but, as I said in the beginning, it is backfiring on the smaller man. I wish the gentleman from Texas would consider the proposition of having this cleared up, whereby the small independent jobber is gradually being put out of business.

Mr. DIES. I have no objection to protecting the independent jobber, but this is a matter that absolutely does not remotely affect his problem unless he wants "hot oil." Then, if he gets "hot oil", he will put all the independent dealers out of business.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. There is no more justice for saying that than accusing the producers and refiners with wrong motives, but if a retailer cannot make money on a 2-cent margin there is no more reason why he should continue that way any more than the producer should produce oil at 10 cents a gallon. If the producer ought to have more money to make a profit, then it is legitimate for the retailer to make more money.

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. If the independent jobbers are put out of business, you and I know that the price of gasoline is going up, regardless of what price is received at the wells. The only motive behind this thing is to put these little fellows clear out of business so there will be no competition whatever. Not only will the consumer suffer but labor will suffer as well.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That LYNDON JOHNSON, of the State of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Naval Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

OIL CONSERVATION

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5366) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 5366, the oil-conservation bill, with Mr. WOODRUM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in 1935 Congress passed a bill now commonly referred to as the "Hot Oil" Act, which contains in section 13 a provision that the act should "cease to be in effect on June 16, 1937." The pending legislation as proposed to be amended by the committee is to extend the life of this act until June 30, 1939, or substantially 2 years.

The "Hot Oil" Act was passed after the oil industry had been in a deplorable condition for several years, as was universally recognized. In 1934 Congress authorized the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to make an investigation of the oil problems of the country. A special committee consisting of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] conducted a thorough investigation. That investigation was so ably and thoroughly done that the work of the committee has been a matter of favorable comment throughout the United States by those who realize the difficult problems of the oil industry. In part, at least, that investigation led to the passage of the "Hot Oil" Act. That same committee which conducted that investigation served as a subcommittee to consider this legislation.

The pending bill would extend the operation of this law for 2 years. The committee has so reported this bill on the belief that the act has demonstrated it has so far operated for the benefit of the United States. We believe it can be useful for a further period. It has accomplished two things that practically nobody will deny: First, it has tended to stabilize the oil industry. This is one of the great industries of our country which before this act went into effect it was in a deplorable condition. It is an industry which deals with a great natural resource of the country, an industry which furnishes an exhaustible supply of oil to the people of the United States. That is a product we can afford to use beneficially, but not to waste. Second, under the operation of this act the amount of reclaimable oil in the fields has been materially increased. I do not think there is any doubt of this. Orderly production has made possible a more efficient use of pressure that prevents waste and substantially increases the supply of oil that a field will eventually produce. That helps the Nation and the oil consumer as well as the producer.

The consumer is involved in this question also. There has been no shortage of oil. There has been no withholding of a supply to create high prices by scarcity. The President has never found it necessary to exercise the authority given him in the act to withdraw the Federal support for the enforcement of State laws in case the interests of consumers is jeopardized. Oil will eventually become scarce. Then it may become dear. The time eventually will come when the consumer problem in reference to oil is going to be a serious one. He may need further protection. Feeling that some day more consumer protection may be required by a more comprehensive act is one reason this committee is in favor of continuing this act for a limited time instead of making it permanent legislation.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 56 minutes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in using the balance of the time I may be permitted to yield to other Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be as brief as possible because of the lateness of the hour and attempt to shorten the discussion of this bill if it is agreeable to the committee in order that we may conclude in less than the 2 hours.

It was my privilege, as the distinguished chairman of our committee stated a moment ago, in 1934 to act as chairman of a committee representing the House to investigate the petroleum industry. I am happy, of course, after two elections intervening to find the personnel of the committee of 1934 still functioning in the House and functioning today as the subcommittee on oil of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. The hard and efficient work by my associates on the committee fully justified the confidence in them which their constituents have for them. At the outset permit me to state that the Members of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] traveled through the oil fields of Texas, Oklahoma, Michigan, Kansas, and Pennsylvania, and other oil-producing States, and gave a great deal of time to the big subject before us. We are unanimous in reporting this bill, and the entire Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is unanimous in recommending the bill extending the present act for a 2-year period instead of making it permanent law. We feel that there are most convincing reasons for the extension of this bill for a temporary period only. The State of Texas where the bill has functioned since its enactment and has the only tender board provided for under the bill, has temporary proration laws at this time which will expire in a little over 2 years. The interstate compact to which the oil-producing States are parties and which Congress ratified at the last session expires on September 1 of this year and will be before us during the present session for further consideration.

What I want to impress upon the Members of the House is that this is primarily a conservation measure. Indirectly, I have little doubt it tends to stabilize the entire industry. It has not, in my opinion, sufficient, if anything, to do with the problem of independent labor, to justify its defeat because of their objections to its passage.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. In a minute. There were some independent jobbers from my district and other districts who appeared before our committee and submitted amendments such as the distinguished gentleman from Iowa has presented. Disintegration of the great petroleum industry in this country, if this Congress wants to do that, has no place in this legislation. I think my distinguished friend will concede it is not germane to ask the House to say that pipe lines, production, marketing, and refining shall be divorced, one from the other, in legislation of this character.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. My amendment does not provide for the disintegration of these activities. My amendment merely provides that a person or corporation engaged in marketing shall not engage in any of the other three activities. They may engage in all three of the activities but not in marketing.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I think the gentleman will concede the effect of his amendment will be to divorce marketing, and is therefore not germane to the narrow and well-defined issue before us.

Mr. BIERMANN. No. I have not any concealed hopes at all.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the petroleum industry is our second largest industry. Speaking conservatively, I suppose $15,000,000,000 or more are invested in this great industry. First comes the railroads and then agriculture, if we class agriculture as an industry. You will find in those three the finest demonstration of Americanism in connection with the functioning of the activities they control. I include petroleum in that statement. They are the highest type of men, from the head of some of the integrated companies, whom I have met, on down. True, they are in the business to make money, and they do make lots of money. This country is safe, in my judgment, with the type of men we find in these three great industries, controlling such a large part of our everyday life. Labor enjoys a major part in this happy situation. In every phase of the oil business it is just saturated with risks of one kind or another.

This bill does not guarantee to the producers in Texas, Oklahoma, and other producing sections of this country that every time a "wildcat" well is drilled, every time they spend thousands of dollars prospecting, every time they speculate trying to make new discoveries that they are going to be reimbursed for their loss; neither does it contemplate a similar thing for the transportation or the refining branches of this industry.

The independent jobber and the independent marketer have problems, it is true. All marketers do. But the fact they have a problem to solve should not result in this House being unwilling to lend a helping hand to any State of this Union possessing a resource indispensable as this is to the people of my district and every part of the country. The Government should be willing to assist toward solving their problems.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am willing to make the statement that our petroleum resources as known today have a life of not over 15 years. We have increased the demand for petroleum by 40 percent in this country in the last 3 years, and we are meeting this demand. Some may laugh at the idea that our known resources today have a life, under present demand, of only 15 years. I hope I am wrong. But as one not living in an oil district but who has lived with this problem for some years, I am willing to stand on that prediction.

The highest point of production in this country—about 3,560,000,000 barrels of petroleum—reached this week, while two and one-half billion was the figure 3 years ago. I do not like to have some gentlemen say, in order to satisfy a few who blindly want to tear down this help from the Federal Government, we shall not encourage legitimate conservation back in the producing States. Bear in mind that the only way the State of Texas can conserve this resource legally is to restrict production in line with waste prevention. That is all according to legal standard. Certainly if that is what they are doing today, if the owner of a well can dispute the authority of the orders or the validity of the orders of the Commission, and does so, if the States do not follow sound legal theories, we want to encourage such action. There may come a time when there will be a need for this law as a permanent proposition, but I am just as certain in my mind it does not exist today as of any statement I ever made.

Mr. Chairman, but for the limitation of time, I would incorporate in the RECORD some of the startling figures as to the taxes paid by this great industry—by the little fellows and big fellows, what it means to the Federal Government and the State governments through the taxation of many, many different kinds of petroleum products and activities. Finally, I ask the Members of the House to go along with the committee, which was unanimous in its recommendation for the extension of this act for a temporary period until more permanency is assured to the Federal Government as to the attitude of the various States, especially the principal producing States and some sane and necessary program, including definite interest and authority in the Federal Government is considered.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is well to keep in mind that the Connally Act in itself does not attempt to restrict the production of oil. It simply provides, in effect, that the Federal Government shall assist the States, where it is necessary to do so, in seeing to it that oil which is produced in excess of State allowables, so-called—that is, the amount that may be produced lawfully under the laws of the States and the regulations of State authorities—shall not be shipped in interstate commerce. That is the gist of the Connally Act. It has been in effect a little over 2 years, and expires in a few days.

This bill, or the amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, proposes to extend the life of this act for another 2 years. The Senate bill provides for the extension of the act permanently. I am not in favor of a permanent extension of the act, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not favor a permanent extension of it. It does favor, and has reported, an amendment to the Senate bill to extend the life of the act for 2 years.

It is well to keep in mind also that before the passage of the Connally Act the production of oil was in a very chaotic condition. It was practically impossible at that time for the State authorities, especially in the State of Texas, to enforce their laws regulating production without the assistance of the Federal Government. The situation in this respect has greatly improved during the 2 or 3 years the Connally Act has been in force. The testimony before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the chairman of the Railroad Commission of the State of Texas, which commission has charge of the enforcement of the State regulatory laws, was to the effect that the State might get along very well now without the assistance of the Connally Act, although he favored the extension of it.

Individually, I think the chances of going back to the chaotic conditions which existed before the passage of the act are too great to justify letting it expire at this time. For that reason I am in favor of its extension for 2 years. I am in favor of giving it another 2-year trial. I am not in favor of a permanent extension of it.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, who is responsible for the administration of the law, favors its extension and testified before the committee in favor of it. I think it is fair to say that he is one of those who 2 years ago wanted to go much further in the direction of Federal control than the Connally Act goes.

The Government has established only one so-called tender board under the act. It operates in only one field, and that is the east Texas field. I believe the testimony before the committee was that there are 522 oil fields in the State of Texas alone. There has been no attempt on the part of the Federal Government to set up a tender board or to assist the States to enforce the Connally Act in any other State except Texas and only in the east Texas field in that State.

Mr. DIES. That is because of the fact there has not been any necessity for it in these other oil-producing States. If they developed a new field tomorrow, and there was flush production, such a board would be established in the State in which the event occurred.

Mr. MAPES. If the Secretary of the Interior saw fit to create tender boards to operate in other States and Congress saw fit to make the necessary appropriation to meet the expense of them, such boards could be established. The other States have been able to get along and to enforce their own regulatory laws very well without any help from the Federal Government.

As the gentleman from Texas well knows, 3 years ago when the Cole committee was in his State, the sentiment among the oil producers, and of the State generally, was such that it was difficult if not impossible for the State authorities to enforce the State regulatory laws. I understand that conditions are entirely different in that respect now than they were at that time and that the prevailing sentiment now even among the producers, is to limit production according to the regulations of the State commission.

Mr. DIES. I think the gentleman will recognize the fact no other State has any such oil field as the east Texas field, and no other State has ever been faced with such a problem.

Mr. MAPES. I think that is true, although California and Oklahoma especially, as well as some of the other States, produce a good deal of oil. However, the flushest fields are unquestionably in the State of Texas.

Mr. DIES. In answer to the suggestion that perhaps the State of Texas could enforce the law without the aid of this act, I may call the attention of the gentleman to the fact they have just fined twenty-some-odd violators a few days ago in Houston, Tex., and that this is going on even now with the law in effect. Therefore the need for the law is just as great now as it has ever been.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; but on the other hand, it shows the State of Texas is able to enforce its laws now, which it had not been able to do when the Connally Act was originally passed.

Mr. DIES. No.

Mr. MAPES. I cannot yield to the gentleman further. I do not want to take too much time.

There is one section especially in the Connally Act which should be kept in mind in the consideration of this bill, and that is the section which authorizes the President if he finds that production is being unduly restricted at the expense of the consumer, to suspend the operation of the law. There is, therefore, a double check on any undue limitation of production in the fact that the Connally Act attempts only to aid the States in enforcing their own State laws, and the fact that if production is restricted too much the President can suspend the operation of the law.

With respect to the situation of the jobbers, I think it may be fairly said there has not been sufficient study made of the oil situation from the standpoint of the consumer. Some day I hope that Congress will authorize such a study to be made. However, the jobbers are interested in the margin which they receive, the difference between what they have to pay for the refined product and what they receive for it. This bill, it seems to some of us, in no way affects that question and does not, therefore, affect the profit of the jobbers. It has nothing to do with that question. The integrated companies will continue to exist whether this bill is passed or not. They will be producing, refining, sending their refined products through their own pipe lines, and distributing, with or without the Connally Act. It would seem, therefore, that the question of the divorcement of the integrated companies is not involved in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, there are just three questions before the House. Shall we permit the present Connally Act to expire on the 16th of this month, shall we continue it for 2 years thereafter, or shall we continue it permanently?

The bill as it passed the Senate called for the extension of the present law as permanent legislation. Our committee, in considering the matter, decided it would be wise and in the public interest to continue it for 2 years only, and that is the bill as it is now before the House, or as it will be with the committee amendment that will be offered.

I think it will be interesting to those who have not followed this matter as fully as the members of the committee have been required to do in the discharge of their duties, if I briefly review the matter historically.

The National Recovery Act was passed on June 16, 1933. It had a time limitation of 2 years and was to expire on June 16, 1935. Section 9 (c) of the N. R. A. authorized the President to prohibit the movement in interstate commerce of oil produced in violation of State law without setting up any standards to govern his discretion or the exercise of this authority. For want of such standards, section 9 (c) of N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States by a vote of 8 to 1 on January 7, 1935.

The question then arose, What shall we do? It was feared by many that the same chaotic conditions in the oil industry, as had obtained before N. R. A. was passed, would obtain after the Supreme Court knocked out section 9 (c). So this bill was written, passed, and approved on February 25, 1935. The difference between this bill and section 9 (c) of N. R. A. is that section 9 (c) merely authorized the President to prohibit. This bill prohibits. This bill is mandatory. There is no discretion in it as to its general objective. This bill says that no oil produced in violation of State law shall be admitted into interstate commerce.

The reason it was continued on February 25, 1935, for a period of 2 years was because it was anticipated then that N. R. A., which was about to expire the following June, would be continued for a 2-year period, and so in February of 1935 the so-called Connally bill, which is now existing law, was adopted to expire at the same time it was anticipated that the extension of N. R. A. would expire, June 16, 1937. This explains the reason why this has been continued as temporary legislation heretofore.

When the first Connally bill, which passed the Senate first, came over to our committee, as I recall, it was made permanent at that time. The members of our committee, however, feared that the pressure of the oil-producing interests in the oil-producing States might be such that they might take advantage of the situation for the purpose of driving up the price of oil at the expense of the consuming States of the Nation. So, as a matter of caution, we put in the 2-year period and we also put in section 4, which is in the bill today, authorizing the President upon the ascertainment of certain facts to suspend the operation of the law so that the producing States of the Nation might not take advantage of the consuming States by any price fixing or monopolistic arrangement.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; I yield to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. That means the President has the power, under this law, to open the floodgates to what these gentlemen are pleased to call stolen oil.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; he has that power. He has the power to suspend the operations of the Connally bill if he finds that the oil-producing States which do prorate production are limiting production below national demand and thus unjustly enhancing the price.

Fear has been expressed that the passage of the bill, even for a 2-year period, and despite the safeguard of section 4, will enable the oil producers to reap a rich harvest at the expense of the consumers.

As I said, we took that possibility into consideration 2 years ago. In addition to the 2-year clause and the power to suspend the prohibition of the movement of oil, the following matters might be mentioned as operating to defend the public against monopolistic price raising:

First. The fact that the Governor of Texas and Colonel Thompson have declared themselves very flatly against Texas being part of any price-fixing arrangement.

Second. The fact that in Texas itself there are more people interested as consumers of gasoline than as producers of oil.

Third. The fact that price finds oil, and as price rises, the drill goes deeper, bringing more oil to the market.

Fourth. The fact that there is no limitation on imports from abroad and, as price rises, foreign oil in constantly greater quantity will pour over the present 21-cent tariff wall.

Fifth. The fact that this tariff wall can at any time be lowered by Congress or foreign oil can be completely restored to the free list.

Sixth. The fact that if Texas interests, through pressure politics, did attempt to take an unjust advantage of the situation, other oil-producing States would supply the market.

Seventh. The fact that as price of fuel oil goes up, soft coal and gas, artificial and natural, come back into the market. This indicates that there is no practical way in which the market for petroleum products can be corraled. And in addition to all the above, you still have the antitrust laws of the United States, which are available at all times for the protection of consumers, and, as is well known, actions are now pending in the United States courts in Wisconsin for prosecution under the Sherman law.

Of course, if and when the long-anticipated day comes when there is an actual shortage of petroleum supply, a price rise then is inevitable. But, in turn, such rise, however serious, will have the result of developing oil substitutes from coal, shale, lignite, and other power sources. This is covered at some length in my book, Hot Oil, under the chapter heading "The Pinch Hitters."

Now, I am in favor of this bill for two general reasons. First, it does help to conserve a natural resource which is exhaustible.

It has been testified that by locking down the east Texas field and preventing it from flowing free and thus rapidly exhausting its underground reservoir energy, the potential recovery in that field has been increased at least from 600,000,000 barrels up to 2,000,000,000 barrels for the future consumers of America. Six hundred million barrels is the equivalent of finding 60 new, average-sized oil fields and 2,000,000,000 barrels is the equivalent of finding 200 average-sized oil fields. So that by locking down the east Texas field and preventing its reservoir energy from escaping, we have the equivalent of from 60 to 200 average-sized oil wells found by that operation.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am interested in the statement that some gentlemen were not so very sure that this locking-down process is a conservation measure.

Mr. PETTENGILL. There was testimony before the committee in 1934 to the effect that the east Texas oil field was locked down too sharply. There are oil wells there capable of producing from 5,000 to 10,000 barrels per day, that are locked down to 30 barrels a day, and there was some engineering testimony to the effect that locking them down too tightly might tend to a diminution of total recovery. That is an engineering question that was very much disputed and I do not know what the correct answer is. But in any event this bill does not itself limit production of petroleum, but simply says that no oil which a State forbids to be produced shall move in interstate commerce. Without this bill oil illegally produced in Texas if it once got by State authorities could move in interstate commerce, because if tendered to a railroad or interstate pipe line, the carrier has no option except to accept and start its movement, and as soon as it reaches the interstate carrier the State law cannot interfere with its movement, because it is in interstate commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not mean to imply that the bill applies only to Texas.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In practical operation at the present time it applies only to Texas, but it could apply to any State in the Union that adopted legislation similar to that that now prevails in Texas.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Oklahoma had the first proration act of any of the States, and still has?

Mr. PETTENGILL. A number of States have conservation and proration statutes, but we have a Federal Tender Board only in the east Texas field.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. I understand that is on account of the size of the pool?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; a pool that supplies 15 percent of the national market, as much as Louisiana, Kansas, and New Mexico together.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. And we have the same State act regulating the production of oil, or a similar one.

Mr. PETTENGILL. That is true, and that is true of Kansas and New Mexico and Louisiana and other oil States.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. SWOPE. Does the operation of the present law add anything to the retail cost of gasoline?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not think it does. The retail price of gasoline has gone up very slightly in the last 2 years, somewhere around a cent, I think, or possibly a cent and a half, but that is due, in my judgment, to the tremendous increase of the normal demand, the highest now of any time in our history—way beyond the peak of 1929. The retail price of gasoline has remained almost level in the past 2 years.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am afraid if we take up too much of the gentleman's time he will not get to a question which I would like to have the gentleman explain. I am very much interested to hear the gentleman explain why, in his judgment, if this law is good to prevent the shipment of illegally produced oil in interstate commerce for 2 years, it is not a good protection as a permanent basis? What is the real reason for limiting this law to 2 years instead of making it permanent?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I think there are several reasons that influenced the committee. One was the statement made by Colonel Thompson, of the Texas Railroad Commission, that he would not oppose a limitation of 2 years, although he seemed to indicate he favored it as permanent legislation. The second reason is that the Texas State law has been continued for 2 years only. It has been extended to September 1939, and our committee felt that we would not attempt to solve the future problems of Texas in advance of the time when Texas solved them herself. If and when the East Texas field "levels off", as it some time will, there probably will not be need for this legislation unless new oil fields are discovered which present as acute a problem as the East Texas field has done.

Mr. NICHOLS. And even if Texas failed to pass such legislation, does not the gentleman think that other States in the United States should be entitled to this protection, whether Texas had any such law or not?

Mr. PETTENGILL. That is true, if there were an acute oil problem in any other State of the Union. The only point where this problem is acute from a Federal standpoint is in the East Texas field.

Mr. NICHOLS. We have in the Oklahoma City fields an acute condition, but not so much so as in the East Texas field, but it could arise.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, the second reason why I favor the legislation is that it coincides with my general philosophy of government, to permit the States of the Union to solve their own problems if they can, with the assistance of the Federal Government, rather than making it difficult for them to solve them, and finally concentrating the management of all American business in Washington, D. C. In addition to helping to conserve a great natural resource, it also helps to conserve the American system of government.

The philosophy of this bill is a good deal like the prison-labor-made goods legislation, the Dyer Act with reference to stolen automobiles, and other legislation of that sort. If we can encourage the States of the Union to solve their own problems and help them police the administration of their own laws, it will tend to diminish this constant pressure for the concentration of authority in Washington, D. C. I think the general philosophy of the bill is strictly in accordance with our democratic institutions of State rights as against a bureaucratic Federal empire. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the general purposes of this act, namely, to conserve the resources of oil; but the working out of the act to date has had, in my judgment, two serious defects. One of those defects has been touched upon by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN], and I think his amendment is one that should be attached to this bill.

The second defect I shall take up in the course of my remarks. That is with reference to the use of oil in its many different phases. It has been stated here that within the last 3 years the uses of petroleum have increased 40 percent. The report also gives us that data, and I assume it is correct. It also states that on various estimates the storage of oil that remains will last about 15 years. If that is true, and that argument has been used in behalf of this measure, then I want to ask what is the purpose of our constantly shipping oil out of this country to the detriment of our own people and our own resources?

Here are some of the figures which I just took today from the monthly summary of foreign commerce of the United States:

Petroleum, crude, shipped out last year, 6,541,238 barrels.
This year, an increase, making a total of 7,372,184 barrels.
Refined oil, last year, 11,142,925 barrels.
This year, 13,301,207 barrels.

Fuel or bunker oil, which is absolutely necessary for warships, shipped out last year, 5,279,529 barrels; this year, 5,385,396 barrels.

Lubricating oils, absolutely necessary in war for the lubrication of all machinery, the mechanization of our Army, last year shipped out 15,747,132 pounds; this year, 19,334,177 pounds.

If you will check this report you will realize that we are steadily increasing our shipments abroad, while at the same time we shut off our own people, at a cost of $300,000 per year.

I have only taken a few of the outstanding petroleum items. If you will look through the summary of the United States Department of Commerce you will be amazed to see the amount of petroleum products, both crude and refined, that are being shipped out of this country. I think it is necessary to conserve our oil resources. I am one of those who believes strongly in the conservation of oil. If it is necessary to preserve these stocks of oil, then why in the world do we ship them out to other countries to use, and to use against us?

A continuance of our present system will inevitably result in the ruination of thousands of retail dealers and the further concentration of our oil resources in the hands of a few powerful companies. Save the retailer by separating distribution from production, refining, and transportation. Unless something of this kind is done the retailer is doomed.

And the final result will be that petroleum in all its branches will have to be Government owned. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to continue in defense of the independent marketer, who seems to be the forgotten man in this legislation. I trust, if we pass this bill, which apparently we are going to do, some amendment at least will be adopted similar to the one suggested by my colleague [Mr. BIERMANN] for the protection of the independent marketer.

Here is his problem: In Iowa we have a number of independent marketers operating filling stations all over the State. They must compete with large corporations who produce their oil, who transport it, who refine it, and who sell it. It is charged in my State that those people, by unfair competition with our independents, lose on their marketing and make it up in other branches of their business.

Now, this is called a conservation bill. It strikes me that is largely a subterfuge. I believe in conservation. I believe it is a sad commentary on this Congress that we have not before this adopted some national policy of conservation. But this bill does not do that. All this bill provides is that if Texas puts a limit upon the amount of oil produced there, the Federal Government will say that no more can be shipped in interstate commerce. In fixing this limit they may be motivated by a desire to conserve. They may be motivated by a desire to produce taxes or to maintain a price down there at a profitable figure.

Secondly, it strikes me this is no conservation measure, because we daily export 350,000 barrels of crude oil and import 150,000 barrels. It is purely a price-stabilizing bill. Like all that kind of bills that we have passed in the last few years, it is a price-boosting bill. If you do not believe it, I think you can get some little indication as to what will happen in the future by what has already happened this year. The first of the year there was an increase in the price of crude oil of 10 to 12 cents a barrel.

Recently there was an increase of 8 cents a barrel. This makes a total for the consumers of this country to add to their oil bill of $191,000,000. I am interested in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana and I am inclined to accept entirely his view of government as he stated it here.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GWYNNE. No; I cannot now. If I have time I will.

I believe, too, that as far as possible we should allow the States to solve their own problems. The principle of this bill, however, cannot be compared to the Dyer bill or to the Millard-Tydings bill, or to the Ashurst-Sumners bill. The Ashurst-Sumners bill provides that if my State refuses to have prison-made goods sold within its borders the Federal Government will protect it and not allow prison-made goods from any State to be shipped in.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I have arrived at my viewpoint on this bill not only from the evidence that was presented to the committee in the hearings, but from living with the oil industry and in the oil fields. I have participated individually in the oil industry as a laborer in drilling for oil, as a laborer in caring for production after it was discovered, to some extent at least in a limited way in sponsoring a program of drilling wells, leases, royalties, and in a few instances participating in financing drilling for oil.

This legislation has brought three important services to the oil industry and to the American public. First, the conservation of a great natural resource by providing a proration system against waste and dissipation of that natural resource. Second, it has brought stability to the oil industry and has made of it a business enterprise rather than a gambling game based on the chance of cutthroat competition between ruthless monopolistic groups. Third, it has brought a great degree of stability to labor in the oil industry.

This legislation is vitally important to every State that has a producing oil well. It is particularly important to those States that have stripper production, or wells that have to be pumped for the production of oil. In effect this legislation guarantees a market to the small concern, the little man, the man who is not big enough to engage in all the forms of the oil business, including production, manufacture, distribution, and sale.

There has been some discussion aimed at misguiding you, perhaps, into believing that this legislation means an increase in the price of the finished products of oil.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Was not the price of crude oil about 90 cents a barrel when this law was first passed?

Mr. BOREN. The price of crude oil immediately preceding the passage of this act in my district got as low as 10 cents a barrel.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Is it not now about $1.35?

Mr. BOREN. It is about $1.11.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. And if this legislation is continued for 2 years, is not the prospect that it will go to $2 a barrel?

Mr. BOREN. I think that it might reach probably $1.20. I think the argument I was about to advance will answer the gentleman's question and his supposition that an increase in the price of gasoline will result from an increase in the price of oil at the well. The facts are contrary to that opinion. It is evident that the price of gasoline is in the hands of integrated companies.

There is only one protection that can come to the consumer of gasoline, and that protection lies in the disintegration of those companies which are the sole producers, the manufacturers, the distributors, and the sales agents for that product. But that question has no relation to this bill. I may add further by way of personal illustration of what I mean this: When oil was 10 cents a barrel at the well the price of gasoline was just as high as it is today, lacking perhaps a quarter- or a half-cent advance that is due to the natural increase in demand. The conditions at the well at this time have no relation to the price of gasoline to the ultimate consumer.

This bill is a conservation measure with attendant benefits to the public, which I pointed out with reference to the stability of the industry and stability for labor. There are three groups who oppose the passage of this measure: First, the chiseler, the man who wishes to evade the law, who builds his markets under the protection of a twilight zone which will exist and which has existed without this law. The second group in opposition to the bill is composed of those whom I might term scalpers; that is the fellows who have the wealth and resources sufficient to drive out the little producer if the independent producer is not protected from evasion of State control. The third group is the distributor who prefers to purchase foreign oil, who wishes to benefit personally at the expense of American production and American labor. This law in effect simply places this protection around the law-abiding citizen within the State and permits the capture of the outlaw company which would take advantage of the twilight zone lying in the dispute of control where more than one State is concerned. It simply assures the State that the Federal Government will arrest this fellow if he attempts to carry his contraband goods in interstate commerce.

Despite what has been said to the contrary, I wish to point out that this law is an exact parallel to legislation dealing with the transportation of stolen automobiles. This measure is aimed at the oil thief. Without this law the company that would steal oil from its neighbor, once it got the stolen oil in movement in interstate commerce could not be arrested. May I say at this time I introduced in the committee an amendment aimed at greater stabilization of the industry for the benefit of labor.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman made a very fine fight for his amendment to stabilize the industry so far as labor is concerned by assuring to laboring people the benefits, but since that time the President's message came before the House and that is going to be accomplished in a general bill?

Mr. BOREN. That is my understanding.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman's amendment was presented several weeks before the President's message was sent up here but covered about what the President's message covered?

Mr. BOREN. Yes. May I say in connection with the amendment presented that a study of the hearings will show that what I said about the three phases of this bill is correct. May I say further concerning that amendment that since it was the majority sentiment of the committee that it was questionable on the ground of not being germane to the bill and since that time a President's message has called for legislation along the lines I indicated there, my intention is to present that amendment as a part of the program for general labor. And I announce to this body my intention to call for a 36-hour week and a minimum wage for labor in the oil industry. And my remarks from this point on will be a repetition of the committee hearings on my amendments, which are as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. LYLE H. BOREN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to offer for the record later a prepared statement substantiating my proposal here, but I would like to propose to this committee that it add to H. R. 5366, at the conclusion thereof, after the word "repealed" these words:

"And following section 2 of said act add:

"'No person, firm, or corporation engaged in the drilling for, production of, or transportation of crude petroleum in interstate commerce shall employ or cause to be employed any worker for more than 40 hours in 1 week nor more than 72 hours in any 2 consecutive weeks nor more than 16 hours in any 2 consecutive days: Provided further, That no person, firm, or corporation engaged in the drilling for, production of, or transportation of crude petroleum in interstate commerce shall pay less than $5 per 6 hours for daily employment.'"

In substantiating this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer later for the record a prepared statement, and due to the fact that the committee has other witnesses here who desire to be heard this morning I will not take up more of your time.

Mr. COLE. Might I suggest, that in order to have the hearing printed, and I assume you would want your statement to follow what you have said here this morning——

Mr. BOREN. Yes.

Mr. COLE. That you submit it to us as early as possible.

Mr. BOREN. I will do that. That is all I have this morning, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF HON. LYLE H. BOREN, M. C. (CONTINUED), APRIL 27, 1937

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer for the consideration of this committee an amendment to H. R. 5366:

"No person, firm, or corporation engaged in the drilling for, production of, or transportation of crude petroleum in interstate commerce shall employ, or cause to be employed, any worker for more than 40 hours in 1 week, nor more than 72 hours in any 2 consecutive weeks, nor more than 16 hours in any 2 consecutive days: Provided further, That no person, firm, or corporation engaged in the drilling for, production of, or transportation of crude petroleum in interstate commerce shall pay less than $5 per 6 hours for daily employment."

In offering this amendment to H. R. 5366 I am doing so in the belief that stability in the oil industry should provide stability in labor conditions in that industry and that legislation aimed to aid the producers of oil should take into account the workmen engaged in that production.

I represent one of the greatest oil-producing districts in America. I am acquainted first-hand with the situation that has existed in that industry during the last 10 years as affecting labor, oil production, oil marketing, and to some degree oil consumption and production control.

I have seen crude oil sell as low as 10 cents per barrel in my home county. I think I have some first-hand knowledge of the chaotic conditions that have existed in the marketing fields, both in the crude marketing and retail marketing of the finished products. But, also, I am keenly aware of the labor conditions that have existed in the oil fields for the past 10 years. I have seen the 12-hour day as a common practice; then, under the N. R. A. code, as low as 6-hour day. I have witnessed the effect of unemployment and observed the general condition of the country where oil is produced, both under the long-hour and the short-hour-day system. I want to point out to this committee that permanent legislation for the oil industry should take into account the laborer in that industry.

The necessity for this amendment is clearly pointed out by the fact that oil has gone up from 10 cents to $1.27 a barrel in my district; that is to say, that the price of oil has increased more than 1,000 percent, but the pay of the workmen has increased far less than 10 percent on an average.

The evidence in my home county would indicate that employment has not increased at all with the increase in the market price of oil. Of course, I cannot point out specific figures, but I could give you numerous examples from my general acquaintance with the personnel engaged in the production of oil in my district. Labor Department figures indicate that there has been an 8-percent reduction in employment concurrent with a 900,000-barrel daily increase in crude production.

I want to point out that there are certain integrated companies maintaining operation on a 36-hour workweek and at reasonable minimum rate of pay. I think it is safe to say there is a fair percentage of the companies engaged in oil production that are operating now on the basis that would be set up under the terms of my proposed amendment. Their experiences under the N. R. A. brought them to the conclusion that this operation was the wisest policy.

However, there is a large percentage of the operators who have already gone back to long hours, which, in turn, means less men on the pay roll and workmen engaged for longer hours without proportional increase in compensation.

This means that the 12-hour day in crude production is finding its way back into the producing fields. This condition, while not common, is of sufficient strength to act as an example frequently pointed to by those in the industry who are attempting to be reasonably fair.

It is evident that operators working under the code provisions, while facing the competitive factors relating to hours and rates of pay, must see stability and uniformity in hours of labor and rates of pay, or natural economic laws will cause them to lengthen hours and bring their rates of pay down to a figure comparable to this type of competitive operation.

My understanding of H. R. 5366 or S. 790, making permanent the Connally hot-oil bill, is that in the name of conservation it seeks to establish, among other things, a uniform price. The bill has as its purpose economic values to the operators, involved with, of course, an element consistent with the general welfare involved in the economy affecting this great natural resource. Since this legislation is in fact an economic stabilizing measure, it is important that we should establish economic stabilization for the workers involved. It is upon this principle that I have submitted for your consideration the proposed amendment.

Mr. COLE. Thank you.

Colonel THOMPSON was to go on next; but if you are willing to give way to Mr. Fremming, who has to leave this afternoon for Chicago, Mr. Thompson, we will hear him.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will be glad to give way.

Mr. COLE. He has a statement which he does not think will take more than about 5 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will give way with pleasure.

Mr. COLE. Before we hear him, the committee has considered whether it will meet this afternoon or tomorrow morning. Mr. MAPES is on another committee which requires his appearance this afternoon.

Mr. THOMPSON. That will suit me much better.

Mr. COLE. And after Mr. Fremming's statement we will adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. THOMPSON. Ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. COLE. Yes. We may go on tomorrow afternoon and Thursday afternoon, if we find it suits the convenience of the committee.

Mr. Fremming, we will hear you now.

STATEMENT OF HARVEY C. FREMMING, PRESIDENT, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF OIL FIELD, GAS WELL, AND REFINERY WORKERS OF AMERICA

Mr. COLE. Give your full name for the record.

Mr. FREMMING. My name is Harvey C. Fremming. I am president of the International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers of America, and I appear here on behalf of that association. The theory of the association has from the inception of the recovery in the industry attempted to contribute to certain defined economic standards in the petroleum industry through its organization and its relationship to the industry and through its association with the industry.

My appearance, Mr. Chairman, has no immediate bearing on the bill, although I am not unmindful of the tremendous value of conservation, but may I be pardoned for saying that I do not look upon this as solely a conservation measure. I cannot bring myself to think of this as a conservation measure. It is purely an economic measure, and the use of the term "conservation" here to my mind is in fact a misnomer. We are not unmindful of the purpose of the bill and the desire to have it continued for the economic reasons involved, but at the same time we appreciate the efforts being made to maintain the price structure through this instrumentality, and we offer the suggestion that there is another factor involved and that is the human factor in the industry itself. And that is the reason, the only purpose of appearing here, not to oppose the purpose of this bill itself but to call attention to the fact that there are some 85,000 workers in the petroleum industry, some of whom, by reason of unfair practices, are not going to benefit in the price structure value of this bill because some have failed to maintain reasonable competitive conditions in the production of oil. So that we have here the cost problem; we have the uneconomic situation of crude production, and it is our purpose, gentlemen, to ask for an amendment to the bill which will provide for maximum hours, regulation of maximum hours, and minimum rates of pay as just previously introduced by Congressman BOREN, of Oklahoma. We support his amendment and we support it for many reasons. I am not going into a lengthy discussion because of the courtesy of this committee in extending time to permit me to be heard this morning. There are many reasons why this can be appreciated, not only in this one branch of the industry but because of the human factor as well. This, Mr. Chairman, is not merely a question of regulating the shipment of contraband oil; that is, oil produced in excess of State allowables. It goes much beyond that, as very aptly appeared from the inquiries here this morning by members of this committee.

The right to regulate maximum hours of employment and minimum rates of pay is no longer a fancy or a theory advanced by theorists that appear before committees of Congress, but the fixing of minimum rates of pay and maximum hours of employment are now regarded within the rights of Congress in regulating interstate commerce. And certainly commerce is affected materially where human conditions obtained within the industry itself, and that leads us to the labor factor, the human factor in the industry. It is upon that principle, and that principle alone, that we appear here this morning and urge that this committee amend the present bill to establish maximum hours and minimum rates of pay as provided in the amendment introduced by Congressman BOREN this morning, and I am going to limit my statement this morning to the suggestion contained in that amendment, although I think some day this committee could give consideration to the study of whether or not the subterranean movement of oil from day to day, although it may not reach the top of the crown, has some value in a consideration of what interstate commerce is, although our understanding of it today is largely due to the fact that the movement in interstate commerce, for the purpose of regulation, must be of articles on top of the ground. It is our theory that some day we may develop the proposition that subterranean movement of certain commodities up to the point of the law of capture affects interstate commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I think there are plenty of reasons, plenty of reasons, and certainly economic reasons for this committee to consider favorably the amendment presented by Mr. BOREN to this measure, to this bill, if it is to be a stabilizing factor in the field of economics. We are, of course, interested in that, but we are equally interested in the human equation, of reducing that competitive factor in the production of petroleum. That is the principle underlying our support, and that is the main principle upon which I wanted to discuss this with you this morning. That is all I have to say. We could enter into a lengthy discussion of this principle, but the facts are known to you, and I think we all understand that the purpose today is one of stabilization in the industry, with all due respect to the statement made by the distinguished Secretary this morning, but the human equation is there and we must give consideration to that in maintaining the proper economic relation today.

I am somewhat discouraged by the conduct of the industry itself. When we met here in Washington in the bleak stormy days in July 1933, the industry itself lay prostrate; in fact, the industry was so concerned with price—and was concerned with consumer requirements because of the competitive picture within the industry—that at that time it agreed upon a code of fair competition which had for its purpose regulation of labor relations within the industry as applied to maximum hours and minimum rates of pay. Most of the substantial organizations in the industry have maintained the interest; but we still have our chiselers, if I may use the common expression, Mr. Chairman; among them, men, or corporations, who benefit not only from the economic factor, but from all other stabilizing factors that have come as a result of that original code. The Morgans and the Du Ponts—if I may be permitted to refer to them—the Morgans, the Du Ponts, and the Mellons are outstanding in that particular situation as regards long hours and low rates of pay; and who in fact, within the internal operation of the industry itself, are imposing hazards and hardships against maintaining stabilized conditions of employment and rates of pay which in turn reflect themselves in consumer purchasing power that maintain our national economy.

That is all I have to say this morning, Mr. Chairman. We hope you will see fit to accept the amendment presented by Mr. BOREN.

Mr. COLE. Thank you. May I ask if this amendment you approve, as suggested by Mr. BOREN, is in any legislation now pending before the Labor Committee?

Mr. FREMMING. No; and it is not contemplated. Incidentally there is in the general legislation provision for 40 hours a week, and we have a different situation in this industry which has given every evidence of its willingness——

Mr. COLE (interposing). I mean generally.

Mr. FREMMING. The general legislation is for 40 hours.

Mr. COLE. Is that included here?

Mr. FREMMING. That is not included in this. I understand your point. But the general bill will provide for 40 hours, and that bill is to come from the executive branch, as I understand it. But it does not provide for 36 hours which this amendment would.

Mr. COLE. The general bill, you understand, will come from the executive branch?

Mr. FREMMING. Yes.

Mr. COLE. Would that be satisfactory to you?

Mr. FREMMING. No; it just means 4 more hours per day, which in turn means a reduction in employee load in the industry.

Mr. COLE. All right.

Mr. PETTENGILL. As I understand you, you said that a great many of the companies had maintained the labor standards of the N. R. A.

Mr. FREMMING. Yes, Mr. PETTENGILL; in the petroleum code.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes; the Petroleum Code. What were the hours provided in the code?

Mr. FREMMING. Thirty-six hours per week.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Thirty-six?

Mr. FREMMING. Yes. I should repeat there, Mr. PETTENGILL, the manner in which Congressman BOREN presented his amendment to the committee. The 40 hours he gave means not more than 40 hours in any 1 week, and not more than 72 hours in any 2 weeks, and not more than 16 hours in 2 consecutive days.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Was that taken from the N. R. A. code?

Mr. FREMMING. That is verbatim, almost verbatim from the code itself, and for 2 years we operated splendidly under that code.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Had the rates of increase in pay to labor been in proportion to the benefit of this increase of about 27 percent on crude oil at the well head?

Mr. FREMMING. I would not say that they would equal 27 percent. The wages were increased, for the most part, in the industry, and for the most part we still have the benefit of some increase by reason of this legislation. But they all did not go along. We still have, in some sections, 12 hours a day. That was eliminated in 1933 by the code. When you speak of benefits, you mean in dollars and cents?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Total dollars per person.

Mr. FREMMING. Yes, sir; they have benefited. I do not say to the extent of 27 percent, but I do not think 27 percent is the whole story, Mr. PETTENGILL, if it be remembered how they were up here asking for relief from this 10-cent oil, 15-cent oil, and 20-cent oil throughout the industry. I think it must be remembered that the 27 percent does not represent the benefit received by this industry; it merely means that on the average, but that does not represent the whole truth, and we should not be confused by it at all.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The 85,000 workers you represent, the greatest bulk of them, have had wage increases, have they?

Mr. FREMMING. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Commensurate with the increase in price of crude?

Mr. FREMMING. Not necessarily commensurate with that, but they have had increases, substantial increases.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Some of them have not been increased as much as 27 percent, but they have had increases?

Mr. FREMMING. Yes; I would say most of them, except in the chiseler group.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Out of the 85,000 total number represented by you, how many thousands do you think, to use your expression, are at the mercy of the chiseler?

Mr. FREMMING. Oh, I should say not to exceed 25 percent; not in excess of that. It is just about the same percentage that runs throughout the whole industry.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. FREMMING. About the same group that runs the "hot oil", the chiselers, who will not pay their workers.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Thank you.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Wolverton.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Does the proposed amendment of Mr. BOREN relate only to the production, or does it include refining and marketing employees?

Mr. FREMMING. Only the producing end. We have no special difficulty in refining, and never have had; it is only in the producing and the transportation end, but so far as the refining branch of the industry is concerned, we have never had any quarrel on that question; 36 hours is maintained in the industry and there is no charge of chiseling with respect to the refining end.

As to the marketing end today, it is the most chaotic that we have ever had. For your information, we are now working on that branch of the industry and are very earnestly trying to be helpful insofar as the worker problem is concerned. The regulation of hours of employment fixed at 40 hours a week, obtained in the code.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I was unfortunately engaged otherwise and did not hear the amendment.

Mr. FREMMING. Yes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Is it different from the one which was presented to the Senate?

Mr. FREMMING. It is the same; it is the same.

Mr. WOLVERTON. If I remember correctly, in your amendment you ask for the base of 36 hours a week and the rate of pay to be fixed at $5 as a minimum rate.

Mr. FREMMING. That is right, yes; that is correct.

Mr. WOLVERTON. And that relates only to those engaged in the production end?

Mr. FREMMING. Yes; drilling, production, and transportation.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Is that limited only to States that have the benefit of the Connally Act?

Mr. FREMMING. No.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Has employment increased over the period of 3 years?

Mr. FREMMING. To the contrary, it has decreased.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The figures presented to us would indicate that 900,000 more barrels per day are being produced, and yet I understand you to say that at this time it is a fact the number of employees has actually decreased?

Mr. FREMMING. That is correct, in the last 3 years.

Mr. WOLVERTON. How do you account for that fact?

Mr. FREMMING. One of the special factors is the improved method of petroleum recovery, today, through technical development making it possible to bring a well to production at a much shorter period of time than it took in the past. For example, for the east Texas field, to which reference has been made here on several occasions, the sum total of drilling time to 3,500 feet, usually 3,500 feet being the average, runs about 15 days. Seven or eight years ago that was an unheard of thing.

Mr. PETTENGILL. How many days?

Mr. FREMMING. Fifteen days, full time, full drilling, including cementing time and everything, the construction of the derrick, spudding, and bringing the well to production, in 15 days.

Mr. PETTENGILL. That means drilling more than 200 feet a day?

Mr. FREMMING. Oh, yes; it is proper to say in that connection there are certain drilling hazards elsewhere that do not obtain in east Texas. For instance, in the Kettleman Hills field, for example, to bring in a well to production would take approximately 6 months; they may be able to drill in less time than 6 months; but if they can bring in a well in 90 days, it is a happy condition.

Mr. WOLVERTON. What has been the percentage of decrease in employment?

Mr. FREMMING. It will be—the Bureau of Labor Statistics indicates that the reduction has been running about 8 percent since the code became effective. Of course, there was a tremendous increase in the employee roll when the code became effective in September 1933; but since that time there has been about an 8-percent reduction in the crude production, in the drilling end, not the refining end of the industry.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I understand. What accounts for this decrease in the production end?

Mr. FREMMING. That is chiefly based upon improved methods of production, based principally upon the technical development in drilling equipment, primarily.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What about the refining branch?

Mr. FREMMING. They have increased employment in that end, due to the requirements to take care of this 900,000 barrels of crude, and the consumer demand has increased proportionately, as we understand it. There was about a 22-percent increase in consumer demand last year.

Mr. COLE. Is that all?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I have nothing further.

Mr. FREMMING. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COLE. Thank you. The committee will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 12:20 p. m., an adjournment was taken until 10 a. m. of the following day, Wednesday, Apr. 28, 1937.)

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of extending the life of the Connally or "hot oil" bill, and believe it is wise to put a limitation upon the duration of its operation. I feel the limitation will act as a brake upon the price of oil and constitute a checkrein upon the ultimate price to the consumer. If an abuse should develop anywhere in the course of production, refining, or distribution within the next 2-year period, Congress can allow the law to expire. The President, under the existing law, has the right, which will be continued, to suspend the operation of the effective provisions of the law if he should find a lack of parity between supply and demand, resulting in high prices. The limitation will be an added safeguard for the consumer. The extension of the Connally Act is needed to conserve our oil resources. If you were in attendance before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee at the time the original bill came up for hearing, you saw there photographs of the conditions surrounding operations in the east Texas fields. You were appalled at the waste of oil which smeared the surface of the oil areas. Inordinate quantities of oil gushed from the wells and were wasted. Oil and natural gas were dissipated to an alarming degree. Oil overflowed and dripped from tank cars. Large lakes of oil were accumulated above ground awaiting shipment of the contraband. So great was the waste in the east Texas fields that it became a real threat to the oil reserves of the country. Besides being a danger of consequence in case of fire or flood, the extravagant method of handling threatened our future supply of oil and constituted a menace to our national defense.

Perhaps no one in our Government has given greater study to this matter than the Secretary of the Interior, and I would like to read very briefly from the statement of Secretary Ickes made before the subcommittee in charge of this bill:

> The oil reserves of the United States are limited, and oil is an irreplaceable resource. Petroleum and its products are essential to our happiness and well-being as citizens and absolutely indispensable to our national defense. The United States is using up its oil reserves faster than the rest of the world, and an oil shortage in the United States may be expected long before there is an oil shortage elsewhere. As a nation, we should not exhaust these resources and be forced to depend upon the more costly substitute fuels in advance of the rest of the world or be required to pay the higher price for oil which foreign producers will demand when our production fails to meet our needs. If we are to avoid this penalty for our past and present extravagance, we should make certain that our present and future reserves of oil will be developed without waste and that our supply of this irreplaceable resource will be made to meet, so long as possible, and at reasonable prices, the needs of the Nation.

I cannot help but agree with the Secretary in that statement, and I do not believe anyone can reasonably disagree with it.

It has been said by some that this is not a conservation bill but a stabilization bill or a bill to raise the price of oil. Even on that ground I think the bill should be passed in order to prevent the chaos that existed in the oil business. Of course, we who live up in New Jersey are very often glad when an oil war is on. I remember back in the campaign of 1932 we bought gas for 9 cents a gallon, and that state of affairs continued for an appreciable length of time, but it did not have a wholesome effect. Many of the dealers up there had to sell below cost—those who did not get the benefit of the "hot oil." As a consequence, some had to let their help go, others would not meet their taxes and other obligations and became embarrassed financially. The consumer is not unreasonable, and prefers to pay a fair price if it prevents chaos and makes for stabilization now and in the future.

Our people have come to realize that the struggle to conquer the virgin soil of our country has been won—won without the statesman, financier, or economist realizing it until very recently. We can now produce easily more than enough of nearly everything for everybody. The present problem is to make adjustments accordingly; to conserve; to stabilize; to square all.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inject for the benefit of the Committee some of the experiences that I have personally noted in connection with the so-called operation of the Connally "hot oil" bill. I shall not attempt to go into statistical matters, nor shall I attempt to refer to the legislation that was passed before I became a Member of this body. In that respect I am placed in the same category as the late and lamented Will Rogers, who once said, "All I know is what I read in the papers." But I am familiar with what was expressed in the papers at that particular time.

With the inception of this act in 1935, the Sun Oil Co. in its operations in Pennsylvania proceeded to the independent variety gas stations and threatened each dealer they would cut off their supply of gas if they did not eliminate the independent pump from which the cheaper grade of gas was sold in competition with them. It was to that pump the farmer went to obtain his supply of gas for his tractors, gas engines, and whatever he used on the farm. Every independent dealer had to carry that particular type of gas in order to operate his business and supply the demand. He obtained that supply of gas from the independent producers, who kept that gas level at a price of about 12 or 13 cents a gallon.

It has been stated here that the price of gas has not advanced in this period of time. Those gas pumps are putting out gas now at 16½ cents a gallon. I call attention to the fact that is the direct result of the operation of this act.

It was stated then that the Sun Oil Co. intended to pull those pumps and when they pulled those pumps they would put that particular gas dealer out of business so far as the distribution of that type of gas was concerned.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I cannot yield now.

Mr. Chairman, the Sun Oil Co. did proceed to pull those pumps. They transferred the tanks underground to succeeding oil companies. But they did pull those pumps. They took a licking in 1935. In 1936 Mr. Pew, head of the Sun Oil Co., became exceedingly active in the campaign in Pennsylvania and may I say to gentlemen on this side of the House none of us would be here from Pennsylvania if Mr. Pew had his way.

I may say to my colleagues from Pennsylvania, as well as to the members of this committee, that in the operation of these particular groups of oil companies I know of not one single instance where a major oil company has anything to state in opposition to this bill.

In the name of conservation we are bringing about a situation of extermination. These particular independent dealers who are confronted with the difficulty of obtaining their oil and their gas must now proceed to seaboard at Wilmington and actually beg to buy it in tank-car lots. They have to buy from the major oil companies at prices which are fixed, because the independent producer is wiped out of existence.

I believe sincerely there is no ground for saying that if I possessed on the little farm I own a field of oil, and if I should dig down into the ground and produce oil, as we have done in times past in Pennsylvania under the law of capture, which was in effect from the very inception of the discovery of oil in Pennsylvania, to the effect that the man who discovered the oil owns it, the oil should be called "hot oil" or "stolen oil." It is true it might be seeping from a pool that might be on some man's adjacent property, but under the laws of Pennsylvania if the man on the adjoining property also dug, and he hit the same pool, it would be his oil as well as mine.

Those are conditions which I cannot conceive should be in existence at this time. I believe this law should not continue beyond the 2-year period. Certainly, I think there is sufficient warrant to defeat the bill at this time because in the name of emergency we have brought about destruction. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma very carefully discussed the three phases he thinks this bill will accomplish, and they have likewise been discussed by other members of the committee and other Members of Congress.

There are one or two things regarding the question of proration which I want to discuss that have not been discussed. Proration was first commenced in the State of Oklahoma. The first proration laws we had were passed about 6 or 7 years ago, when the great oil pool was discovered within the limits of Oklahoma City. At the hearings of the State legislature the same contention was made and the same opposition arose against proration that are being used by the opponents of this measure here. The State finally adopted its proration laws. It was then the producers of oil commenced to put their oil through hidden pipe lines into interstate commerce, and this gave rise to what is called "hot oil." The State of Oklahoma was helpless to protect the owners and operators of oil wells in that pool.

Shortly thereafter the east Texas pool was discovered, and the same conditions arose there. When these conditions arose, the Governors of the two States got together and commenced the consideration of a character of proration laws which would protect the people, which would protect the owners of royalties and the leaseholders. It was from this beginning there grew up the law which is now on the statute books of the Government. No one State by itself could enforce proration without getting into the compact all the oil wells in that field or in that general country. Therefore, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, and New Mexico, all contiguous States, joined in this compact, with the result we afterward secured passage of the Connally Act.

This is a conservation measure, no matter what those who are opposed to it may say. All of the owners of the land were receiving royalties of 12½ percent, one-eighth of the oil produced. When the hot oil was being stolen from their premises and through pipe lines put into interstate commerce, no report was made of it to the State authorities, who lost the State taxes on oil; in our State a 3-percent gross production tax. The royalty owners lost all of their interest in the royalty and have never secured it from that day to this. This measure concerns the interests of the royalty owners, it stabilizes the industry, and does not raise the price of the oil that is marketed out in Iowa or in any other State or community. Heretofore, when oil was selling for 10 cents a barrel in Oklahoma City, gasoline was just as high as it is now. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY].

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am indeed sorry the Committee did not see fit to make this law permanent. If it was a good thing to maintain for 2 years, and that it should be the law for 2 years more, this seems to me, except for the fact that Texas has not established her proration laws for more than 2 years, a sound reason it should be made permanent law now. It would be no less trouble to repeal this statute than to repass it after 2 years. I hope the gentlemen on the committee in the conference between the Senate and the House will be liberal and not put the task on us of trying this out again in the House within 2 years if they can avoid it.

With reference to monopoly—I know gentlemen are interested in it, and I am interested—there is something in what gentlemen have said. But let me remind you wheat folks that, regardless of what the price of wheat is, it makes little difference in the price of a loaf of bread. While the parallel is not exact and complete, it applies here in that the price of crude oil is not wholly determinative of the price of gasoline. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has stated in his remarks, the price of gasoline is lower now than it has been for some time. Use that as a parallel.

There are some things in what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] has said about one company having four or five different functions, but when you try to attack that condition by such an amendment as he has offered, it is like tying a binder twine to an elephant's tail. You can cover that in some separate legislation if it is necessary. Let us be frank about it. Do not drag a red herring around, even innocently, because an attempt at such an amendment is just a slap on the wrist, if it is germane. If it is proper to do that, do it at the proper place at the proper time with the proper kind of a bill, where it has a proper place, and after full hearings are had.

Proration has grown as the result of the experience of men. The independent oil men are those who brought about proration in the States, and they have driven these big companies to it. These companies did not willingly go; the independents drove them. The impetus behind the proration laws which five States have passed has been the independent oil men. To get a better price for their product? Yes. How will all of you fare if the second largest industry is flat on its back? You were all alarmed in 1933 when we were in that shape, and we do not want to be that way again.

Mr. DIES. Did we not vote to stabilize the coal industry on a permanent basis?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes; and there is also the A. A. A. Everything was centered early in this administration on how we could stabilize prices of all products, so the farmer, the producer, and the refiner could get a good price for his product.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Then, as a matter of fact, this is a price-stabilizing measure and is not a conservation measure.

Mr. DISNEY. No; do not put words in my mouth that I have not used. This is a conservation measure primarily and its result is to stabilize prices.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. If it is a conservation measure to preserve oil for future generations, as the distinguished gentleman from Indiana stated a while ago, why are exports of oil to foreign countries increasing from year to year?

Mr. DISNEY. That is a marketing matter, an international matter, and public sentiment in this country would not permit this Congress to stop completely either imports or exports. Just try it once.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Then if you would call this a price-fixing measure we would all understand the import of it and the measure would not be masquerading under another name.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman voted for the coal bill?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes. In a nutshell, all this bill does is that its functions are ancillary to the proration laws of the States which experienced oil men, refiners, marketers, and all have put on the statute books of the States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I want to summarize a little the evidence that has been produced here on both sides of this question.

The claim that this is a conservation measure does not square with the facts that have been brought out that there has been an increase in consumption of about 40 percent and millions and millions of barrels have been shipped out of the country. These two things do not go together.

This measure, when it was passed 2 years ago, was aimed to stop the cutthroat competition in the production field and it was, as has just been stated, largely brought about by the independent or small producers as a protection for themselves. This situation has been cured by this bill, but, on the other hand, we have heard that the cure, perhaps, in some cases, is worse than the disease. These large producers now produce, refine, transport, and retail and they are now imposing upon the independent retailers instead of the independent producers, and as a result of this, they now lose on the retailing end in order to effect their competition among the independent retailers and they make a profit now on the other ends. So I think that while we have cured one side of it, we have now caused another evil that must be cured, and I do not think this will be cured by prolonging the life of this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how the time stands or how much time has been used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time, as the gentleman understands, is under the control of the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BIERMANN. I understand that as a general proposition the time is supposed to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill. I have asked the gentleman in charge of the time for the proponents and the opponents for some time. There must be 40 or 45 minutes left. Both of the gentlemen have denied me time, and I would like to know whether in my own right, as an opponent of this bill, I may have 15 minutes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman will recall that he asked for 10 minutes, and the gentleman obtained 10 minutes on the rule instead of in general debate, and, personally, I thought the gentleman was satisfied with the allocation of time which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] gave him.

Mr. BIERMANN. I talked with the gentleman about time, both on the rule and on the bill, and I obtained my time on the rule from the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Michigan, and I asked the gentleman for 15 minutes, and I recall distinctly that the gentleman said that when I got up I should ask the gentleman on the other side for some time.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I did not know until the gentleman took the floor that he was not satisfied with the time obtained on the rule. I believe I have 3 or 4 minutes remaining. I have no requests for further time, and if the gentleman wants it I will be delighted to yield it to him.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, as an opponent of the bill——

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am submitting a parliamentary inquiry.

Inasmuch as about twice as much time has been given to the proponents as the time given to the opponents, I ask that I may have 15 minutes in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the rule adopted by the House divides the time equally between the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] without regard to whether they are for or against the bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is it possible, Mr. Chairman, under a rule of that kind, to bring about a situation whereby the proponents of a bill may almost monopolize the time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter the Chair cannot control. The House fixed the time by the adoption of the rule.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask how much more time is under the control of the gentleman from Michigan. If there is any additional time, I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] will yield additional time to my good friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. MAPES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take any of the time of the gentleman from Iowa, but if he will suspend a moment and will allow me to yield myself 1 minute, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I think the gentleman's assumption is incorrect. I have not kept any record of the time allowed to those for or opposed to the bill, but my impression is I have yielded more time to those opposed to the measure than I have to those who are in favor of it. I have yielded to everyone opposed to it who has asked me for time, including the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman has not yielded me any time on the bill.

Mr. MAPES. I yielded the gentleman time on the rule, and I have yielded time and taken care of everyone, both on this side and on that side, who has asked for time, whether he opposed the bill or not.

Mr. BIERMANN. As long as I yielded to the gentleman I would like to ask him if he thinks it an equitable way to distribute time, when there are at least 40 minutes of time left, to refuse to allow a man to speak for 15 minutes in opposition to the bill?

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman will permit, I think he has been pretty well taken care of.

Mr. BIERMANN. Then, the gentleman thinks he ought not to yield any more time to me when there are 40 to 50 minutes undisposed of?

Mr. MAPES. I yielded time to the gentleman on the rule, and I do not feel disposed to yield to the gentleman any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, one of the proponents of the bill made the statement that this bill is not the proper place in which to take care of the marketers of oil. If this bill takes care of the producers and the refiners and the owners of pipe lines, it seems to me proper to take care of the little fellow at the other end of the line. What we are asking for, at least those of my mind here, is that we shall not under this bill enrich the producer and the refiner and the owner of pipe lines and allow them to cut down on the little fellow in the corner filling station and drive him out of business. That is all. My amendment merely proposes to protect the independent jobber and marketer while we are insuring the profits of the producers, refiners, and owners of pipe lines.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield if the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. DIES. Just to ask the gentleman to explain why 52,000 independent service stations through their present association have endorsed this bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not know anything about that. But allow me to read to the gentleman some of the people who do not endorse it. Mr. T. O. Baucum, of the Kentucky Petroleum Marketers' Association, testified against the bill; Mr. William Earle White, attorney of the Dixie Interstate, an independent which operates in 10 States, testified against the bill; Mr. H. F. Remington, service station dealer, of Reading Pa., came down here and testified against the bill; W. C. McCain, of the Missouri Independent Oil Jobbers' Association, testified against the bill; Mr. Paul E. Hadlick, of the National Oil Marketers' Association, testified against the bill; Mr. Fred E. Bergfors, of the New England Oil Men's Association, also testified against the bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. I have received many telegrams and letters from not only my own district but from all over my State, opposing this measure.

Mr. MASON. And so have I.

Mr. HOUSTON. And I have had letters and telegrams and telephone calls from people all over my State who are in favor of the bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Here is a part of a letter I got from an independent dealer in my State, who says:

> Our company has been in business for the past 12 years as distributors of petroleum products and was able to show a reasonable profit for the first 10 years, but in the past 2 years, since the Connally Act has been in effect, it has shown a loss which, in time, if this law is allowed to stay, will wipe out the entire assets of our company.
> Our company, with the other independent oil jobbers of the State of Iowa, is protesting vigorously against Senator CONNALLY'S bill, S. 790, as we do not wish to be forced out of business, if we can help it, by the major oil companies.

Another jobber says:

> The enormous losses reported by the marketing subsidiaries of some of the major companies, and subsidized by the parent company, is clear evidence that this narrow margin of profit established between the tank-car and the tank-wagon price on gasoline has for its purpose the annihilation of the independent jobber.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that this amendment that I propose to offer is likely to be held not germane, and under the rules probably it is not germane, but there is nothing in the world to prevent this Committee from foregoing the point of germaneness in order that we may protect the marketer while enriching the other three branches of the industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

> Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "hereby repealed", and insert "amended by striking out 'June 16, 1937' " and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1939."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; provided it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. There is just one section to this bill. Several amendments are proposed, and I am wondering if we cannot agree on time to close debate. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think it should first be determined what disposition the Chair will make of the Biermann amendment. If that is held germane, I am sure many Members on both sides would want to be heard.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I will withdraw that request for the moment, Mr. Chairman.

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, of course, we all are in favor of the conservation of oil. I do not propose, however, to subscribe to the logic of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], or the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY], when they say that the price of gasoline is not affected in any way by the price of crude oil. As the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HILL] said a few moments ago, they were selling crude oil in Oklahoma for 10 cents. Everyone remembers when the Governor of Oklahoma, a former Member of this House, called out the militia to stop that. I never want to see that day return.

If this bill is passed, what will happen? What is the price of oil today? No one can say the cost of production of crude oil has increased 8 or 10 cents a barrel since the bill passed the Senate, but still the cost of crude oil has advanced 8 or 10 cents a barrel since that time. The price of crude oil now, I understand, is $1.22. I am in favor of conserving the oil supply of this country, but I am not in favor of passing any bill, whether it is hot or cold, if it is going to peg the price to somebody that some of us here ought to be thinking about, and that is the consumer. The trouble with this country today is that there is too great a spread between the producer and the consumer on everything that is produced. Now we have this situation: Is this bill going to result in another increase in the price of crude oil, and if it is are we going to find an increase in the cost of gasoline? It is true they say gasoline has not increased in cost recently. Can it be that somebody is waiting until we pass this bill before they send up the price again? We all know how the price of gasoline is increased and decreased from time to time.

The antitrust laws, the Federal Trade Commission, nor any other Government agency has been able to reach those who control the price of gasoline. When the price of gasoline goes up, every one of the large corporations sends it up, not only the same day but the same minute. Are we going to be foolish enough to believe there is not some agreement in advance between the large producers of this country with reference to increasing and decreasing the price? Of course, the middleman is having his trouble. Aside from the middleman and the jobber and the independent oil merchant, it is up to us to once in a while think of the consumer. In this instance the consumer is the goat if we pass legislation that will result in an increase in the cost of gasoline. We all know it is high enough today. We are assured that the price of gasoline is not going to advance.

I have the utmost faith in Mr. Ickes, the Secretary of the Interior, and I am going to vote for this bill, and I am going to vote for it because I have faith in Mr. Ickes. I feel he is going to protect the consumers of this country. If this bill does result in an increase in the price of gasoline to the consumer, I am sure Mr. Ickes will come here and tell us to take some action that will protect the consumer, and you can be assured I will be one to do everything in my power to see that some kind of legislation is passed to control the price.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. How can the gentleman explain the official figures which show that gasoline has decreased from 25 cents in 1919 steadily downward to 14 cents. While there has been a small increase since conservation went into effect, that increase is less than the increase in the price of everything else.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman in his own time to explain to this House why it is that the price of crude oil has jumped from 8 to 10 cents a barrel since this bill passed the Senate? I would like to hear the gentleman explain that in his own time.

Mr. Chairman, I know that many members were surprised when I stated that I intend to vote for this bill. The Texas law expires in 2 years. This bill, which provides for extension of the present law for 2 years, is to provide Government cooperation for that period. Government officials tell us that it is necessary that the law be extended and Members from the oil-producing States assure us there will be no increase in the price as a result; that the extension will stabilize this great industry, will enable millions employed to be paid a decent wage, and that the producer will get a fair profit over the cost of production. I warn those from the oil-producing States that Congress can undo tomorrow what it does today, and I am one who will help to repeal this law, and further than that, help to control the price, if that be possible under the Constitution, if the consumer is going to suffer by an increase in the cost of gasoline as a result of the passage of this bill. The producer must play fair with the consumer. The price of crude oil and gasoline is high enough now and it must not be increased.

Secretary Ickes has shown in the past that he looks after the interests of the masses, and being confident he will do so in this instance I am going to support the bill.

This bill is not open to any amendment, because it simply extends an existing law. If it was possible to amend so that the independent jobber and distributor would get better treatment, I would favor such an amendment. We are trying to get out of this depression and I do not want to impede the progress we are making by crippling one of our greatest industries. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, what happens in the future as to the price of crude oil and gasoline will certainly be reflected here in the event of an increase, and it will be well for those who want this bill passed to remember that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: At the end of the bill insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 14. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation or affiliate thereof to engage, directly or indirectly in interstate commerce, in marketing crude oil or any of the products thereof if he is engaged in production, refining, and transportation of oil or in any of these activities."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BIERMANN. My only thought, Mr. Chairman, is that this bill deals with the entire oil business from the location of the oil in the ground until it reaches the ultimate consumer. The bill in its present form, dealing with the production, refining, and distribution of oil, makes me believe that an amendment dealing with the last operation, marketing, is germane also.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill under consideration amends only one section of existing law in one particular. The amendment of the gentleman adds a new section to existing law, and is, therefore, clearly not germane.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BIERMANN: After section 12 of Public, No. 14, Seventy-fourth Congress, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 13. In order to further conserve deposits of crude oil situated in the United States, all tariffs on crude oil and all of its products are hereby repealed."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa seeks to deal with matters not only not germane to this bill but over which this Committee has no jurisdiction.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa be granted an additional 5 minutes in order that he may fully present his point of view.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning, I am in favor of doing anything within reason to secure a just profit to the producer of oil even when the producer of oil is John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the Shell Oil Co., the Continental Oil Co., or any other oil company. I am in favor of the producers of oil having a fair profit, of the refiners having a fair profit, of the owners of the pipe lines having a fair profit; but I am against a bill or a law that allows them to take the profit they make in producing, in refining and from their pipe lines, and to use those profits to offset marketing losses in order that they may drive the little independent jobber and marketer out of business. There is plenty of testimony in the hearings to show that that has been the effect of this law. I have inserted in the RECORD and have read several telegrams and excerpts from letters showing that that is the experience of the independent jobbers and marketers in my own State. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] and several other Members have said that they have received letters and telegrams of similar import.

It was my hope that the members of this committee would forego a point of order on the amendment I offered, in order that this bill might be for the benefit of all four factors in the oil industry, but they did not see fit to do so, and now we have a bill to extend a law that is exclusively for the producer, the refiner, and the owner of transportation lines, and very largely for the big ones engaged in these businesses.

This has been called a conservation measure. I think there are good grounds on which to controvert that statement. I have never thought, however, that it was of any use to accuse people of anything other than the best of motives unless one has to. As was pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF], we are shipping out of this country vastly more oil than we are importing. There is a tariff of 21 cents a barrel on crude oil and a tariff of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline. If you want to conserve our oil supplies in the United States, let us repeal these tariffs and let this foreign oil come in; let us use it and save our own. That was the purpose of my last amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Would the gentleman be willing to repeal the tariff on other things, particularly those things produced in the gentleman's State, in order that the rest of us may buy them more cheaply?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am willing to repeal tariffs. The tariffs have cost the farmers of my State billions of dollars, and the tariffs on the farm products of Iowa have been a mockery. Tariffs have raised the prices of what Iowa farmers have bought, and finally American tariffs caused foreign countries to retaliate so effectively as to almost destroy the foreign market for American farm products.

Mr. DIES. On everything. Will the gentleman make that general, on wheat, corn, and so forth?

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman is a very skillful criminal lawyer and cross-questioner and it requires the very best of criminal-lawyer talent to defend this iniquitous measure which he has brought in here. I say to the gentleman it seems to me it would be very easy for a Democrat coming from a cotton-producing State to favor the abolition of a tariff.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the gentleman this afternoon in two of his addresses has just about knocked into a cocked hat any argument that this is a conservation bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. I thank the gentleman.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WOODRUM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5366) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, pursuant to House Resolution 216, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment agreed to in Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 75, noes 37.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 94, not voting 149, as follows:

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to continue in effect until June 30, 1939, the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935."

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935.

My reason for making this request is that the Senate bill for which I have asked immediate consideration at this time is identical with the bill just passed by the House with the exception of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McREYNOLDS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, is hereby repealed.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the Senate bill, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the bill (H. R. 5366) as passed by the House this afternoon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of Maryland: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 13 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935, is amended by striking out 'June 16, 1937' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1939.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to continue in effect until June 30, 1939, the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law and for other purposes'", approved February 22, 1935.

On motion of Mr. COLE of Maryland, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move to vacate the proceedings whereby the House bill was passed and lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BERNARD, at the request of Mr. BOILEAU, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. VOORHIS, for 12 days, on account of urgent personal business.

To Mr. SHANLEY, at the request of Mr. SMITH of Connecticut, for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, for several days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAINES, until June 8, on account of important business.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills and joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 190. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Waterton Oil, Land & Power Co., of Butte, Mont., against the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 523. An act for the relief of Mrs. Guy A. McConoha; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 546. An act for the relief of Annie Mary Wilmuth; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 703. An act for the relief of John T. Armstrong; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1143. An act for the relief of G. L. Tarlton; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1144. An act for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1274. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska to determine the claim of John H. Owens; to the Committee on Claims.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I received 15 minutes to address the House today, but I am not going to impose on the good nature of the House at this time. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on Tuesday, June 8, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say there are two special orders heretofore made for next Tuesday.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request for Wednesday. I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, June 9, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall object unless the gentleman agrees to modify his request so that he may address the House after the disposition of any privileged matters that we may desire to call up.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, then I renew my request for Thursday, June 10.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman is going to make the request for several days. My objection goes to all of them.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to make the same request for every day from now until July 4.

Mr. MAVERICK. How about July 5?

Mr. RICH. May I say at this time that nobody else is going to get time from now until July 4. I make the same request for Friday, June 11.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the majority leader, speaks about privileged business. My understanding of what the gentleman has in mind is the completion of the business of the day; that is, the regular legislative business; not necessarily business that is privileged under the rules.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps if the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Texas understood each other, some agreement could be arrived at. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would ask unanimous consent to make a speech after the completion of the legislative business of the day, I think the gentleman from Texas would have no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, that would not cover the situation, because the business of the day would apply only to Monday, which is District of Columbia day——

Mr. MAPES. I did not say the regular business of the day; I said the legislative business of the day.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That would not apply to privileged matters like conference reports or rules. The regular business of the day on Calendar Wednesday is, of course, set and cannot be set aside without a two-thirds vote. The Private Calendar on the first Tuesday cannot be set aside except by two-thirds vote.

Mr. MAPES. I do not understand that rules are privileged, if the gentleman will permit. The Committee on Rules has the right to submit reports at any time.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It has the right to call up rules. Rules are of the highest privilege next to some constitutional question. I am not arguing for rules being called up, but the understanding about this situation for a month or so has been that until we get through with the regular business of the day, which includes conference reports, the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday, and the Private Calendar on Tuesdays, rules, and so forth, these speeches should wait.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps, the gentleman's expression, the regular business of the day, is better than mine of the legislative business of the day, but I think the gentlemen could get together if they understood each other.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I may say to the gentleman that I have suggested for at least 6 years, without getting much support, that it might be well to set aside not more than 1 hour of each day at the beginning of each session for speeches or special orders. I should like to see all speeches limited to 15 minutes. Then we would know at any time on any day—not to encourage people to think up speeches—that the first hour of the day might well be set aside for special orders, and then we could proceed to the conduct of the regular business of the House. Some industrious person will some day suggest this, and it may meet with the approval of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I could stand here and protect the legislative program from being interfered with by any speeches by just objecting. Any one Member can do this. I do not want to do it, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan. I want to be as helpful as I can to every man who wants time to make a speech.

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman I did not intend by my question to indicate any criticism of the gentleman's position.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; I did not interpret it in that fashion.

Mr. MAPES. I think the gentleman's position is justifiable.

Mr. RAYBURN. Before we adopted this system—it is not a rule, of course—we found ourselves here one day with a very important bill which we had hoped to pass the day before, but which went over to the following day, and something like 2 hours or 2½ hours were taken up by speeches. This made it very hard to complete the bill that day. I do not object to these requests simply because I do not want gentlemen to have the time, for I do want them to have the time if we can comply with what I think is the necessary legislative program for the day.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the first day the clock has not passed the hour of 1, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I may have the first 20 minutes following to address the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman make that October 15?

Mr. RICH. How about making it Christmas Day?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of no quorum a moment?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if I am not going to get unanimous consent to address this House, and I will let the majority leader set the time, but the time will not be after 6 o'clock in the afternoon, because you know and I know that anyone who would make a speech at 6 o'clock in the afternoon would be imposing on the House.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am not going to treat the gentleman any differently from the way I would treat any other Member of the House.

Mr. RICH. I am not asking that.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is asking that. Does the gentleman insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. RICH. I insist on my point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, June 4, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, from whom all good things do come, grant us, Thy humble servants, that by Thy holy inspiration we may think those things that are good and by Thy merciful guiding may perform the same. May the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our redeemer. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REVENUE

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported House Joint Resolution 375, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

IN MEMORIAM

HON. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FIFTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE. DIED JUNE 4, 1936

Benediction----------The Chaplain

The CHAPLAIN (Dr. Montgomery). Eternal God, our Father, Thou who art ever present to guide and to comfort, increase the faith and hopes which we feel in the temples of our souls. By these tokens grant that at the last we may merit the "well done, good and faithful servant." We thank Thee for the Voice that comes across the centuries to the hearts of all mortals, "Be of good cheer." An abiding sorrow has fallen upon us in the transition of a most notable Member. In the legislative halls of our Nation and as a distinguished son of a great Commonwealth, strong, upright, and aggressive, he served them with untiring zeal and devotion. Console his family with hopes and promises of a glorified, endless future, where the voice which was music to their ears, where the eyes which looked into their hearts and the arms which sustained them shall receive them and remain with them forever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. Love suffereth long and is kind, love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up. Doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth. Beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; and whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part; we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come then that which was in part shall be done away. When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know as even also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest of these is love.

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hast formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God. For a thousand years in Thy sight are as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night. Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as asleep; in the morning they are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth. So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Oh, satisfy us early with Thy mercy, that we may be glad and rejoice all our days. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants and Thy glory unto their children. Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us and establish the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it.

I heard a voice from heaven saying: Write, blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, for their works do follow them.

O yet we trust that somehow good
  Will be the final goal of ill,
  To pangs of nature sins of will,
Defects of doubts and taints of blood;

That nothing walks with aimless feet,
  That not one life shall be destroyed,
  Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain,
  That not a moth with vain desire
  Is shriveled in the fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

So runs my dream; but what am I?
  An infant crying in the night;
  An infant crying for the light;
And with no language but a cry

I falter where I firmly trod,
  And falling 'neath my weight of cares,
  Upon the world's great altar stairs
That slope through darkness up to God,

I stretch lame hands of faith and grope
  And gather dust and chaff and call
  To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the Lord of all.

ADDRESS OF HON. SAM D. M'REYNOLDS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, Hon. SAM D. MCREYNOLDS.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago today the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS, of Tennessee, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, suddenly passed away. On the day following it became the saddest duty of my life to make a few remarks and announce on the floor of this House the death of our most distinguished Speaker. Never before in the history of Congress had a Speaker died while Congress was in session. We meet today in memorial services for our distinguished friend.

JOE BYRNS, as we knew him, was born July 20, 1869, on a farm in Robertson County, Tenn., and lived on a farm until early manhood. He attended the schools of his native county and graduated from the law department of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., in 1890. He was admitted to the bar in 1890, and commenced the practice of law at Nashville. He was married to Miss Julia Woodward, of Nashville, in 1898, a most estimable lady, and one who was of great service to him during his political career. He had one son, Joseph W. Byrns, Jr., of whom he was very proud, and who is one of the leading lawyers at Nashville at this time. He was three times elected as a member of the lower house of the Tennessee Legislature and was unanimously chosen speaker of that body in 1898. He was elected to the Tennessee State Senate in 1900 and was a Democratic Presidential elector in 1904.

He was first elected to the Sixty-first Congress, after a very hot contest, and from that time on until his death was reelected practically without opposition. At the time of his death he had been a Member of this body for some 28 years, and there was only one man in this House who had longer service. The reputation that he gained while speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee was greatly responsible for his election to Congress. He came to this House with a background that was of great service to him here. He served on the Appropriations Committee of this House for 22 years, and for many years was the ranking Democrat on that committee. During the Seventy-second Congress he was chairman of that most important committee, and his record was such that it reflected honor on this House and the Government which he represented.

In the Seventy-third Congress he was elected Democratic leader, and no one could have performed the duties entrusted to him with a better record than he did. He was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives at the beginning of the Seventy-fourth Congress and held this position until the date of his death, which was on June 4, 1936, during the second session of that Congress.

Now, permit me to speak of the particular personal services rendered by him while he was ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, also as chairman of that committee, and as majority leader. For many years he was the ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, and during that time rendered great service to the individual membership of this House and the Democratic Party. A Member of this House was telling me a few days ago that when he first came to Congress he had a matter before the Appropriations Committee and that he went to JOE BYRNS about it; that Joe immediately drew the proper amendment, and assisted him in getting the same through, and that it was some 4 years afterward, when the building was completed and he incidentally told JOE BYRNS after he was Speaker that he was going down to the dedication of that building, and when he arrived, showing the thoughtfulness of the man, he found a telegram from JOE BYRNS congratulating him upon his success in being able to accomplish this for his district. This is merely a recitation of one of the various things that he would do for the membership of the House, and especially for the new Members. He was always anxious to render every service to the new Members of the House. We Democrats always waited after the House adjourned to get the speech of Mr. BYRNS when he was the ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, showing the appropriations that had been made, and for what purpose, and to aid us in our campaigns.

When he became leader of this House his physical condition was almost exhausted, as he had worked untiringly day and night as chairman of the great Appropriations Committee of this House. He came in as leader under very difficult circumstances. The conditions, as you remember, which existed in this country were dreadful and this legislation which was passed during the first session of this administration was entirely new to those of us who had dealt with Government affairs. JOE BYRNS carried the banner of the administration. He was able by his leadership to place upon the statute books, so far as this House is concerned, every piece of New Deal legislation that the Chief Executive requested. You Members who served with me here at that time remember his physical condition; you remember that many times when he walked down in that Well and leaned over against that table as if exhausted and would commence his speech in a very low voice oftentimes the request was made, "Louder." Then with all his reserve strength he would warm up to his subject and he never failed to achieve what he desired in that legislation.

From this history you can readily see how he gradually climbed from an unknown country boy to a position in power second to that of the President of the United States. He did it by hard work; by strict attention to his duties; by his intelligence; by his character of living; and his love for humanity, which drew people close to him.

At the time he was elected Speaker it had been practically 100 years since the State of Tennessee had been honored by a Speaker of the National House of Representatives. James K. Polk, a hundred years before, and who afterward became President, was Speaker of the Twenty-fourth Congress, and he came from Nashville, Tenn. During this same time there was another great Tennessean from this same city, who was President of the United States; a man of courage and love for the common people, and "the chief apostle of democracy", and one who will live forever in the minds and hearts of the American people—I refer to Andrew Jackson. His old home, called The Hermitage, is only a few miles out from Nashville, and is still preserved in memory of this great man. It is the "shrine of democracy", which people by the thousands visit yearly. I speak of these historical matters because of the fact that JOE BYRNS was raised almost under the shadows of The Hermitage, and, no doubt, in the days of his youth, and throughout his life, this great "apostle of democracy" was an inspiration to him.

JOE BYRNS was ideally fitted for the Speakership. He was calm; judicially posed; a trained parliamentarian; had thorough understanding of the procedure in the House; a broad statesman; and was a thorough Democrat, both personally and politically. This is what we predicted for him before he was elected, and this is what he demonstrated by his service.

The first session of Congress after he was elevated to the Speakership was a very trying one, especially on account of the New Deal measures that were at that time pending, and, further, from the fact that the distinguished leader at that time was unable to be present during that session of Congress. Under these circumstances, he had a double burden to bear, but he bore it willingly and smilingly, and successfully. He was able to do this because the membership of this House loved him, and I might add that no Speaker during my time has ever been so close to the Members of the House as was JOE BYRNS. He was always ready to extend a helping hand, advice, proper counsel, kind words; and the membership followed him. He was never too busy to keep an open door to all those who desired to see him. He was always pleasant and active, regardless of his physical condition and advice of his doctor, and in my opinion he was a martyr for his Government.

While he had reached this exalted position in Congress, which made him a national and international character and which burdened him with the responsibilities of government from that standpoint, yet he never lost touch nor interest in the welfare of his own district, or failed to be of service to the most humble from his congressional district. You often hear it said that when some men reach elevated positions they are more interested in national affairs than they are in their own home people, but this was not the case of JOE BYRNS. He loved his people; he loved his district; and he was always fighting and looking out for their interest. JOE BYRNS was a great and good man, a statesman, and in my opinion will go down in history, and justly so, as one of the great Speakers of this House. Ex-Speaker Rainey of this House once referred to him on the floor of this House as the "Abe Lincoln of Democracy."

I knew him in his home life, which was ideal, and it could only have been made so by the loveliness and graciousness of his good wife.

On the day after our Speaker's death funeral services were held here on the floor of this House; a joint session of the House and Senate, and there attended ambassadors, ministers, and chargés d'affairs of foreign governments; major general commanding the United States Marine Corps; Commandant of the United States Coast Guard; the members of the President's Cabinet; and the President of the United States, at which time our most worthy Speaker and minority leader delivered beautiful addresses in reference to the life and service of JOE BYRNS. This was a great honor paid to our Speaker and one that was well earned. His remains were carried to Nashville on a special train, accompanied by some 60 Members of the House and Senate. The President of the United States and his Cabinet followed in a special train, and all attended the funeral services held in the Memorial Building at Nashville. No such assemblage of people had ever met in Nashville before for funeral services. The streets and sidewalks were lined with people standing with hats removed and heads bowed, doing homage to their fallen leader. It was estimated that some 75,000 people were present. In this crowd were old and young, rich and poor, black and white, trying to pay their last respects to their friend; to the man who had meant so much to their district and their State and one of Tennessee's greatest sons. It was a great tribute to a great and beloved man. Those of us who were present will never forget the scene.

JOE BYRNS' remains are today sleeping in a beautiful cemetery near Nashville. He has gone, but those of us who knew him best and loved him will never forget the twinkling in his eyes; the handshake; the pat upon the back; words of advice and encouragement. He is gone, but his record will go down in history with much encouragement to the young people of this country, and especially to the boys on the farm from whence this man came. History made by men like this man never dies; it will live forever in the minds and hearts of the American people because he did something for his country's cause. Life is a great drama, played upon the stage of human action; each his part to perform; each his duty to do; no one knowing when the curtain of life may fall. Be ready! Serve your God and your country well, because you, too, may be called to meet your Maker suddenly as our friend was called. Life may be compared to day—morning, noon, and evening. I have watched the morning sun as it rose above the eastern horizon. I have seen the mists and darkness driven before it. I have watched the dewdrops sparkle like diamonds under its rays. I have heard the morning birds welcoming a newborn day. I have watched it in its orbit, and have seen the clouds obscure its view and storms sweep over its face, and yet it would appear brighter and grander than ever before. I have seen it at noontime in the midst of all of its power and glory, and I have seen it at evening time as it passed over the western horizon, leaving the golden glow of a perfect day.

A new babe is born in the world and there is happiness in that home, and sweet lullabies are sung. I have watched him in the morning of life as he grew; I have seen him as he played upon the lawn; I have seen him grow into manhood, and I have seen clouds pass over his pathway, and adversities, and yet he appeared stronger and brighter than ever before. I have seen him at noontime, in the midst of all his power and glory, and then as evening comes I have seen him go, pass away, leaving the golden glow of a great life, and his soul is wafted into immortality and the Great Beyond. We hope when we are called to our last summons that we can leave evidences of a useful life, and once again renew our friendship and our association with a friend who is waiting on the other side of the river to greet us.

The names of Jackson and Polk from The Hermitage district have been carried down in history, and the name of our departed friend, JOE BYRNS, will be another great Tennessean from this same congressional district whose name will appear along by the side of theirs as our truly great Tennesseans.

While we were greatly shocked and grieved at the loss of our friend, yet we were fortunate in having our present Speaker as a worthy successor, and I imagine if today I could bring a message from JOE BYRNS it would be to his friends in this House, "Carry on, carry on."

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN R. MITCHELL

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, "Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

We have met today to pay tribute to the memory of one long a Member of this House. When the late Speaker JOSEPH W. BYRNS died there was brought to a close the career of one who was a distinguished figure throughout the Nation. In the fullness of his powers he served the Congress with loyalty and distinction as a Representative, as the majority leader of the Democratic Party, and as Speaker. His memory is now a treasured part of the history of this body. JOE BYRNS was a loyal and useful servant to the people. He was a generous and faithful friend. He was loved and admired by all who knew him.

He had great affection for the people of the Fifth District of Tennessee, and rightly so, for they honored him by their support for more than a quarter of a century, and he served them during all that time with loyalty and fidelity. He loved the Democratic Party and was ever loyal to it.

In young manhood he was three times elected to the Legislature of Tennessee in Davidson County and was chosen by unanimous vote to preside over that body as speaker when he was but a mere boy. Later on he was elected as a member of the State senate, and thereafter elected to the Sixty-first Congress of the United States and was returned by his constituents every 2 years thereafter for 14 times, and had he lived to serve out the term for which he was elected he would have been in Congress 28 years, but he died 1 year ago today, as he would have willed it, "in the service of his country." He was truly a great and useful Member of the House. He served as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, one of the powerful committees of the House, for a number of years. He was majority leader and spokesman of the Democratic Party under Speaker Rainey, and served as such floor leader until the latter's death, when he was elected Speaker and served in that capacity until his death.

Thus, in brief outline, is the story of the public life of JOE W. BYRNS. But to us, his friends and associates, these dates, these offices which he held, mean little. It was the man himself. The way he performed the duty to which he was called, that gave significance to his life. For a period of almost 40 years JOE BYRNS was in the public service, and his life was spent in that field of endeavor where every act was open to public inspection, and in which, during part of the time at least, his services were subjected to the closest scrutiny. During all this time his sincerity, his honesty, his impartiality, and his ability were so conspicuous that at his death he carried with him universal respect, esteem, and affection, not only of his colleagues but of all those who had the opportunity for intelligent observation of his public record. The searchlight of public opinion was played upon him, but found no fault within him. He was a tower of strength to his party and people at all times. He upheld the hands of our beloved President and ably presented on the floor of this House from time to time while serving as floor leader measures to carry out his great policies, and in so doing earned the love and gratitude of the people of America.

We cannot by any memorial add to his reputation, for that has been widely and permanently established by the accomplishments of the passing years in the public service. We do, however, desire by this memorial to place upon the records of the House a brief mention of some of those great qualities possessed by him, which were so outstanding. They readily and strikingly present themselves to our recollection. Speaker BYRNS possessed a strong and rugged intellect which enabled him to clothe his views, whether expressed in consultation or on the floor of the House, with that logic and forceful method of expression which was ever characteristic of him and which was always persuasive, eloquent, and convincing.

He was progressive in his attempts to develop new principles of government and make them applicable to changing conditions, but he had no sympathy with those theories of so-called progressiveness which would discard fundamental principles of constitutional government in order to accomplish results, which for the moment might be thought expedient. The suggestion that in any particular matter a legislator should not be too much concerned with established rules or principles but should do what seemed to be expedient was to him indefensible.

He was absolutely independent and courageous in his views. No thought of mere expediency changed his convictions. He always observed the rules of public policy and prevalent opinion in his political activities and party management, but never allowed his mind to become dormant to those considerations of good citizenship and wise government which he regarded as the proper concern of all. He stood on his own feet and expressed his own mind. Perhaps nothing so excited his opposition and disapproval as the tendency, which he viewed with concern, to pass a multitude of statutes minutely regulating the ordinary lives of individuals, and sometimes in the supposed interest of public welfare or safety, depriving the people of those rights which seemed to him inherent and sacred.

These are some of the milestones along the pathway of an active life. They give no hint of the vibrant and commanding personality whose journey they record. In the 40 years of his legislative service, he grew steadily in maturity of judgment and richness of experience, and left everywhere upon all who are familiar with his public record a vivid and enduring expression of notable ability, of great capacity for work, of rare common sense, and protracted wisdom and independence. Courage unwavering and unafraid.

In his treatment of his colleagues he was as considerate and as gentle and as unassuming as a boy. No matter how strong his convictions were upon any question, or how earnest his support of them, he was tolerant with the opposition and charitable toward their views. He ruled as Speaker with promptness, firmness, and fairness, and always with a desire to decide each issue and every question upon its merits. He wanted to do right. No desire ever entered his soul to be unfair or unjust in his rulings, however much he might have been interested in the issue pending before him or however anxious he might be from the viewpoint of party advantage. It was his ambition to determine every question solely upon its merits and in accordance with the rules and regulations of the House.

His worth as a legislator and as a representative of the people was not recorded in the number of bills introduced by him or the ones passed by him, but his was a record of greater service and broader usefulness, for he did not alone represent the interests of the people of his district, while they were always first in his mind's eye and he served them faithfully and well, yet he worked for and represented all the people of our common country.

In the closing days of his Speakership he was handicapped somewhat from physical exhaustion, which would have impaired the capacity for work of most men. However, his great ability and his indomitable will enabled him to rise above this, to the end that his allegiance to his country should be carried to completion.

The historian of the Congress of the United States, tracing the contributions made by JOE BYRNS to the development of our country, will discover memorable additions, but will likely discover something finer. At every turn he will find the mark of a personality—a man. For more than a year his work as a legislator has been done. We missed him when he went from among us, and we miss him now that he no longer can appear before us with his kindly smile, his genial manner, and we who were his colleagues can never forget JOE BYRNS. He was a beloved Tennessean. He was a greatly admired American. He was a friend of the people. He loved the masses.

This memorial must not close without a record of qualities more intimate and homely. Along with this virile strength, this rugged, stalwart man, there went a tenderness and gentleness revealed with prodigal generosity to those who knew him best. In any social group he was at once a central figure, rejoicing in the companionship of his friends, and never so happy as in the exchange of jokes, reminiscenses, and pleasantries, and ofttimes brilliant and scintillating repartee. How his cheerful voice pealed forth at such a time in ecstasy and boyish laughter. Within the foursquare granite walls of the man there dwelt the heart of a youth. He was always young in spirit, mature in judgment, and counselor honored and beloved.

The familiar voice to us has been stilled; the strong and masterful yet gentle spirit has withdrawn from the bodily frame, but those of us who have been left behind to carry on the work that in life he so ably performed have today a solemn pride in placing our appreciation upon the records of the Congress in tribute to his memory. He was a worthy successor to that great Tennessean, Andrew Jackson, lovingly referred to as "Old Hickory", and JOE BYRNS carried on and represented that same great constituency once represented by Jackson, and for a quarter of a century JOE BYRNS reflected honor and glory upon Tennessee and the Hermitage district, which he and we so greatly love and admire.

I confidently believe that I express the unanimous conviction of each and every member of the House, on both sides of the aisle, when I say that "he was the noblest Roman of them all", the most beloved.

The great principle which actuated his life was love for his Maker and love for his neighbors. He always endeavorded to truly "live by the side of the road and be a friend to man." He believed in the guidance of the great Deity and had the conviction that he was daily in His service. This enabled him to have the courage of a crusader and to carry on. He fell a victim in the ranks, with his armor on, and is gone from us, but, in the language of the poet:

No; I cannot and I will not say
That he is dead.
He is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand,
He has entered into that unknown land,
And left us dreaming, how very fair it
Needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you, O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return;
Think of him, passing on as fair in the love
Of there, as the love of here.
Think of him still as the same, I say.
He is not dead. He's just away.

ADDRESS OF HON. RICHARD M. ATKINSON

The SPEAKER. The concluding eulogy will be delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, honored guests, to me this is a sad occasion, yet a privilege and honor is mine, permitted, as I am, to stand on the floor of the House of Representatives of the United States of America and pay tribute to the life and memory of my illustrious predecessor, the former Speaker of this House, the lovable, the capable, the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS, known to his home folks and all who knew him everywhere as JOE BYRNS.

Only at intervals did I observe him as he labored, our legislative representative, from his, from our beloved Hermitage district of Tennessee; but we know his splendid record, as he fashioned it, day by day, through his long and splendid service to our State and Nation.

We of the lovely Hermitage district knew that he was something more than our congressional Representative; he was our "ambassador of good will" to the National Congress, to the world, commanding respect for himself and our people by the sheer force of his magnetic qualities, by the lovely democracy which suffused his being, expressing itself in his every action.

His rise to fame and national recognition was a steady and even progression. Born on a farm in Robertson County, Tenn., of people and among people whose dominating characteristic is possession of that all-compelling and driving motive power of love.

Love of mankind featured his whole life. He worked hard to acquire an education, which led him into a lucrative practice of law and removal of residence 40 miles away, to Nashville, Tenn., among a people the same in quality and characteristics as those with whom he had mixed and mingled in his younger days.

He was so typical of our people, expressing their hopes, aspirations, and ideals, that they sent him to the National Congress, so that the Nation, the world might know just who we are, just what the life and ideals of the people who love, labor, and live in the valley of the Cumberlands.

He so well represented the character and aspirations of our people that we were willing to keep him here until his death did part him from us and from mankind in general whom he loved so well.

For over a quarter of a century he represented the Hermitage district. Then he came home to sleep and rest beside the waters of the Cumberland, covered by the same earth as covers the mortal remains of Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk, and many other illustrious Tennesseans whose noble works he carried on.

Born in Tennessee, typical of Tennessee in his life's work, Tennessee hugs his mortal remains close to her bosom—proclaims to the world that he was her own.

Meet the humblest man or woman on the roads of Stewart, Montgomery, Robertson, Sumner, Trousdale, Macon, or Davidson Counties, Tenn., and each one of them will tell you that JOE BYRNS was his or her personal friend, for the love and affection which existed here was Christlike. No misnomer existed when JOE BYRNS was officially listed as Representative from the Fifth Congressional District of Tennessee. Everyone with whom he came in contact recognized his manhood was resplendent; his personal honor spotless. Suspicion never glanced at him.

It must have been a glorious transition for him, living a mortal life of true democracy, among so many pretenders to that state, to reach the absolute democracy of the vast hereafter.

I can imagine, my colleagues, that Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, and all the rest of our departed illustrious great gave him a royal welcome 1 year ago today when he smilingly entered heaven. I can almost hear Old Hickory say, "Well done, Joe; by the eternal you were a Democrat."

Following his departure from our earthly councils and companionship, we can only shed a tear, express regret, tell his beloved family of our heartfelt sympathy. But a greater task is mine—to live up to the lofty precedents of duty he set.

JOE BYRNS, I now stand in your stead, representing your people, my people, telling your colleagues, my colleagues, the Nation, the world, all of whom you loved, that I dedicate my life, here and now, to the same service you rendered, God being my helper. Carry on, my friend, rest in glory; I will be true, just as you were, to the faith of our fathers.

A cornet solo, Nearer My God to Thee, was played by Oscar Short, of the United States Navy Band.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God and in His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of Almighty God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be among you and remain with you always. Amen.

AFTER RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings had during the recess will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2520. By Mr. BOEHNE: Petition of Madeleine Amiquet and Louis Amiquet, of Evansville, Ind., stating that the United States should extend the arms embargo to Germany and Italy because it is recognized that Germany and Italy are waging an undeclared war with Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2521. By Mr. CARTER: Petition of the California Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, recommending that this Congress enact legislation requiring all labor organizations to formally incorporate and assume legal responsibility for the acts of their respective organizations; to the Committee on Labor.

2522. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the fifth assembly district, Bronx, New York City, branch of the American Labor Party, of New York State, urging the passage of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

2523. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Memorial of the House of Representatives, State of Texas, favoring extension of 3½-percent interest rate to farmers on Federal land bank farm loans; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou eternal and unchangeable God, before whose face the days pass swiftly by and dying generations depart through the shadows to the place Thou hast appointed for them: Be very near to us at this the beginning of another day of service unto Thee and to our country; touch our lips with truth; fill our hearts with love, and suffer no ungenerous thought or mordant note to mar the music of Thy guiding spirit.

Bless us in our earthly loves, our joys and sorrows; pity us in our sicknesses and sufferings of body and of mind, and remember especially, O Father of mercies, our beloved friend and the members of his family in this hour of their great sorrow. Comfort them as only Thou canst comfort; yet somehow by the divine alchemy of Thy grace let the sacrament of our tender sympathy be a blessing unto them in this their time of utmost need. Be with all who are sad and lonely, change Thou their darkness into light, and let the gladness of Thy prayer-hearing love fall over every shadowed soul. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, June 3, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CONTROL AND PREVENTION OF CANCER—NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR BONE

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that tomorrow I shall seek to obtain the floor for a few moments to discuss Senate bill 2067, which is a bill dealing with the question of cancer. My remarks in that connection will be very brief.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the morning business the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, commencing with Order of Business No. 428.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE INTERTERRITORIAL FREIGHT RATE PROBLEM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper and report, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Herewith I submit a survey entitled "The Interterritorial Freight Rate Problem of the United States", which survey was conducted by the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, pursuant to Executive Order No. 6161 (June 8, 1933), by which I delegated to it certain powers granted to me by sections 22 and 23 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. I am also transmitting herewith a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, dated May 28, 1937, forwarding the aforesaid survey to me, and explaining its nature and purpose.

I invite particular attention to the suggestion, contained in Chairman Morgan's letter, that the report, with its accompanying maps and charts, be published as an official document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 7, 1937.

FRANK W. CARPENTER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1699) granting an annuity to Frank W. Carpenter, which were, on page 2, line 1, after "pay", to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated"; on page 2, line 6, to strike out "during" and insert "after"; and on page 2, line 6, after "enacted", to insert: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

S. T. DICKINSON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 673) for the relief of S. T. Dickinson, which was, on page 1, to strike out lines 3, 4, and 5 and insert "That the Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to pay, from the employees' compensation fund, to S. T. Dickinson, of Richmond, Va."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS OF PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That section 13 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935, is amended by striking out 'June 16, 1937' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1939' "; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to continue in effect until June 30, 1939, the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935."

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH N. WENGER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 274) for the relief of Joseph N. Wenger, lieutenant, United States Navy, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "as reimbursement of" and insert "in full satisfaction against the United States for"; on page 1, line 11, to strike out "1933" and insert "1932"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Lt. Joseph N. Wenger, United States Navy."

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

APRIL REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation reporting, pursuant to law, relative to the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of April 1937, including statements of loan and other authorizations made during the month, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A house memorial relating to the continuation of the functions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents—

The Congress of the United States of America has extended the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works from time to time since its creation and has augmented the original appropriation to further the policy of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works by financing and aiding the construction of worthy and necessary public projects, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works has effectively and efficiently discharged the public duties with which it has been entrusted.

The construction of projects of the type financed by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is not solely a means of reemploying citizens of the State who are without employment, but is a means to stimulate industry in general by the construction of sound and useful public projects designed to meet social and economic needs, and the continuation of its program is necessary in order that unemployment may be reduced and absorbed by private industry.

The records of the Arizona State director of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works discloses that in excess of 50 applications are now pending in his office for the construction of public projects under the direction and supervision of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, prays:

1. That the Congress of the United States of America continue the functions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and authorize appropriations necessary to adequately provide for a continued program of public improvements.

2. That the secretary of state is authorized and directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of the Interior as Director of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Arizona in the Congress of the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Patents:

Joint resolution memoralizing Congress to enact legislation prohibiting racketeering on copyrighted music

Whereas corporations have been organized for the purpose of obtaining from composers and creators of musical compositions assignments thereof, securing copyrights thereon and obtaining, by various racketeering methods, from proprietors of public places where music is played in public by victrola, radio, individuals, or orchestra, money for the privilege of playing such music in any form; and

Whereas the racketeering methods used by such corporations in obtaining money from these businessmen include intimidation, threats of a lawsuit for alleged infringment of a copyright, sending out threatening letters over an attorney's signature, sending out investigators to obtain evidence for the basis of lawsuits, claiming to have secured such evidence and bringing of wholesale actions in Federal courts asking damages for alleged infringements on musical copyrights; and

Whereas through such tactics large sums of money have been taken from unsuspecting and innocent businessmen for which they have received nothing in return; and

Whereas said racket is now flourishing in the State of Wisconsin to the detriment of and financial loss to a substantial proportion of our businessmen; and

Whereas the tactics and methods of such corporations and their agents can be restrained or regulated effectively only by Federal legislation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation prohibiting such racketeering on copyrighted music; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution by the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Assembly joint resolution urging that Congress and the Federal Relief Administration direct their consideration to the wages of employees on work-relief projects

Whereas at the time relief wages were established on work-relief projects they provided only a meager living; and

Whereas since the establishment of wages on work-relief projects living costs have advanced very materially; and

Whereas the trend of the cost of living is up; and

Whereas many men on work-relief projects who have families to support are compelled to live on a level much below that adequate for health and decency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the President of the United States, Congress, and the Federal Relief Administrator are hereby respectfully urged to direct their consideration to the existing wages of employees on work-relief projects, with particular reference to the increasing costs of living and differences in sizes of families; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby respectfully requested to submit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Federal Relief Administrator, and to each Senator and Representative of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Assembly joint resolution relative to Federal aid to State or Territorial veterans' homes

Whereas there exists in the State of California one of the outstanding State homes of the Nation for the care of disabled veterans, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living; and

Whereas the per capita cost for maintaining such veterans has greatly increased due to advancing age and physical disabilities; and

Whereas the State of California is deluged with veterans who come from other States who become disabled and by reason of their becoming legal residents, must be cared for in California; and

Whereas the $120 per year per capita Federal aid represents a very small part of the total cost of maintaining a veteran in the California State facility: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation that will result in increasing the Federal aid, provided that any State shall not be paid a sum exceeding one-half the per-capita cost of maintaining a veteran; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from District Council No. 9, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers, of New York City, N. Y., praying for an appropriation to continue the operations of the W. P. A., and also the enactment of the pending low-cost-housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Waltham, Mass., favoring the enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Rhode Island Truck Owners' Association, favoring the repeal of the Federal gasoline sales tax and the surrender to the States exclusively of the power to tax such sales in the future, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the National Society United States Daughters of 1812, at Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called Rogers old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted at the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, by the Conference on Social Security for the Professions, and Local No. 171, Hospital Employees' Union, of Greater New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to continue the public-works and relief program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors, Metropolitan Section, of the American Society of Civil Engineers, of New York City, favoring the so-called Ickes plan for expediting the topographic mapping of the United States and also continuation of the activities of the Public Works Administration on a modified grant basis, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Niagara Falls (N. Y.) Citizenship Alumni Association, favoring the appropriation of necessary funds to continue the adult-education program, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Federal Local No. 19932, Wholesale Dry Goods Employees' Union, and Local Union No. 366, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, both of New York City; the Common Council of the City of Buffalo; Branch No. 40, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, of Buffalo; the Fifth A. D. Bronx Branch of the American Labor Party of New York State, of the Bronx; the Central Labor Council of Jamestown; the Lackawanna Municipal Housing Authority, of Lackawanna; Aluminum Workers' Union, No. 19256, of Massena; the Women's Democratic Club of Syracuse; and Local No. 583, Hotel and Restaurant Employees' Alliance, of Troy, all in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of the pending low-cost-housing bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by St. Lawrence Chapter, No. 68, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, of Massena, N. Y., protesting against any reduction in pensions or compensation now being received by veterans of the World War for service-connected disabilities, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Federal Local No. 19932, Wholesale Dry Goods Employees' Union, of New York City, protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the United Rumanian Jews of America, of New York City, favoring the enactment of the so-called Dies bill, being House bill 6391, relating to the immigration of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Diocesan Convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Rochester, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called Gavagan antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the memorial of members of the Men's Class and the congregation of the Queens Baptist Church, of Queens Village, N. Y., remonstrating against the Government manufacture of or promotion of the use of rum from the Virgin Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, favoring the erection of the proposed Thomas Jefferson Memorial on a prominent hill on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, clearly visible from the Capital City, and in a style favored by Jefferson as expressed in his writing and architectural designs, rather than the erection of such memorial in the vicinity of the Tidal Basin in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Whereas the Federal Government as a part of its comprehensive social-security program has established in each State of the Union camps for the housing and training of its Civilian Conservation Corps; and

Whereas the establishment and maintenance of such camps in this State has been of untold value to the people of Texas in that it has afforded opportunity for rehabilitation to thousands of young men of Texas of unfortunate circumstances because of the insecurity which has been occasioned by the turmoil of recent years; and

Whereas the continued maintenance of such camps in this State is deemed both highly desirable and necessary to the end that the youth of Texas be afforded the continued opportunity to avail themselves of the benefits of such training: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Texas, That Congress be called upon to continue this beneficial program and to provide for the continued maintenance in this State of all existing camps for its Civilian Conservation Corps; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the House of Representatives forward to each of the Members of Congress from Texas a copy of this resolution and shall forward copies to both of the Senators from this State in Washington, D. C.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I present for printing in the RECORD and appropriate reference a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania relating to abnormal profits in time of war.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas the members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania are strongly in favor of the removal of abnormal profits during time of war; and

Whereas it is their belief that war should be prosecuted with special privilege to none and on the basis of equal service for all; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Federal Congress a bill which would not only accomplish these desirable results but by its enactment into law would do much toward the preservation and promotion of peace: And therefore be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to pass the Sheppard-Hill bill (Senate No. 25, House No. 1954) at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each of the Members elected from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the Congress of the United States.

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. WAGNER presented a letter from the secretary of the Episcopal Diocese of Rochester, N. Y., with an attached resolution, which, with accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIOCESE OF ROCHESTER,
Rochester, N. Y., June 3, 1937.

To the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senator from New York State,
Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to report to you the enclosed action passed at a meeting of the Diocesan Convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Rochester held in the city of Rochester, May 11 and 12.

Respectfully yours,

FREDERICK CROSBY LEE,
Secretary of the Diocese of Rochester.

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has passed recently the antilynching bill; and

Whereas the same bill is to be presented to the Senate; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States guarantees liberty, life, and the pursuit of happiness to its citizens: Be it

Resolved, That this convention, at its present session, heartily endorse the action of the House of Representatives in approving the bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, and to the Senators representing the State of New York.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred certain letters and resolutions endorsing the pending low-cost-housing bill.

There being no objection, the letters and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN LABOR PARTY,
NEW YORK STATE,
New York City, June 3, 1937.

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am pleased to enclose herewith a copy of a resolution adopted by the Fifth A. D. Bronx Branch of the American Labor Party in support of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill.

We need not labor you with the need for decent low-cost housing, but we urge you to bring all the pressure you can upon the committees holding said bill to act favorably on it and to bring same up for an immediate vote. This must not meet the fate of the late Wagner-Ellenbogen bill.

We have heard enough talk and now want to see some building.

Respectfully yours,

AMERICAN LABOR PARTY,
5th A. D., Bronx, N. Y.
By HARRY KAVESH,
Chairman, Committee on Housing and Public Affairs.

Whereas we, the 5th A. D. Bronx, New York City, are urgently aware of the bad housing conditions of workers here and elsewhere in the United States, of the acute housing shortage now rapidly growing worse, of the increases in rentals being demanded of tenants unable to pay same, of the inability of private enterprise or local initiative alone to remedy this situation, of the gallant but totally inadequate efforts of some municipalities to foster slum elimination and decent low-cost housing for workers, and of the suffering caused by chronic unemployment in the building and allied trades; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, if enacted, would provide the first concrete step toward solving this tremendous national problem: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the 5th A. D. Bronx Branch of the American Labor Party of New York State, on behalf of its thousands of voters and their families in its district, heartily endorses the Wagner-Steagall bill and urges its immediate adoption by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition Congress, in view of the alarming need for new, decent, low-rent housing, that the financial provisions be doubled, while the administrative set-up remains intact; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President, to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, the House Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senators from this State, the Congressman of Bronx County, the New York members of the Senate and House committees, and to the press.

AMERICAN LABOR PARTY OF NEW YORK,
5th A. D. Bronx Branch,
1330 Wilkins Avenue, N. Y. C.
By HARRY KAVESH,
Chairman, Committee on Housing and Public Affairs.

JOINT BOARD OF THE CLOAK, SUIT, SKIRT, AND REEFER MAKERS' UNIONS OF GREATER NEW YORK,
New York, June 2, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed herewith please find copy of resolution expressing our sentiments toward your bill.

Our organization is heartily in favor of this measure and we have sent copies of the enclosed resolution to all the Congressmen of New York City.

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS E. LANGER, Recording Secretary.

The Joint Board of the Cloak, Suit, Skirt, and Reefer Makers' Union of Greater New York most emphatically requests the Congress of the United States to pass as soon as possible the Wagner-Steagall housing bill.

The housing situation in New York City as it affects wage earners has become steadily worse. Construction of new dwellings for the low-income groups has been at a standstill throughout the years of the depression. The attempts in New York City to raze firetrap tenements dangerous to life and health without the replacement of these new buildings has only worsened the housing shortage and has served as an additional factor in increasing the already exorbitant rentals prevalent. A condition exists in the city of New York, the largest and wealthiest city of the world, in which hundreds of thousands of workers and their families live in substandard homes injurious to their health and safety and a threat to the health and well being of the new generation growing up in such surroundings.

Nor can any construction program undertaken with the resources of the city of New York alone meet the present intolerable situation. A housing-construction program to be effective must be national in scope. We demand that new housing for the people of the United States be put on a par with education, public health, and public roads, and that the disgrace of slums and blighted areas be eliminated.

The Joint Board of the Cloakmakers' Unions, representing 30,000 workers in New York City and vicinity, calls upon our Representatives in Congress to do all in their power to promote the bill in order to insure its early passage and enactment.

UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA, LOCAL UNION NO. 366,
New York, June 4, 1937.

Reference to the Wagner-Steagall bill, S. 1685.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Whereas we in the Bronx are urgently aware of the bad housing conditions here and elsewhere, of the acute housing shortage now rapidly growing worse, of the inability of private enterprise or local initiative alone to remedy this situation, and of the suffering caused by chronic unemployment in the building trades; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, if enacted, would provide the first concrete step toward solving this tremendous national problem: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Local Union 366 of carpenters heartily endorse the Wagner-Steagall bill and urge its immediate adoption by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That we heartily petition Congress, in view of the alarming need of low-rent housing, that the financial provisions be doubled whilst the administrative set-up remains intact; and be it further

Resolved, That we are heartily in favor of this bill without any change, and request that you please support it.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES C. DUIGNAN,
Secretary, Local Union 366.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have just received from Mr. H. C. Colgrove, commander of the Kansas Department, United Spanish War Veterans, resolution no. 1 adopted by the Kansas department at its annual meeting in Salina, Kans., May 18.

This resolution reaffirms the position taken by the organization a year ago demanding that criminal aliens, and aliens who have been in the United States a sufficiently long time without taking out naturalization papers to evidence they have intention of becoming citizens, be deported and returned to their native land.

Mr. President, the position taken by the United Spanish War Veterans of Kansas that aliens illegally in the United States be deported as fast as they can be rounded up is the position I have taken for many years. I also am in sympathy with the proposal that aliens who refuse to take out citizenship papers after a reasonable length of time should be returned to their native land.

And I also say that American citizens should be taken care of first in the matter of relief and in the matter of jobs. I send the resolution to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is much talk at this time of balancing the National Budget; and

Whereas there are at the present time unemployed persons in the United States variously estimated at from eight to twelve millions; and

Whereas Government officials estimate there are over 3,000,000 aliens in the United States who have illegally entered our borders, and there are over 5,000,000 aliens who have no intention of becoming citizens, as evidenced by their failure to take out citizenship papers although they have lived in this country for many years; and

Whereas many of these aliens are on relief and are being cared for at the expense of the American taxpayers; and

Whereas a large number of these aliens have secured jobs here, thus depriving American citizens of the opportunity of earning a livelihood; and

Whereas the United States would not have an unemployment or relief problem but for the presence of these unnaturalized aliens; and

Whereas most of the aliens residing in the United States have come from Europe, and these countries owe billions of dollars to our citizens for money borrowed for rehabilitation and repair of damage caused by the holocaust of 1914–18, in addition to the thousands of lives that were lost and the billions spent by us in saving from destruction other thousands of crippled veterans, for which no recompense was asked; and

Whereas these countries refuse to pay the money borrowed from us and which was loaned to them in good faith and out of the goodness of our hearts; and

Whereas these same countries are now spending billions for armaments and for preparation for another war; and

Whereas we are in full sympathy with the principle of charity but believing that charity begins at home; and

Whereas the return to their former homes of these various classes of aliens heretofore mentioned would practically restore normal conditions to this country, unemployment automatically would be much reduced, and the National Budget would be balanced without the curtailment of a single desirable Government function: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Thirtieth Annual Encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Kansas, in convention assembled at Salina, Kans., May 18, 1937, That we wish to reaffirm the action of the twenty-ninth annual encampment at Topeka last year, and we earnestly request and urge the Congress of the United States to take the action suggested in this resolution to the end that normal conditions may once more be restored in this country, and that prosperity may reign again; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Members of Congress from the State of Kansas and to the President of the United States.

SALINA, KANS., May 18, 1937.

TRAIN LIMIT—LETTER FROM REPRESENTATIVES OF TRANSPORTATION BROTHERHOODS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a letter signed by the heads of all the transportation brotherhoods of the United States bearing on the subject of Senate bill no. 69, the so-called train-limit bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 28, 1937.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Reliable information has reached us that outsiders have caused to be circulated among Senators a rumor that the transportation brotherhoods are not solidly and sincerely supporting the train-limit bill (S. 69) introduced by Senator MCCARRAN, of Nevada, which bill has been favorably reported out by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and is now on the Senate Calendar.

The rumor is absolutely false. The brotherhoods we represent are wholeheartedly back of this legislation, and are most earnestly urging its early passage at this session of Congress.

We respectfully request your support of S. 69, and will be pleased to talk with you at any time regarding its merit.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN T. CORBETT,
Assistant Grand Chief Engineer and National Legislative Representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
ARTHUR J. LOVELL,
Vice President and National Legislative Representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.
W. D. JOHNSON,
Vice President and National Legislative Representative, Order of Railway Conductors.
J. A. FARQUHARSON,
National Legislative Representative, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 947) to provide national flags for the burials of honorably discharged former service men and women, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 679) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2080) for the relief of Eleanora S. Richardson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 680) thereon.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 178) for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 681) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1044) for the relief of Thomas W. Seay, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 682) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2531. A bill to authorize the transfer of certain military reservations to other agencies of the Government and to the people of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 683);

H. J. Res. 335. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Olmedo Alfaro, a citizen of Ecuador (Rept. No. 684); and

H. J. Res. 339. Joint resolution granting permission to George E. Ijams, civilian employee of the Veterans' Administration, to accept and wear the decoration bestowed upon him by the Republic of France (Rept. No. 685).

Mr. TRUMAN, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment in the nature of a substitute and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate commerce, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 686); and

S. 1760. A bill to promote the safety of scheduled air transportation (Rept. No. 687).

TEMPORARY CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 138, and ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution reported by the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 138) submitted by Mr. ASHURST on the first instant was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution 116, agreed to April 22, 1937, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to employ an assistant clerk for 2 months to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $120 per month, hereby is continued in full force and effect for an additional period of 2 months.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so I wish to make a brief statement.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill has completed its hearings, and today, at 2:30 will report the bill to the main committee. That committee, however, will not be able to report in time to get the bill before the Senate today, in all probability, because the Senate may adjourn before we complete our deliberations.

I ask unanimous consent that later today the Committee on Appropriations may be permitted to file its report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill even though in the meantime the Senate may have adjourned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 692) thereon.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS—AMENDMENT

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 187) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. BRIDGES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the joint resolution to insert the following new paragraph:

"Of the amount specified for highways, roads, and streets, not less than $75,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of public highways on the Federal-aid highway system and not less than $50,000,000 for the survey and construction of secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural free delivery mail roads, and public-school bus routes. Such sums shall be apportioned in the manner provided by section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act for expenditure by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented. Not less than $25,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of projects for the elimination of hazards to life at railroad grade crossings on the Federal-aid highway system and elsewhere, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad grade-crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, and shall be apportioned and expended in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 16, 1936, entitled 'An act to amend the Federal Aid Highway Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.' No part of the funds apportioned to any State or Territory under this paragraph need be matched by the State or Territory. The President shall prescribe rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph."

INTERFERENCE WITH UNITED STATES MAILS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for appropriate reference, which I should like to have read, and I ask permission to speak on the resolution for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that he be permitted to speak for 15 minutes on a resolution which he asks the clerk to read? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 140), as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three from the majority political party and two from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation (1) of all cases of alleged interference by any persons or organizations with the acceptance or delivery of mail tendered to or accepted by postal authorities for delivery to addresses within any business or industrial establishment in which industrial strife may be occurring, and (2) of all cases of agreements between postal authorities and persons or organizations whereby such authorities agree not to accept mail tendered for delivery to addresses within any such business or industrial establishment. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, in numerous metropolitan journals throughout the country on Saturday, June 5, appeared various articles having to do with censorship of the United States mails. I have on my desk a number of these publications, and wish to read for the purpose of the RECORD a quotation from an article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of Saturday, June 5, as follows:

C. I. O. CENSORS THE MAIL FOR STEEL STRIKE PLANT, PROTEST TO FARLEY SAYS—UNION OFFICIALS PASSED ON PARCELS INTENDED FOR REPUBLIC'S NILES, OHIO, MILL, ATTORNEY CHARGES—MEDICINE IS OPENED FOR STRIKERS TO SEE—PICKETS "WILL NOT ALLOW IT", POSTAL AID ASSERTS IN EXPLAINING BAN ON "IRREGULAR" SHIPMENTS

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The Republic Steel Corporation today telegraphed a protest to Postmaster General James A. Farley on the basis of charges that postal authorities at Niles, Ohio, not only had permitted C. I. O. officials to inspect packages addressed to individuals in its strike-bound plant there but to pass upon their entry into the mails.

The charges were made by Lewis L. Guarnieri, attorney, of Warren, Ohio, who described how he had attempted unsuccessfully to mail packages of food to nonstriking workers in the corporation's plants there and at Niles. Bert Flaherty, the assistant postmaster at Niles, Mr. Guarnieri related, informed him no "irregular" packages were being accepted for delivery to the corporation and told him how "Mr. Payne and Mr. Galloway, of the union", had been summoned the day before to pass on the admissibility of a package of medicine.

[Mr. Flaherty, according to the Associated Press, admitted that leaders of strike pickets had examined the package of medicine with a Post Office Department inspector, but said that no further inspections were being permitted. The union men and the inspector, he said, were conferring on the question of mail for the Niles plant at the time.]

MEDICINE PACKAGE OPENED

The medicine package incident was brought to light today, Mr. Guarnieri said, after the assistant postmaster had refused to accept packages which he was attempting to send into the Niles plant.

"Flaherty", Mr. Guarnieri's statement related, "then went on to tell myself and the other three gentlemen present that yesterday a man brought in a package to the post office, saying that it was medicine for one of the Republic Steel employees. Mr. Flaherty said that they sent for Mr. Payne and Mr. Galloway, of the union; that the package was opened and that it was found to contain medicine, and that Payne and Galloway then gave permission to allow the package to go into the mills.

"A postal inspector was present at the time and he reached an understanding with Payne and Galloway, according to Bert Flaherty, that no 'irregular' mail would be permitted to go into the plant, such as food, clothing, newspapers, and the like, and Mr. Flaherty said:

"'You see, we cannot take these packages because they will not allow it.'

"I asked who he meant by 'they', and Flaherty said, 'Mr. Payne, Galloway, and the union pickets would not allow clothing or newspapers to be delivered, but they would allow the postal department to deliver regular parcel-post packages, such as, for example, a parcel-post package from Westinghouse Electric.'"

Similar articles have appeared in the great metropolitan dailies of the country, the article which I have read for the RECORD being a sample of those appearing in other newspapers. I do not know whether the purported facts stated in the articles are true or not, but I assume they have some basis or they would not have been published. If they are true, they present a situation which is a disgrace to the United States, a disgrace to the Postal Service, and a disgrace to the great traditions which the Postal Service of the United States has built up over a long period of years.

Down through the years in this country has been a tradition that the mails must go through. Back in 1934, when the air-mail contracts were canceled by the administration, the Army fliers were forced into that service and at that time eight fliers—12 persons in all—according to War Department information, paid with their lives for the sake of maintaining that tradition that the mails must go through.

The Federal Post Office inspectors and the authorities down through the years have built up a great reputation. In Canada the Northwest Mounted Police have a reputation for "getting their man." In this country in recent years Federal G-men have built up a similar reputation. Today the reputation built up by the Post Office Department goes by the board if the situation to which I have adverted is allowed to continue and if the statements made in this and similar articles are true. I am not quarreling with the Post Office Department on the question of whether or not that Department shall accept or reject regular or irregular mail. There may be some justification for its rejection or there may not be; but that is not the issue at stake. I can understand the feeling of the strikers at the particular plant in not wanting materials to go through to the men who are not on strike, but neither is not the point at issue. The point at issue is that, according to the stories published in certain newspapers private citizens, who in this instance happen to be representatives of a striking C. I. O. labor union, were permitted to censor the United States mails; were permitted to inspect packages in the United States mails to see what they contained, and then to tell the postal authorities whether or not they could go through; in other words, passing upon the type of mail that shall be accepted and delivered. If the facts are correctly set forth, an investigation by this body is warranted. If the purported statements are true, they present a situation which is a disgrace to this country and a reflection on the Postal Service which has had no major reflection cast upon it and which has been so outstanding down through the years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, being in hearty accord with the observations just made by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Whose Mail?" published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer on June 5, 1937.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer of June 5, 1937]

WHOSE MAIL?

Grover Cleveland called out the soldiery to keep the mails moving at Chicago. Some such assertion of supreme authority seems to be needed to keep the mails moving at Warren, strike-tied Ohio town.

Instead, the acting postmaster at Warren, who represents or misrepresents the Department at Washington which Jim Farley directs, refuses to accept for delivery packages of food addressed to the manager of the Republic Steel plant. It is "irregular mail", he says, and for this reason may properly be refused.

At the same time the Youngstown local committee of the steel strikers' organization wires Postmaster General Farley urging "immediate application of ruling 'unusual shipments' to stop delivery of food and supplies" into the Republic plants "by parcel post."

Plants at Warren, Youngstown, and Niles are being operated by men billeted inside. The company, finding it impossible to get food to its workers by truck, resorts to the use of planes. The incidental use of the mails for this purpose is now challenged by at least one spokesman for the United States Government.

The layman does not know what "irregular mail" is; nor does he know what the term "unusual shipments" means as applied to the Postal Service. He cannot fail to remember, however, that one of the articles of his Government's creed relates to the invincibility of its mails.

Come blizzards or high seas, earthquakes, floods, or civic commotion, the mails go on. The Government makes a contract with its people that for the price of the required postage stamps it will deliver the article committed to its care, be it either letter or package, so long as the individual keeps within the recognized limitations of law or Executive order.

This seems now to be changed. If the attitude of the acting postmaster at Warren is upheld, the Government may autocratically limit you in the use of the mails. You may send a parcel-post package of food to your dear old aunt at Agawam, but the same package becomes "irregular" and hence unmailable if addressed to the manager of a steel plant which has chosen to operate in spite of a strike.

Trucks are forbidden access to the strike zone, for civil authority has broken down. Railroad trains carrying supplies have been stopped by mobs which chain ties across the rails; and the railroads, as special wards of the Government, should be entitled to some protection.

The crowning evidence of Government ineptitude will be seen if the Post Office Department upholds the ruling of its spokesman at Warren and insists that mail addressed to a beleaguered steel plant cannot be accepted for delivery because it is deemed "irregular."

Grover Cleveland kept the mails moving, and history reveres his memory as that of a man true to his oath of office. Some of the twenty-second President's courage and clear thinking is needed in high places today.

BONDS AND FUNDS FOR PUBLIC-WORKS PROPECTS

Mr. POPE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 141), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas States, counties, municipalities, and other political subdivisions, sponsoring non-Federal projects have, in good faith and without notice of any change in the policy of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and in reliance on then existing regulations, issued or caused to be issued bonds or have otherwise made funds available contingent upon a 45-percent grant from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Administrator of Public Works is hereby directed to file with the Senate a statement setting forth by States the number of public-works projects exclusive of school projects for which bonds have been voted or funds have otherwise been made available, and setting forth the amounts of loans and grants or loans or grants requested in the applications.

LABOR, CAPITAL, AND GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR VANDENBERG

[Mr. WHITE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator VANDENBERG on Saturday, June 5, 1937, on the subject of Critical Relationships Between Labor, Capital, and Government, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRADE RELATIONS BETWEEN MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Ambassador from Mexico to the United States, at Dallas, Tex., May 21, 1937, and an address delivered on the same occasion by Hon. Josephus Daniels, Ambassador from the United States to Mexico, which appear in the Appendix.]

DEMOCRACY AND DICTATORSHIP—NEW YORK TIMES EDITORIAL

[Mr. BORAH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial, entitled "Democracy and Dictatorship," published in the New York Times of Sunday, June 6, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

WAR OR PEACE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN

[Mr. ROBINSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of War or Peace, delivered by Senator PITTMAN on June 3, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

RON STEPHENS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on May 24 the Senate confirmed the nomination of Mr. Ron Stephens, of Oklahoma, to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for that State, but his name was incorrectly spelled. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the nomination in the correct name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that, as in executive session, the Senate may consider a nomination? The Chair hears none, and the nomination will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ron Stephens, of Oklahoma, to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Oklahoma.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senate last met, the President sent a message withdrawing the name of this gentleman as first nominated, and sending the nomination again under the correct name.

Mr. McKELLAR. But his nomination has already been confirmed under the wrong name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination as now read by the clerk? Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be notified.

PREVENTION OF INCOME-TAX EVASION

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 155 was passed; and I now enter a motion to request the House to return the papers to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask what the joint resolution is?

Mr. BORAH. It is the joint resolution introduced by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], concerning the appointment of a joint committee to investigate tax matters.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not desire to urge this matter at this time. Whether or no I shall urge it will depend upon what the House of Representatives does with reference to the joint resolution. The House is today considering certain amendments to the joint resolution. It may be that I shall withdraw my motion after the House shall have passed upon Senate Joint Resolution 155, the House having proposed certain amendments in which I am interested. I am entering the motion to preserve every right in case the House action is not satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Idaho will be entered.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into earlier today, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar, beginning with Order of Business No. 428.

BILL PASSED OVER

The first business on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement was the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the author of the bill, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is not present, I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may go over today without prejudice. I wish to explain that a controversial matter is involved and an attempt is being made to iron out certain differences. I hope the next time the bill is reached on the calendar we may be able to pass it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it may take some time to explain the bill properly, and some Senators have expressed a desire that the measure be taken up on motion. Therefore, it may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS

The bill (S. 2106) for the allowances of certain claims not heretofore paid, for indemnity for spoliations by the French, prior to July 31, 1801, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator who objected to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. BURKE. I withhold it so that the Senator may make his statement.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that Senate bill 2106 is a very important matter to the persons whose names are mentioned in the report, and it is a very important matter to the national honor. The honor of the Nation is involved in the payment of these claims.

I am not going to ask to call up the bill today, in view of the objection; but I simply desire that the Members of the Senate read the report, and at the next call of the calendar I shall move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

H. G. HARMON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 885) for the relief of H. G. Harmon, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$818" and insert "$400", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to H. G. Harmon, of Hampton, Iowa, the sum of $400 in full satisfaction of his claim against the Government for damages arising out of personal injuries to his wife and son and the destruction of his automobile, suffered when such automobile was struck and completely demolished by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck, on September 10, 1935, near Hampton, Iowa, and for expenses and losses resulting therefrom: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) providing for the appointment of a National Unemployment and Relief Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have had conversations about the joint resolution with several Senators who desire to have it go over at this time, and I ask that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

NAOMI LEE YOUNG

The bill (H. R. 4457) for the relief of Naomi Lee Young was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARK B. BRANDON AND ROBERT G. TEER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Park B. Brandon and Robert G. Teer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$3,500"; in line 8, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$300" and insert "$248.49"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Park B. Brandon, of Braman, Okla., the sum of $3,500, and to Robert G. Teer, of Braman, Okla., the sum of $248.49, in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government for injuries sustained as a result of an accident involving a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps at Blackwell, Okla., on November 2, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. AND MRS. WALTER B. JOHNSON AND DAUGHTER

The bill (H. R. 2223) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Johnson and Joy Johnson, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 369) to allow credit to homestead settlers and entrymen for certain military service was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation of the bill is requested.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is the author of the bill. It was reported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. If no Senator is ready to discuss the measure, I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES T. MOORE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1210) for the relief of James T. Moore, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon James T. Moore, formerly chaplain with rank of first lieutenant of the Army of the United States, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the time of his honorable discharge, December 22, 1922, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was the result of an incident of service, and upon the result of such inquiry the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said James T. Moore, a first lieutenant in the Corps of Chaplains and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said James T. Moore shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill merely authorizes the claimant to go before a retiring board and have his claim heard and properly determined.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROY CHANDLER

The bill (S. 2096) for the relief of Roy Chandler was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Roy Chandler, late private, Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said organization on August 17, 1918: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

SERGEANT-INSTRUCTORS IN THE NATIONAL GUARD

The bill (S. 2401) for the relief of sergeant-instructors, National Guard, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That payments heretofore made on account of rental of quarters for enlisted men of the Army on duty with the National Guard and authorized by law to be furnished with quarters at Government expense, and payments heretofore made to said enlisted men of monetary allowances in lieu of rations which now stand disallowed, or would hereafter be disallowed but for this act, on the ground of their relation to or connection with the aforesaid rental payments or transactions, are hereby ratified and validated as to the disbursing officers making the same, and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to allow credit in the accounts of said disbursing officers for and on account of all such payments: Provided, That such payments on account of rental of quarters for each enlisted man were not in excess of $35 per month, the maximum rate authorized by law to be paid for rental of such quarters.

SEC. 2. Payments described in the first section hereof shall be, and the same are hereby, ratified and validated as to the military personnel concerned, in such amounts as are approved by the Secretary of War, whose determinations shall be final and conclusive: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the collection from military personnel concerned of any amount determined by the Secretary of War to be due to the United States.

SEC. 3. Any amounts collected from any person to reimburse the United States on account of payments which are herein validated shall be refunded to said person upon presentation of a claim, approved by the Secretary of War, to the Comptroller General who is authorized and directed to certify the same to the Congress for an appropriation to pay therefor.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2097) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of John E. Ketchum was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this appears to be a bill of somewhat unusual form. I should like to have an explanation of the bill before the Senate votes on it.

I suggest that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WHITMAN COUNTY, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 3411) to amend section 112 of the Judicial Code, to provide for the inclusion of Whitman County, Wash., in the northern division of the eastern district of Washington, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2157) authorizing credits to disbursing officers for expenses incident to the creation of subsistence homesteads corporations was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think we should have an explanation of the bill. I do not wish to object to its consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

IRVIN PENDLETON

The bill (H. R. 1013) for the relief of Irvin Pendleton was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL CRIPPS

The bill (H. R. 1084) for the relief of Samuel Cripps was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3557) for the relief of the Coast Fir & Cedar Products Co., Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of this bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SAMUEL RICHARD MANN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1457) for the relief of Samuel Richard Mann, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "charge" and the comma, to strike out "in the amount of $1,981.64"; on line 6, after the numerals "905813", to insert "in such amount as remains unpaid at the date this act becomes effective"; and on line 7, after the word "amount", to strike out "is" and to insert "will represent", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the charge, entered against Samuel Richard Mann, C-905813, in such amount as remains unpaid at the date this act becomes effective, which amount will represent the balance remaining due and unpaid on account of an overpayment of emergency officer's retirement award to the said Samuel Richard Mann due to an error of the Veterans' Administration.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1438) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sallie M. Danenhower, executrix of the estate of William W. Danenhower, deceased, the sum of $34,260, said sum to be in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia for damages caused by the depreciation in value of said William W. Danenhower's property situate in square 737 of the city of Washington, D. C., which said damages were caused by the elimination of grade crossings of railroads in pursuance to the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. L. 774), and acts supplemental thereto, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 2, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session: Provided, That one-half of said sum of $34,260 shall be chargeable to the District of Columbia and paid in like manner as other appropriations of the District of Columbia are paid: And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? It involves a large sum of money.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will allow me, I will state that a similar bill was passed at the last session of Congress, and similar bills were passed by one House or the other at several different sessions of the Congress. Last year the bill was vetoed by the President, the basis of the veto being that when the Union Station was built in Washington some acts were passed providing that in case of the acquisition of property the District of Columbia should pay one-half and the Federal Government one-half.

The bill before us is for the benefit of the creditors of Mr. William W. Danenhower, who is now dead. There was a trial, and the Court of Claims determined the value of the property which had been taken, and the damage which Mr. Danenhower had sustained was fixed at $34,000, or about that sum.

A bill was passed directing that the sum be paid out of the Federal Treasury, and the President, in his veto message, called attention to the old act, in which it was provided that the District of Columbia should pay half and the Federal Government half. The measure has been changed so as to correct the error pointed out by the President, and the bill has been approved by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not had time to read the bill with care; but it provides that one-half of the claim is to be paid by the District and one-half by the Federal Government?

Mr. LOGAN. It provides that one-half shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury. It goes no further than that, because the Federal Government is responsible for only half of the claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it meet the objection raised by the President in his veto message?

Mr. LOGAN. The clerk of the Committee on Claims, who took the matter up and had full information about it, told me that it met the objections. It also received the approval of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROY D. COOK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 410) for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries suffered in an accident caused by the falling of a large United States mail box at Thirty-ninth and Hazelfern Place, in Portland, Oreg., on or about January 12, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEAN SCOTT

The bill (H. R. 545) for the relief of Dean Scott was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLIFFORD Y. LONG

The bill (H. R. 3738) for the relief of Clifford Y. Long was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET GRACE AND ALICE SHRINER

The bill (H. R. 4508) for the relief of Margaret Grace and Alice Shriner was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of John L. Summers and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? As the Senator who reported the bill is not present, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOSHUA L. BACH

The bill (H. R. 2042) for the relief of Joshua L. Bach was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE ILLINOIS WATERWAY, ILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 350) authorizing a modification in the existing project for the improvement of the Illinois Waterway, Ill., and the abandonment of a portion of the Calumet River, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the existing project for the improvement of the Illinois Waterway, Ill., is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 19, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

SEC. 2. That the portion of the Calumet River, in the city of Chicago, County of Cook, State of Illinois, lying between the intersections of this river with the two lines described below, be declared by Congress to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States:

Beginning at a point on the south line of the north half of section 36, township 37 north, range 14 east, of the third principal meridian, 1,873.07 feet west of the east line of said section; thence northwesterly on a straight line to a point 3,280 feet west of the east line and 785 feet south of the north line of said section; and

Beginning at a point 585 feet east of the west line and 732 feet north of the south line of section 31, township 37 north, range 15 east, of the third principal meridian; thence north 46°30′ east along a straight line to the easterly water's edge of said river.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this measure?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this joint resolution involves no expenditure of money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it approved by the War Department?

Mr. COPELAND. It is not only approved by them but it was recommended by them. It came from the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEWIS subsequently said: Mr. President, observing that the clerk has reached Order of Business 686, may I inquire what action was taken concerning Calendar No. 680, being House Joint Resolution 350, authorizing a modification in the existing project for the improvement of the Illinois Waterway?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the joint resolution was passed. It relates to a realinement of the river.

Mr. LEWIS. I must say that I had promised certain individuals, who desired to express some views through a Member of the House from my State, as this relates to my State, that I would seek to get them a hearing. I am now anxious to have the measure passed, and the action of the Senate meets with my approval, but I desire to give notice that I will make such effort as I can at some future time so that these gentlemen may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, if the Senator from Illinois desires to have any witness heard, I will not object at all to the bill being returned to the Committee on Commerce. The bill came to us from the Army engineers, and with their recommendation. However, if the Senator from Illinois desires further consideration, I shall not resist.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I feel that, unless the representations by those to whom I have referred seem to the chairman of the committee himself as worthy of interrupting further progress, I will not ask for a reconsideration. I submit that the matter remain as it is now. Later we will enter any new design that may be desired.

COAST GUARD AIR STATION AT SAN FRANCISCO AIRPORT

The bill (H. R. 4893) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a Coast Guard air station at the San Francisco Airport; to provide for quick rescue facilities on the San Francisco Bay; to strengthen the Immigration and Customs Service patrol; and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST GUARD STATIONS ALONG MAINE COAST

The bill (H. R. 3031) to provide for the establishment of Coast Guard stations along the Maine coast was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPATCH OF VESSELS FROM CERTAIN PORTS OF CALL

The bill (H. R. 6438) to expedite the dispatch of vessels from certain ports of call was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST GUARD STATION ON THE COAST OF MICHIGAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 119) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Michigan, which had been reported from the Committe on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "station", to strike out "on the coast of Michigan", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish a Coast Guard station at or near Menominee, Mich., at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Menominee, Mich."

COAST GUARD STATION AT OR NEAR MANISTIQUE, MICH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1374) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Manistique, Mich., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "recommend", to strike out the comma and the words "and appropriations for the establishment and construction thereof are hereby authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be is enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station at or in the vicinity of Manistique, Schoolcraft County, Mich., at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF WARRANT OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2474) to provide a uniform method for examinations for promotion of warrant officers was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no warrant officer shall be promoted to chief warrant officer until he shall have passed an examination before a board of commissioned officers as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

ASSIGNMENT OF MARINE CORPS OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2521) to authorize the assignment of officers of the line of the Marine Corps to staff duty only as assistant quartermasters and assistant paymasters, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the line of the Marine Corps of the grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel may, upon application, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, be assigned to staff duty only as assistant quartermasters and assistant paymasters: Provided, That when so assigned they shall retain the lineal position and precedence which they now hold or may later attain and shall be promoted, retired, and discharged in like manner and with the same relative conditions in all respects as are now or may hereafter be provided for officers of the line of the Marine Corps, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided further, That the recommendation of selection boards in the cases of officers assigned to staff duty only shall be based upon their comparative fitness to perform the duties prescribed for them: Provided further, That officers of the grades of major and lieutenant colonel assigned to staff duty only in accordance with this act shall, on promotion up to and including the grade of colonel, be carried as additional numbers in grade: And provided further, That the number of officers assigned to staff duty only in accordance with this act in any one year shall be in accordance with the requirements of the service as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) authorizing the disposal of certain lands held by the Panama Railroad Co. on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this measure? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4597) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At the request of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who is unavoidably absent, I ask that this bill and the next bill on the calendar go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6144) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6436) authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the Panama Canal, not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think this bill should also go over, and I ask that that course be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES LINCOLN HARTLEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 557) authorizing the naturalization of James Lincoln Hartley, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws James Lincoln Hartley, a native-born citizen of the United States who involuntarily lost his citizenship at the age of 7 years by reason of the naturalization of his father as a citizen of Canada, shall be held and considered to have been legally admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, said James Lincoln Hartley may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States by filing a declaration of intention and taking the oath of allegiance in the manner prescribed in the naturalization laws before any court having jurisdiction of the naturalization of aliens.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is rather unusual to authorize naturalization by special act of Congress. I observe that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the author of the bill, is present in the Chamber, and I should like to have him discuss the reasons for the proposed legislation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the man involved in this bill was born in the United States and was taken to Canada by his parents at the age of 3. He lost his American citizenship as a result of the fact that his father was naturalized in Canada and failed to safeguard the American citizenship of the boy. The son came back to the United States a number of years ago, told the facts to the immigration officials, and they informed him that he was a citizen. As a matter of fact, all persons in his class had been deemed to be citizens until about 2 years ago, when the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that persons in that status were not citizens. He came into this country as a citizen.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator know, from his investigation of the subject, how many persons there are in this class, or about how many?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I cannot answer that question; I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I am wondering is whether the matter might not be dealt with by general legislation rather than by a special bill. What is the class to which this individual belongs, in the Senator's understanding of the case?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. To the class of those who, as children, before 1912 were taken to Canada, whose parents were naturalized by the Canadian Government, and whose parents failed to reserve the right of the children to their American citizenship. There cannot be a large number. I think I know of two other cases as a result of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to which I have referred.

Mr. ROBINSON. How long has the beneficiary of this bill been an actual resident of the United States?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Since 1928. He is employed as a radio operator, and because of the fact that he came into this country and was told that he was a citizen, the immigration authorities now hold that for him to become a citizen by naturalization he must go back to Canada, spend a year there, give up his employment, have no work in Canada, and then come back into this country and attempt to become a citizen through the process of naturalization.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2416) relative to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there are several of these Canal Zone bills on the calendar. Those previously called have been passed over; and unless it is pointed out that this particular bill should not also be passed over, I think it should go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

That completes the call of the calendar.

EXPENSES INCIDENT TO SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS CORPORATIONS

Mr. GILLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. While I was temporarily absent from the Chamber, Calendar No. 668, being Senate bill 2157, was passed over by reason of a lack of explanation. I should like to explain the bill, if I may, and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 668, Senate bill 2157, and that the bill may be considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2157) authorizing credits to disbursing officers for expenses incident to the creation of subsistence homesteads corporations, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for all otherwise proper payments heretofore made by them as fees and expenses incident to the creation or organization of subsistence homesteads corporations sponsored by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to Executive Order No. 6209 of July 21, 1933.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the occasion for the introduction of this bill was the disallowance by the Comptroller General of an account amounting to $181.04, being the expenses incurred by Mr. C. H. Tinker, of Phoenix, Ariz., who was asked to organize and become the agent for a corporation known as Rural Homes in Arizona, Inc. This was done when the subsistence homesteads were under the Department of the Interior; and on advice of the Attorney General it was suggested that in order to carry out the purpose, a separate corporation should be organized for each subsistence homestead. The Comptroller General ruled that there was no authority of law for the creation of such homesteads corporations, and, therefore, that any expense incident to their organization could not be paid by the United States. I took up the matter with the Comptroller General, and upon his suggestion introduced this bill, and he recommends its enactment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERFERENCE WITH UNITED STATES MAILS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me in order that I may make a very brief statement in connection with the resolution submitted awhile ago?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] submitted a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to investigate certain matters in connection with the refusal of the Post Office Department to deliver certain mail in connection with industrial troubles now in existence The resolution has been referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; but in connection with the submission of the resolution and the editorials placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I think it not inappropriate to make just a brief statement.

There has been some publicity growing out of the fact that the Post Office Department has declined to deliver certain types of so-called mail in certain plants in which there are now pending industrial disputes. Before this immediate situation arose a few weeks ago in Philadelphia when certain employees of certain department stores and retail stores went on strike, the proprietors asked the Post Office Department to deliver goods purchased by customers. The Department declined to do so on the ground that it was not the function of the Post Office Department to walk in and take sides as between the contesting parties to a labor dispute, and they declined to use the trucks and mail carriers of the United States to deliver purchases made by customers in those retail stores. Nothing much was said about that; but in view of the magnitude of certain disputes now in progress in certain sections of the country, a good deal of publicity has been given to the fact that the Post Office Department has not felt disposed or authorized to undertake a delivery service never before asked for or engaged in by the Post Office Department.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in just a moment.

The facts are that in these industrial plants there are certain men who are not on strike. They are in the plants. Either they are forbidden to leave, or they have voluntarily remained there; and the proprietors or managers or owners of the plants have asked the Post Office Department to deliver groceries, clothing, hams, flour, and all sorts of vegetables and other supplies into the plants where the men are not on strike, but are confined within the plants. The Post Office Department has never before engaged in such service. It has never before made any such deliveries; and it is now engaged in the complete delivery to the offices of these plants of all the mail which has been delivered heretofore.

When asked why the managers themselves did not deliver these supplies, they replied that they were afraid their men might become involved in a riot, and that their employees might be injured or their trucks turned over if any riot occurred or any physical difficulties arose because of the strike. They were asked why they did not get the railway express agency to deliver these supplies, and they said the railway express agency would not do it for the same reason; that they were unwilling to subject their trucks and delivery wagons and their employees to the possible risk of injury or interference insofar as the delivery of food supplies was concerned.

The Post Office Department, having never before rendered such service or been asked to render such service, did not feel authorized to use their facilities as delivery wagons for groceries and supplies, and thereby possibly cause their wagons and their postal employees to become involved in the same difficulty that might arise if private delivery wagons carried these products into the plants.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator was describing the episode at Philadelphia, among other similar alarming situations, where the stores, as I understood him to say, sought the use of postal facilities to make general deliveries during a strike. Do I understand that the stores offered merchandise to the parcels post in the regular course of business, offering the regular postage?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not so understand. I understand that the main interference with the business in these stores affected deliveries over the city; that the customers came in as usual and bought their supplies, and the stores asked the Post Office Department to substitute postal delivery wagons for their own delivery wagons in order that they might afford to everyone who purchased a package the same sort of delivery that he enjoyed if the purchase were delivered by the company.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator a further question? What would be the Senator's viewpoint if merchandise were offered in the regular course of parcels post operations, fully stamped, and asked to be delivered to the addressee? Has the Post Office Department, under those circumstances, any right to discriminate? Has it any right to choose what it shall or shall not deliver? Has it any obligation greater than to deliver the mails whenever and wherever offered in due process?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that my viewpoint is of any importance. I am merely undertaking to state the facts as I have gathered them from the Post Office Department as the reason why they have felt that they ought not to subject their postal delivery employees and their postal delivery wagons to the possibility of the same sort of danger that might be involved in the delivery of supplies into their own plants by the employers themselves in their own private trucks.

Also, the statement has been made that pickets who were involved in these strikes had interfered with the delivery of packages and had inspected them. The Post Office Department advises me that there has not been a single interference with the delivery of mail matter or inspection made of it by anybody in any of these regions except by a duly authorized post-office inspector in the Department's ordinary course of business.

In connection with the resolution, I thought this statement ought to be made, so that there would be no misunderstanding as to the Post Office Department's attitude in reference to the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I may add to what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has said that my purpose in moving that the resolution be sent to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was to ascertain the true facts in the matter and whether the facts justify the investigation called for by the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator's course was eminently proper; but, inasmuch as some publicity probably will be given to the submission of the resolution, I felt that in justice to the Department this statement ought to be made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree that the first necessity is the facts. I simply want to say a supplemental word in respect to my own point of view, because I did offer for the RECORD the editorial entitled "Whose Mail?", from one of the leading newspapers in Ohio, and I cordially concur in every word it says.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say that I did not read the editorial, so I am not in a position to say that I concur.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the proprietors of the business sought to substitute the regular postal equipment for their own delivery system and to use it outside the regular postal routine, certainly I would admit that the Department had no right to permit such substitution. But if mail was offered in the usual course of events, properly stamped at full value, the Post Office Department of the United States has no business whatsoever to inquire into the nature and extent of the transaction. When it does, it makes itself a direct party to the controversy on the other side. It is impartial only when it operates its facilities without fear or favor, regardless of which party to a labor dispute seeks these facilities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator think the Post Office Department ought to subject its own employees to a danger to which neither the employers nor other delivery agencies, such as the Railway Express Agency, are willing to submit their own employees and their trucks? Does the Senator think a subterfuge should be permitted to be taken advantage of in order to make the United States a party to the controversy by delivering hams and barrels of flour and suits of clothes and other supplies within the factory, when no packages of that kind were ever delivered there before?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator just as frankly as I can. This is a question of sovereignty, and I am for the sovereignty of the United States Government. If the delivery of this material is outside of the regular postal system, the Department has no business undertaking the work. If it is offered in the regular course of parcel-post delivery, the Government of the United States had better say what sturdy Grover Cleveland said, and stick to it, or it has ceased to be the Government of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Iowa will yield further, I will say that I am advised by the Post Office Department itself that the delivery of this mail is completely without the scope of and not similar to any delivery ever engaged in heretofore nor has the Department ever before been asked to engage in such delivery, that in order to be entirely neutral the Department has refused to take sides with either party to the controversy by the wholesale delivery of supplies within the plants in order that the men may remain in the plants.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S REPORT ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, a little over 3 months ago the Federal Trade Commission, complying with a resolution adopted by the Seventy-fourth Congress, filed a voluminous report. The report represented many months of painstaking investigation and also the expenditure of some $150,000 in assembling the material. So far as I am informed, there are only four copies of the report extant, two copies being in the hands of the respective Agricultural Committees of the two Houses, one with the Department of Agriculture, and one with the Federal Trade Commission itself. Through the foresight of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I am informed that steps will probably be taken this week to secure the printing of the usual statutory number of this report. Because of its outstanding value, I feel justified in imposing on the Senate for a short time in adverting to some of the phases of the report. Out of consideration for Senators, and for their guidance, I may say that it is a rather tedious subject to listen to and my remarks will require about half an hour.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly, I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I noticed in one of the columns printed in a newspaper a week or so ago a reference to the report about which the Senator is speaking, and the writer of the column indicated that there had been some effort upon the part of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to suppress the report. Before the Senator begins discussing the report, I should like, so that the record may be clear, and so that the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry may not be subjected to that sort of criticism, to have him state to the Senate the facts concerning the manner in which the report has been handled by the committee. My understanding is that there has not been any effort to suppress it; that the author of the resolution upon which the report is based made a motion that it be referred to a subcommittee; and that the report has been available to anybody who wanted to examine it in the office of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I should like to have the Senator, for the sake of the record, refute the criticism which was made of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I am glad to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Washington. The matter was presented in the Agricultural Committee of the Senate. At that time there was some discussion as to the voluminous nature of the report, and the fact that a summary had been filed at the same time influenced the committee to the conclusion that it might be best, in order to save expense, to limit the printing to the summary. But an investigation and a partial study of the report which demonstrated its outstanding value to every section of the country, and, in addition to that, the hundreds of requests that have come in for copies, influenced the committee unanimously to appoint a subcommittee for the purpose of investigating the advisability of recommending the printing of the entire report in the usual number, as provided by statute, which has been done. That was the unanimous finding of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. President, Public Resolution No. 61, Seventy-fourth Congress, directed the Federal Trade Commission to investigate agricultural income, the distribution of the consumer's dollar for farm products, raw and processed, and other subjects pertinent thereto, including growth of monopolistic control of the purchasing, handling, and sale of such products, and what factor the cooperatives have been therein.

When the Congress passed that resolution on August 27, 1935, it did a splendid thing. The Federal Trade Commission's report in response thereto was filed with the Congress on March 2, 1937, with a supplemental report on certain phases yet to follow. I am informed that the supplemental report covering fruits and vegetables will be ready within the next few days.

The report is of necessity a long one, yet it is one of the most important reports that has come to Congress recently. As it affects the farmers and consumers of all sections of our country, it is as important as was the Commission's great utilities investigation to all users of electric light and power and of gas. Yet if this report is merely to be allowed to repose in the archives of Congress, its value will be entirely lost. I venture to hope that it shall not be thus forgotten and its value nullified. It is not my purpose or expectation to exhaust its possibilities. For example, the report contains important conclusions and recommendations as to cotton. This I shall leave for those more familiar with the problem than am I. But there are certain facts stated, conclusions reached, and suggestions made as to matters, some of which vitally affect the entire public and others which relate to agriculture generally, and still other parts which refer to those agricultural problems with which I believe I am somewhat familiar. The report contains a mass of information, coupled with sound recommendations, that must not be allowed to be filed away and forgotten.

The report contains several well-considered recommendations for legislation, at least one for a further important investigation, as well as a number of statements touching possible remedial action. It also mentions several matters as to which the Congress should have further specific information, not only from the Federal Trade Commission but also the Department of Justice and the Department of Agriculture.

The basically vital nature of what is under consideration is thus stated in the opening sentence of the Commission's conclusions. I quote:

> The Commission records with dismay its belief that the survival of independent farming by farmers who own their own farms and maintain an American standard of living is in jeopardy.

I commend for reading the assembly and array of data supporting this conclusion. It is convincing. And I dare say it may come as a shock to any who have regarded the farm and farmer's problems as something involving largely only complaints by the overquerulous.

LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

Let me first take up matters that call for consideration as to legislation.

First, the report states:

> The absence of any prohibition in section 7 of the Clayton Act with respect to acquiring the assets of a competing corporation is also an obvious obstacle to preventing the growth of monopolistic combinations.

This is specific. The matter heretofore has been called to the attention of the Congress at various times. A careful inquiry discloses no proposal now pending to remedy this situation. In my judgment, the time for action has come.

We of the Middle West well know some of the chief motivating factors which caused the passage of the Clayton Act. One was the local discriminations by the oil companies and line elevators and lumber yards against independents until such independents were practically down and out, when they were purchased, if there was anything left worth buying, by such monopolistic groups or chains.

But the Clayton Act struck only at capital-stock acquisitions. So it did not take lawyers long to discover the opening—big enough to drive a convoy of trucks through—that all their clients had to do in order to evade the act and escape its penalty was to acquire the assets—lock, stock, and barrel. This was easy, either directly or, once a controlling stock interest was in hand, and even though the control had been acquired contrary to the provisions of the Clayton Act, if by means of such control, so acquired, the assets were then quickly and completely acquired, the courts have held the units cannot be separated, and the remedy fails. In other words, though the first step is illegal, whenever it is followed by another step, which the illegal action has made possible, then the whole becomes immune. Whatever we may think of such reasoning, that is the exact situation which cries for remedy. The Commission states that it has "previously recommended repeatedly" amendment to cure this anomalous and intolerable situation.

Justice Brandeis, in December 1926, in a short dissent, joined in by Chief Justice Taft and Justices Holmes and Stone, from the opinion of the majority delivered by Justice McReynolds in Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (272 U. S. 554, 563), called attention to this anomalous situation. Justice Brandeis concluded that, although the institution of a proceeding by the Federal Trade Commission did not operate as an injunction against such use of stock control, when it was held in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Commission presumably had power, as a part of its order, to direct divestment of assets acquired after the proceedings had been instituted. He then concluded that because the purpose of the law was to remedy the peculiar evils resulting, there was no reason why the Commission's power should not permit remedy, even when such acquisition through the illegally held stock control had occurred before the proceeding had been instituted. Thus Justice Brandeis pointed out clearly the need of amendment; for, of course, that dissent is not the law as declared by the majority of the Supreme Court.

In March 1934 the Supreme Court, by a majority of one, went a step further in immunizing those who had violated section 7 of the Clayton Act. In the case of Arrow-Hart & Hegeman v. Federal Trade Commission (291 U. S. 587) the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit was reversed and the Commission's power to enforce effective remedy under the Clayton Act was defeated by corporate action after the Commission proceeding was commenced and while it was pending. By the device of distributing the illegally held shares to the stockholders, and then combining or merging the assets, the evasion and immunization were successfully accomplished, according to the majority of the Supreme Court. But the minority thought otherwise, and spoke forcibly. Justice Stone, with whom Chief Justice Hughes, Justices Brandeis and Cardozo concurred, used this language (pp. 599 and 600):

> It is now declared that, however gross the violation of the Clayton Act, however flagrant the flouting of the Commission's authority, the celerity of the offender in ridding itself of the stock before the Commission could complete its hearings and make an order restoring the independence of the competitors leaves the Commission powerless to act against the merged corporation.

While court decisions have whittled away other parts of the Clayton Act, I believe that the Congress itself must accept part of the blame for neglecting this specific thing.

I am not willing, however, to let the present Congress and its two predecessor Congresses take the blame for the depression into which agriculture has fallen. The very definite plunge was taken in 1921, when Mr. Andrew Mellon, either with purpose or without knowledge of the time required for farm turn-overs, compelled the calling of 50 percent of farm loans within 90 days—a sudden and heinous deflation which wrecked many farmers and rural banks, following, as it did, so closely upon the overexpansion of farming, which had resulted from their patriotic response to the wartime demand that they borrow and grow crops until it hurt.

The remedy in this specific matter has, however, already been too long delayed, and now we have its effect again squarely put up to us—this time, as it affects the whole agricultural situation. I hope and believe the present Congress will be responsive to such needed amendment. I have prepared and shall offer a bill, which I believe will go far in remedying that omission.

Mr. President, I next want to speak of the grain elevator situation. Here again we come upon a powerful factor of long standing in its adverse effect upon agriculture.

As I have already stated, the situation as to the monopolistic line elevators was one of the considerations that led to the enactment of the Clayton Act. I have referred to one cause of its ineffectiveness. Let me now quote what the Federal Trade Commission says about the control of those bottle necks or gateways through which practically all the farmers' merchantable crops do and must pass, viz: the terminal elevators, and the uneconomic effect of their present control upon the grain-growing farmers. After saying that due to "more adequate supervision of the grain exchanges following an earlier and very thorough investigation of the grain trade, many of the old evils have been considerably abated", the Commission states:

> One aspect of the situation, previously criticized by this Commission, remains as a sore spot on the grain trade, namely, the leased terminal elevators in central markets belonging to the railroads, particularly in Chicago. The futures contract for grain on the Chicago Board of Trade stipulates delivery of grain in Chicago. The control of terminal elevators at low rentals by large grain merchandisers and speculators gives them an undue competitive advantage in handling cash grain and in making delivery on futures contracts. These factors have favored manipulative squeezes and corners and often forced an uneconomic movement of grain to Chicago in order to make delivery.
> The present concentration of control of terminal grain elevators is even greater than formerly. The rentals received by the railroads for their elevators are often so low as not to cover even taxes, insurance, and maintenance, with nothing for depreciation.
> There have been several recent instances where these unhealthy conditions have resulted in a marked disturbance of the grain trade, affecting not only the futures in the speculative grain market, but also the price of cash grain.

Coming to its recommendations, the Commission quotes the recommendation in its earliest grain trade report, and already repeated it in substance twice since then. The first report used this language:

> "A possible remedy for the existing situation is to make it practicable for grain dealers not operating elevators to store grain in public elevators in competition with the big elevator merchandisers. * * *" and that "The railroads might be required to operate elevators for the convenience of their shippers; or the government, presumably the State government, might operate storage elevators at rates sufficiently low to permit dealers without elevators to compete with the elevator merchandisers. * * *"; and further that "The restoration of a normal situation as regards the use of public storage in the grain trade would apparently be so generally beneficial to the trade and to the public as to justify appropriate legislation."

In the present report the Commission now says:

> After the lapse of many years, there has been little or no improvement in the situations which led to the foregoing recommendations. Brokers and commission men are still both agents and principals. Exchange rules concerning defaults are still applied by exchange officials. Squeezes may still arise under the rules for delivery of grain in futures contracts. The warehouse storage situation is apparently worse today than at the time of the Commission's previous recommendations.
> This all points to the conclusion that the correction of these conditions cannot be left to the grain trade itself. In order, therefore, to correct the situation, the Commission is of the opinion that Federal legislation should be adopted providing for the following things:
> 1. That all deliveries of grain on futures contracts shall be made from public warehouses:
> (a) Licensed by Federal authority;
> (b) Subject to Federal regulation;
> (c) Not owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly by any person, firm, or any other organization directly or indirectly dealing in grain.
> 2. That all deliveries of grain on any futures contracts shall be subject to:
> (a) Federal grading and inspection;
> (b) Federal regulation of the delivery of grain on such contracts.
> 3. That the storage charges for grain in public warehouses from which grain is deliverable on futures contracts as aforesaid shall be regulated by the Federal authority.
> 4. That every futures contract for grain on any futures market may be satisfied by the delivery of grain from any public warehouse operating in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of these recommendations in not less than one market in addition to the market on which such contract is made, such outside market or markets to be determined in the discretion of the Federal authority.
> 5. That the railroads shall be required to operate all elevators owned or controlled by them either directly or indirectly as public elevators at rates regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission subject to the proviso that in the event any such railroad desires to operate any one or more of its elevators as a public elevator from which grain is deliverable on futures contracts, such charges shall be prescribed by the Federal authority administering the other provisions suggested above.
> 6. That brokers, commission men, officers, and large stockholders of companies doing a brokerage or commission business in futures for customers shall be prohibited from speculating in grain futures for their own account.
> 7. That the car delivery rules and the settlement rule for defaulted futures contracts on the grain exchanges shall be interpreted and applied by an impartial person or tribunal.
> If the recommendations herein do not suffice to restore competitive conditions in the grain trade and eliminate the control of the large terminal elevator operators, the only alternative would appear to be to operate all elevator capacity by public authority as was stated in the Commission's previous reports.

How long must the farmers suffer from such uneconomic practices and abuses? Here we have an outstanding and impartial governmental body, at our request and at public expense, reporting the facts to us, telling us of the abuses and their widespread and harmful results, and suggesting definite remedies; yet, up to now, concerning this vicious system of close control of grain terminal elevators and the siphoning off of moneys from the great standard food and feed crops, we have merely received such repeated disclosures and recommendations and consigned them to the dusty archives. Let us hope they may soon accumulate enough dust to cause a dust explosion which will blow the whole elevator situation wide open and keep it on the front page long enough to bring needed action from the Congress. If some other Member of this body more competent or experienced does not do so, I propose to have drafted and shall introduce one or more bills designed to terminate such close control and the unfair advantages and evils that have resulted therefrom.

FURTHER INVESTIGATIONS

No one goes very far in a study of the agricultural situation before he comes squarely up against these three propositions:

First. The actual producer of our food products receives too little of the dollar which we all must pay when we must eat.

Second. On the other hand, the consumer's dollar should buy more.

Third. The basic causes of both conditions are the same.

It was to give the Congress light and facts primarily on these three points that the resolution I am discussing was passed. The report of the Federal Trade Commission affords ample support to all three statements.

But by its limitations in time and money the Commission could not go sufficiently into one important factor, which many of us think may be a solution, or at least a substantial aid to the abolition of some of these adverse discrepancies and undue spreads of price. I refer to the cooperatives.

Although the report shows the volume and something of the character and method and results of their business the Commission states:

> The report gives a summary view of the growth of farmers' cooperatives for various kinds of farm products, including efforts to establish some system of orderly marketing.
>
> The evaluation of the financial benefits to the farmer, apart from the fundamental advantage of not being at the mercy of a few overpowerful buyers, was too large a subject for the Commission to attempt in the brief time allowed for the preparation of this report, but adequate information of this sort is of great importance for the proper guidance of the farmer.

For one, I should like to see such evaluation of cooperatives made. Until the Congress has that information and the considered conclusion drawn from the facts, we are not in a position properly and wisely to legislate on the subject.

I am having prepared and hope soon to offer a resolution designed to carry out that specific recommendation.

While this investigation has touched on and made some recommendations as to grain commission men, the general commission business has a far wider impact on and importance to agriculture than that part handled by the grain commission houses. Of the consumer's dollar paid for agricultural products in the United States much less than one-half goes to the producing farmer, whereas in some European countries the producer receives 70 percent or even more of what the consumer finally has to pay. This means that, after all due allowances for transportation and other actual marketing expenses, some intervening interests are taking more than a fair return for services performed, if any.

Since about 1921 each Secretary of Agriculture, beginning with the father of the present Secretary, has, shortly after taking office issued a statement clearly recognizing this discrepancy of prices and flaws in the marketing procedure. But, unfortunately, the record is silent as to whether any Secretary of Agriculture, after his early vigorous proposal to investigate and act, has again taken definite steps for a comprehensive solution.

In this unfortunate situation the commission men undoubtedly play a large part. Therefore, in connection with the further investigation proposed as to cooperatives, there should be included a full investigation of the activities of the middlemen who deal in agricultural products, including especially perishables. I do not refer to necessary services and charges by commission men but to wasteful and, in many cases, racketeering charges. The resolution which I shall offer will include these matters.

CONTROL OF PROCESSING

But in addition to the commission men there are factors of close monopolistic control of the final processing of farm products which make possible a continuance of the unconscionable spread between producer and consumer prices; and for this the failure to put teeth into the Clayton Act, as I have shown, must in part be responsible.

The report sets out in considerable detail how agricultural income in various great staples was deflated to below-cost levels. It also shows that coincidentally the same situation appeared in certain processing and related business; but, I quote—

> On the other hand, some of the groups showed greater gains in parts of this period than in 1929, especially cotton middlemen, snuff manufacturers, and certain general tobacco manufacturers of medium size.

The report is especially valuable in showing into how few hands has come the bottle-neck control of vital processings of farm crops.

I cite only a few:

Three principal tobacco manufacturers in 1934 bought the equivalent of 46.2 percent of the tobacco crop. Taking out the one-third bought through other channels for export, the domestic control by those three rises approximately to 70 percent.

Flour-milling was once a numerous and widely scattered local industry, sung in poetry as to mill-wheel, mill-dams, and dusty millers. No longer is this so. The old stone mill and its idle wheel now survive chiefly as rehabilitated roadhouses for the seekers of good cheer.

In 1934, 13 flour-milling companies purchased in quantity the equal of 65.2 percent of the commercial crop of wheat. Of this crop, 3 of the 13 took 38.4 percent; and of the three, General Mills equaled the next two; namely, Pillsbury and Colorado Milling.

In livestock, for 1934, three packing companies bought 40.8 percent of the cattle and veal calves, and 25.3 percent of the hogs; and the two largest meat packers, Swift and Armour, also ranked third and fourth in handling milk products.

Such control over our food cannot be in the public interest. How this and other control over farm products and their processing and distribution has been obtained is thus summarized in the report:

> The method by which such extensive control was obtained is set forth briefly in this report. It is to a large extent the history of the well-known combinations or trusts, among which those in tobacco and in meat are the best known among agricultural products. In most cases this wide degree of control has resulted from the purchase of stock control of other companies in the same field of production—largely of competitors—or from buying up the properties of competitors and merging them with those of the buyer, or from combinations of competitors through the formation of holding companies or mergers.
> Sometimes these practices were facilitated by unfair methods of competition, or were preceded by price-fixing conspiracies, etc. The history of the great meat packers especially is characterized by a variety of unfair devices, such as railroad rebates, controlling the stockyards, and combining for the purchase of livestock by alloting the quantities to be purchased and thus keeping down the prices. In the sale of their meat products, agreements on selling prices, the possession of private car lines, and great chains of branch houses have helped in giving them the advantage over competing companies.
> Against many of these combinations or monopolies, the Federal Government has instituted numerous suits with varying degrees of success.

As to whether these suits have been "numerous", or have struck at the real danger spots, opinions may differ; but we can all agree that whatever success has been attained has indeed been of a "varying degree."

It is with renewed hope that I have read of the Attorney General's proposal for an active campaign against these monopolies, even to a restatement of the whole antitrust law structure, if that shall be determined to be necessary. As already stated, it is clear that one such necessity exists to forbid acquisition of assets by competing concerns, in order to prevent further progress in these giant mergers.

NEED FOR CURRENT KNOWLEDGE

It was to be hoped that the report would demonstrate historically and conclusively how underbalanced and disproportionate agricultural income has always been as compared to industrial income. While it is true as a matter of common knowledge that in comparison with other business and industrial income, whether based on the number of persons employed or on the basis of plant and capital used, agricultural income has at all times been unduly deficient, both the difficulty and the value of acquiring accurate comprehensive figures for comparative statistics are thus reported by the Commission, with its suggestions for action under the authority already contained in its act, if funds are provided. Too often have large tasks been delegated to the Commission without the needed funds. I present its suggestion in this important matter for the serious consideration of the Congress:

Unbalanced relations between industry and agriculture: Corporation Reports: It is implied in the terms of the resolution under which this inquiry is conducted, and it is a frequent complaint, that the industrial and commercial corporations are unduly enriching themselves at the expense of the agricultural population, but the facts which are adduced are generally of a sporadic nature about individual companies because the information readily available is not sufficiently comprehensive, up-to-date, and reliable as an indication of the general situation. There is a fundamental economic need of adequate information on this subject to which this Commission has from time to time called attention. It is only because of the lack of sufficient funds that the Commission has not already provided such information. This Commission has statutory authority to collect such information if appropriation were made for that purpose. This Commission is specifically authorized under section 6, paragraph (b), of its organic act, to require annual and special reports from corporations engaged in interstate commerce, excluding certain classes, such as banks and common carriers.

Although a part of the instability of agriculture is due to peculiarities of agricultural production as such, a part is also due to the instabilities of industry, and insofar as these suggested reports would promote industrial stability, they should redound also to the benefit of agriculture.

The Commission here squarely calls to the attention of Congress a most powerful and useful function which Congress granted to it, but which has too long been allowed to remain in disuse. Continuation of past sins of omission in supplying the needed funds will, however, be no atonement for us of the Congress. I plead for funds and action that shall give to Congress the adequate and current information needed to enable us properly to legislate from time to time for agriculture. If the Trade Commission is given funds to keep current such information as to processing corporations, such information can then be set over against the farm statistics gathered by the Department of Agriculture, so that Congress may at all times have the needed comparative facts.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD STUDIES

Speaking from an outside and entirely different angle and interest, the May 1936 report (No. 224) of the National Industrial Conference Board affords striking confirmatory evidence of the vital nature of the problems of agriculture. For that reason I want to digress briefly to bring its views to the attention of the Senate.

Please have in mind that the purpose of that Board has been "to draw the serious attention of industrial management to the situation of American agriculture." Its approach, then, is clearly from the industrial angle, and not from the farmers' angle. Whatever is said cannot, then, be special pleading by a direct party in interest. The reports may, then, properly be characterized as impartial reports of outsiders.

The Board's first report on agriculture was published in 1936. In the 1936 report, referring to its earliest reports, the Board says:

The problems they considered remain, and the need on the part of industry and business for understanding them and assisting in their solution is more imperative than ever.

The opening paragraph of the summary of the present report is in these words:

The prosperity of agriculture is vital to the life of the Nation, both for the large rural portion of the population and for the business groups which serve it. The challenge for both human advancement and business expansion is so great in this field that every possibility for permanent improvement deserves the careful consideration of all groups.

Under the first subchapter heading appears the following:

With an available farm productive capacity far in excess of the salable output, and confronted with new and highly desirable products of industry clamoring for customers, the farmers are restless when their sales bring them an income far below what is required to purchase their urgent wants. With abundance pressing on every hand, it is difficult to be contented with scarcity. Naturally, all programs which promise to break the deadlock in the distribution of this abundance receive at least a ready hearing from the farm population. At the same time the chief concern of the industrialists who have products to sell to the farms is that proposed measures to increase farm income should be effective.

Further on is quoted and commented on with approval the following from an Iowa farmer:

We must get the operation of our farms into the hands of owners, even if it takes two generations to pay for them. Long-term credits are essential and can be made on a sound basis.

The opportunity to establish a larger farm population is of national significance from a social as well as an economic point of view and calls for careful consideration and wise leadership.

The conclusion of chapter I indicates clearly the importance of a proper solution of the agricultural problem of the Nation:

The establishment and maintenance of the greatest possible number of self-providing family farms, family owned and family operated, will go far toward making possible the realization of a self-acquired economic and social security for the farmer and increased national prosperity.

Under the subheading, Income in Agriculture, I quote the following:

Progress in material welfare is dependent upon increase of the incomes of individuals, due allowance being made for price-level changes. The incomes of farmers and many other elements of the population are, and have been, too low in relation to the standards of living toward which our economic progress thus far has tended. Any adequately founded increase would be in the national interest.

On page 44 of this report is a most illuminating chart reproduced from a report of the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which I have caused to be enlarged so that Senators may see it. No chart could more graphically prove the point that over any considerable period the income of the industrial worker and of the farmer run through the same general course in prosperity and depression. Their welfare goes down and up together. There is, however, one marked difference in their course to which I wish to call attention, and that is this: While the average of the farmer's income is practically the same during any period of a year or more, such income is naturally subject to more violent fluctuations than the income of industrial workers, where the income is, generally speaking, from pay rolls rather than from crops and products marketed as they mature or are otherwise ready for market.

As a closing reference to this report I want to emphasize the conclusion of the Board on the curtailment of agricultural output. At page 45 of the report they reach this conclusion, based upon the charts and figures of the Department of Agriculture itself:

The charts and figures of the Department of Agriculture do show, however, that when all farm products are taken together under practical market conditions, reduction of gross output in the last decade has been of no help to the total farm income.

FARMER COOPERATIVES

Chapter 9 of this report deals with farmers' cooperatives, pages 1366 to 1720. It sketches briefly earlier efforts in this country. It then also briefly describes the deflationary period which followed the overequipment and overexpansion to meet food needs of the World War. This ensuing and sudden deflation focused attention upon any method that seemed likely to cushion and stay this calamitous situation, from which agriculture has not yet recovered. From the controlled group situation in most other industries, the enforced conclusion was that agriculture must, in self-defense, come together to prevent almost universal farm bankruptcy. Such united efforts, sporadic as they were, have historically, both in Europe and in this country, been called cooperatives. Therefore, all of them are now so designated, regardless of their variations in form and specific objectives.

Originally there were few differences between the early form and objectives of business corporations and cooperatives. The principal difference was in numerical membership. Each was primarily for the advantage of its membership; but cooperatives comprehended a much wider or general commodity or particular product or production-industry membership, as against a rather limited and close financial combination in the ordinary business or industrial corporation. With participants so numerous and widely scattered as in the various types of agriculture, their organizations had to take the cooperative form to hope to be of any substantial value.

I have diverted to indicate this similarity in order to direct attention to and demonstrate the spurious character of the over-adverse propaganda against every form of cooperatives that has recently become so active. This propaganda, as Senators probably are all aware, has even gone to the extent of charging that these very necessary unions of agricultural interests have in them some sinister foreign influence. Nothing can be more ridiculous. They merely and actually represent logical and necessary efforts by agriculture to approach an economic balance with the closer controlled and highly financed corporate combinations in other businesses and industries. The adverse propaganda against cooperatives is then, in plain English, nothing but the efforts of such combined corporate interests to prevent any united efforts by the vast hitherto unorganized agricultural industry. It is nothing but the reassertion of the history-old maxim of attempting to keep divided any force that if united might be able to acquire and assert its just right and due. Presumably such efforts were, to some extent, factors in the none too straight course which these farm cooperatives have been compelled to travel, as the report shows. Nor does it require the wisdom of Solomon to know why this is. All the profiteering groups of speculators, brokers, and middlemen whose business and margins were threatened by the cooperatives were natural and active opponents. It must be admitted, however, that in addition there was the incompetence, or worse, that always insinuates itself into such new movements. But such sporadic lapses and back-sets cannot condemn the cooperative system, lessen its need, or block its progress toward general ultimate usefulness and success. Especially among farmers, the pioneer spirit still lives; and it is of the essence of that spirit that whatever obstacles are encountered will be surmounted.

Into this picture much more slowly than is desirable, and with certain to be expected sporadic back-sets, have moved forward, and I trust will move forward with an accelerated speed, these farm cooperatives, with the result that for the 1934–35 marketing season the total volume of business of farmers' cooperative selling associations has been estimated at over one and one-third billion dollars. The farmers' purchasing associations, on the other hand, reached a total for the same period of only approximately $187,000. This one and one-half billion dollars of selling and buying represented slightly over 10,000 associations with a membership of just over three and one-fourth million. Of the less than 9,000 selling associations, just over 6,000 are in the east and west North Central States. This 70 percent of the total number of associations, however, did only approximately 51 percent of the cooperative selling business. This is understandable when it is borne in mind that certain of the other cooperatives dealt in the higher-priced fruit crops, and so forth.

VALUE OF COOPERATIVES

Those of us who live in the great agricultural States know that after the farmer has passed the risk of drought or flood and pests, and has put his crop in his crib and granary, he is still far from immunity from speculative risk. At this point he is up against the uneconomic grain exchange and other speculators from the outside. He is up against his own urgent need of funds long delayed while growing and harvesting his crop.

These inside and outside exigencies are entirely beyond the ability of the average farmer to cope with. Here, then, is where the united strength of the cooperative enters. If it functions properly, it can resist the seasonal depressant speculative price at harvest times and properly spread the marketing. By the same functioning it enables farmers, either individually or as a part of a group, to keep title to their crops for the higher prices that must follow as the rush supply decreases and the normal demand increases. Nothing irks more than the loose talk so often heard by those who do not know, or do not want to know, about the farmer being well off when some time during the late winter and spring the prices of his products have reached a profitable level. Those who make such statements, often with ill-concealed sneering, entirely overlook the fact that in their individual unassociated situations a great majority of those farmers who need it most have long since had to dispose of their crops at the earlier prevailing low prices, with the result that such later increases not only do not benefit the farmer at all but harm him to the extent that such increases of farm products are reflected also in many of the things which he must purchase. How vitally this condition affects and perpetuates the sharecropper's situation has been graphically stated by the exhaustive surveys and reports recently made.

It follows, then, as day follows night, that cooperatives as universal as the farm industry and those engaged therein represent the most likely solution of at last bringing to something like an economic balance the great agricultural industry and population.

Although we have learned and are learning something of the need and the value of farm cooperatives, and though much is told in this report, the Commission itself has emphasized the need of a definite further study to evaluate fully the cooperatives. Considering the basic nature of the industry which provides our food and the material for much of our clothing, I heartily endorse that recommendation, and again, if other Members do not do so, shall accordingly take steps to have drawn and present a proper resolution to carry that work forward.

Mr. President, I do not desire to consume any more of the time of the Senate. The remarks I have made, as I warned at the outset, are tedious to listen to, but they are extremely important.

Perhaps I have consumed more of the time of the Senate than I should in this all-to-summarized statement of certain factors that seem to me so vital to our national welfare. If there be those who feel so, let me justify myself by reminding them of two propositions:

First, the whole course of the world's history shows that the downfall of any nation has not been far behind the destruction of its free and prosperous agrarian population.

Second, let those in other industries and businesses realize that they can have no permanent prosperity without the more than backlog of prosperous farmers. The tie-up is complete. Their routes may temporarily detour, but the general direction of their courses are parallel, and their objectives have to be identical. How aberrant is any other philosophy.

In that connection, I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to the chart on the rear wall of the Senate Chamber, which I will leave here today in case Senators care to see it. The particular thing to which I wish to direct attention is the matter just referred to—the parallel nature of the income of industry and farming, following almost identical lines, but farm income in the heavy marking showing violent fluctuations year in and year out, up and down, while it follows the general level.

Further, I wish Senators would note the fact that the high point in agricultural income occurs during the season of the year when the farmer has not anything to sell. That is the high point. By the time the farmer's marketing season rolls around it is the low point, where there is no business in farming or anything else. Mr. President, agriculture cannot continue under a situation of that kind.

In all earnestness I desire that the proposals advanced shall not be regarded as mere gestures. I am well aware that they cannot be accomplished in a moment, and the road may be long and difficult. By the same token, however, I am pledging myself, as one Senator, to follow through, regardless of the time required. When we have asked a commission of this kind to spend months upon months in careful investigation and to spend around $150,000 of public money to secure the facts, and when the Commission has made its report with recommendations carefully thought out, carefully studied, and carefully presented, it seems to me the Congress of the United States would do well, out of consideration for the interests of the great agricultural industry, to give at least some consideration to the recommendations so made. I believe each of the recommendations has an important bearing on the future of agriculture.

INFLUENCE OF MONOPOLY ON AGRICULTURE AND FARM PRICES

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the interesting remarks made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] encourage me to say something upon the subject he has been discussing. That is the question of monopoly, and the influence of monopoly upon farm prices as well as upon all other prices in the United States.

My purpose to discuss this subject has been encouraged also by the address made by Robert Jackson before the Bar Association of Georgia on the subject of monopoly. I understand Mr. Jackson has been assigned by the Department of Justice to make a special study and consideration of antimonopoly and antitrust laws with a view to prosecutions under them; and from the address he has made I infer that he has given earnest and serious consideration to the whole subject.

In the address Mr. Jackson makes this statement:

> Concentration of ownership and control of American industry was never greater than today.

That is an extraordinary statement, and yet I think it is absolutely correct. I do not believe it is an overstatement. We know what the concentration of wealth in this country was in 1929. We ought to know what the effect of monoply was in bringing on the depression which followed. But after 6 or 7 years of the depression it is in the nature of a warning to be advised by Mr. Jackson that the concentration of ownership and control of American industry was never so great as at the present time. The evils of concentration are evident. It stands in the way of recovery, as recovery affects the great body of the people. It destroys the small competitor and adds to unemployment. It pushes up prices artificially and oppresses the poor and undermines purchasing power of the masses.

Again, Mr. Jackson says that at the end of this long road we read, like an epitaph, the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that—

> No one can state authoritatively what our national policy is—

With reference to the subject of monopoly.

Mr. President, notwithstanding other questions of great moment press for attention, we ought to give consideration to the question which is raised by the statement made by the able Assistant Attorney General. First, that this concentration of wealth is constantly increasing. Secondly, that no policy has been announced as to how we may deal with the subject.

The matter came up, incidentally, the other day in discussion and the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the majority leader, indicated his desire to see the subject properly considered as soon as we could appropriately do so. There is scarcely a subject with which we are dealing in this Congress which is not affected by, and the success of which does not depend upon, the consideration and effective treatment of the question which I am now discussing.

Two bills dealing with this subject have been introduced in the Senate, one by the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the other by myself. There is really no conflict in the objectives of the two bills. In my opinion, they present the most effective remedy for the treatment of monopoly. The laws which we now have upon the statute books will always be helpful but if we are to have an effective national policy, I am firmly of the opinion that we must deal with the subject of monopoly through the regulations of the channels of interstate trade.

Monopoly has no more right to use the channels of interstate commerce for the purpose of effectuating price control, or the destruction of small industries, than the automobile thief, for instance, has the right to use the channels of interstate trade to effectuate his wrongful purpose. If you can say to the citizen you may not transport property from State to State in order to consummate a crime, you can say to a corporation, you shall not transport property or commodities from State to State to accomplish a purpose hurtful to society or contrary to national policy. Congress has a right to say to a corporation, you can use the channels of interstate trade upon such terms and conditions as conform to the public interest and upon no other terms. It seems to me axiomatic that Congress, through the power to regulate interstate commerce, may require those carrying on such commerce to desist from all practices calculated to work harm to the people or in contravention to the public interest.

By the labor bill which is before a committee of the Senate, it is proposed that the manufacturer who employs child labor shall not have the advantage of the channels of interstate trade in which to ship or transport his goods. Upon what theory? Not upon the theory that the goods created by the effort of the child working are inherently defective, or in any respect are objectionable as commodities, but for the reason that we do not propose that the channels of trade shall be open to the exploitation of child labor in the United States, that those exploiting children shall not have the means which the Government provides for the transportation of articles or commodities across State lines at their disposal if they indulge in practices which are contrary to what we deem to be sound national policy or the national welfare.

I think that is a sound proposition of law. I am aware that in a 5-to-4 decision the Supreme Court at one time held on the facts of that particular case a different view, but I am convinced that in the light of some three or four opinions upon this subject since rendered, there can scarcely be any doubt that Congress has a right to exclude from the channels of interstate trade any commodity the shipment of which works to the injury of the community or of the Nation, or which is inimical to the general welfare of the country.

I assume there is no doubt that the Congress has the same control over interstate commerce that the State has over intrastate commerce, and if it becomes necessary, for the purpose of effectuating a sound police policy with reference to the channels of interstate trade, Congress has the same right to put into operation such a policy through the enactment of law as the State would have with reference to intrastate matters.

Mr. Jackson, in testifying before the Committee on Education and Labor on this matter, stated:

> There is the power directly to regulate or prohibit movement across State lines of goods deemed for any reason to offend against sound national policy.

That is the principle upon which the entire labor bill is based, that the Congress has power to prohibit the shipment across State lines of commodities produced under conditions which are deemed to be contrary to a sound national policy. I take no issue with that proposition, but I do say that if it is possible to exclude from the channels of interstate trade commodities which have been manufactured through the efforts of children, or commodities which have been manufactured by those receiving a wage below what we deem to be a fair minimum wage—if commodities can be excluded from the channels of interstate trade upon that principle, commodities can be excluded from the channels of interstate trade which are manufactured in violation of the laws of the United States, or are shipped to the detriment or injury of independent producers or independent manufacturers, or to the detriment of the consumers of the United States.

If a manufacturing establishment is operating under the auspices of monopolistic control and is fixing prices, contrary to the law of the United States, or contrary to the sound policy announced by the United States, is there any reason why the Government of the United States should permit that establishment to use the channels of interstate trade to effectuate its policies or its purposes? In my opinion, we can in the bill which is now pending, by a comparatively brief amendment, exclude from the channels of interstate trade the products of monopolistic manufacture. We can police the channels of interstate commerce and exclude therefrom all wrongdoing and deny them to all who seek to use them to achieve a purpose injurious to the people of the United States.

Again Mr. Jackson said:

> Products made under condition where workers are denied the right of self-organization by fear of labor spies and where their right to strike and to enforce collective bargaining is rendered ineffective by the use of professional strikebreakers—may be excluded from the channels of interstate trade, purely as a police power, purely as a police regulation, purely for the purpose of preventing the execution of purposes which are supposed to be in contravention of a sound national policy. That is, the shipment of goods which may be manufactured through the efforts of those working at a wage below what is considered a reasonable minimum wage, or goods which are manufactured by reason of the efforts of children working upon the goods, is not prohibited because of any defect in the goods because they were produced by that kind of labor; it is because the Government desires to take from those who are engaged in such wrongful practices the advantage of interstate trade or interstate shipment.

Mr. Jackson said further:

> As pointed out by Prof. Thomas Reed Powell, of the Harvard Law School, and by other students of constitutional law, since Congress has the power to regulate conditions of competition as it has done through the antitrust acts, it may, likewise, prohibit the securing of a competitive advantage in interstate commerce through the adoption of oppressive and sweatshop labor conditions.

So likewise it may be said that they shall not have the advantage which comes to them by reason of adopting oppressive methods in the business world. We can protect business against oppressive methods, we can protect small business against monopolistic methods as effectually as we can protect labor against oppressive methods, and when we deal with one we are, in fact, dealing with both. What is the advantage of saying to labor this year that the minimum wage shall be so-and-so while over the laborer is the power to fix prices, which may make the minimum wage next year just as oppressive or inadequate as it was before? You cannot prevent the exploitation of labor while you permit the exploitation of the people, for, after all, labor must suffer when the body of the people are without means to buy. What advantage is it to labor to get a few cents more per day when the price of living can be artificially increased to take these few cents and some more? The laborer, the consumer, the producer may secure more dollars but that is a tormenting delusion so long as private interests control practically all the things they must have in order to make life better, and added to the control the power to fix prices.

I read another statement from Mr. Jackson:

> It (Congress) can foster the legitimate and helpful trade as well as stop the unwholesome trade.

I do not take issue with Mr. Jackson at all. If there is any objection to the labor bill, it is not, in my opinion, by reason of the question of power; it is by reason of the question of policy. We can prevent the shipment in interstate commerce of goods which have been manufactured under conditions which we think are hurtful to labor, which we think are hurtful to the children of the country, which we think are in contravention to sound national policy. It is clear to me we can do so.

Having accomplished that aim, can we not further say that those in the business world who are engaged in oppressive measures, competing unfairly with small business, who are fixing prices in contravention of law, or the public interests, shall not have the advantage of interstate trade so long as they are engaged in such enterprises?

The only way by which we can have a national policy on this subject understood and lived up to by all parties is to have it thoroughly embedded in the laws of our country that those who are engaged in interstate trade shall purge themselves of all violation of national law, and shall act in accordance with sound national policy.

There can be no doubt in this day, I presume, that Congress has the power to require that all business engaged in interstate commerce shall come under the corporate authority of the National Government. There can be no doubt that the National Government can write into the charters under which they do business such terms and conditions as the National Government may deem wise. And we can, by erecting over the channels of interstate trade a fair commission, to pass upon monopolistic practices and monopolistic manufacture of articles for shipment in interstate commerce, strip every interstate shipment, of all monopolistic practices. It can be said to the man who seeks to enter the channels of interstate trade, "You must purge yourself of all practices which have been condemned by the law of the land or the declared policy of the Government."

We can go ahead with our prosecutions and with the enforcement of criminal law, but, necessarily, Mr. President, that is of such a nature that we will not secure uniformity of action or uniformity of enforcement, or satisfactory enforcement. My own opinion is that there has never been any real purpose to enforce the law. But if the man engaged in interstate trade is required, before he shall have the advantage of interstate commerce, to comply with certain conditions, there is a policy which is fair to him and fair to the people of the United States as a whole.

We are often told that when we are discussing this question it is in the nature of another attack upon business.

There could not be anything, it would seem to me, more calculated to contribute to sound, successful business in the United States than to have business conducted by fair methods and according to sound principles. Certainly, Mr. President, if we are to have anything in the nature of universal or general success in the business world it is necessary to destroy oppressive methods which are engaged in now by many large business corporations, and that can best be done by laying down a rule which everybody must observe and everybody must follow. It may be that no law can be enforced against monopoly. It may be that we through connivance and cowardice have permitted the growth of a power which can defy all law. I am not ready to admit that. I want to see a law enacted which will bring all parties into the channels of interstate trade on a basis of fair dealing and honest practices. It will go far toward solving this problem—as pressing as it is perilous.

ESTATE OF ELMER W. LAUB, DECEASED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1936) for the relief of the estate of Elmer W. Laub, deceased, which was, on page 2, to strike out all of section 2.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH M. CACACE ET AL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 470) for the relief of Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Clibourne, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

> That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia at Norfolk is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy, of record, the judgment obtained by the United States on November 30, 1934, against Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Cliborne, who are hereby relieved of all liability to the United States for the payment of said judgment, which was entered against them as sureties on the criminal bail bond executed in behalf of John T. Cacace, the latter having failed to appear after he had willfully departed from the jurisdiction without the knowledge, consent, or connivance of said sureties. Said John T. Cacace subsequently voluntarily appeared on December 6, 1934, without cost to the Government, and was sentenced to imprisonment for conspiracy to violate the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act in accordance with his previous conviction of November 24, 1934.

Mr. BYRD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. WALSH) from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Midshipman Wayne M. Brown to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 3d day of June 1937.

Mr. CONNALLY (for Mr. DIETERICH), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Francis T. McDonald, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to be United States attorney for the western district of Michigan, vice Jos. M. Donnelly, resigned.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Capt. John Foxhall Sturman, Jr., for appointment, by transfer, to the Coast Artillery Corps, Field Artillery, with rank from August 1, 1935.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Emily C. Squires to be postmaster at Hampton Bays, N. Y., in place of R. H. Warner. (Incumbent's commission expired Apr. 12, 1936.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

NOMINATIONS OF WEST POINT CADETS GRADUATING IN JUNE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senate Military Affairs Committee at its meeting on June 4, anticipating that the nominations of the 1937 graduates of West Point to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army of the United States would be received at an early date, ordered them to be reported favorably at such time as they should be received by the Senate and referred to the committee. This action was taken by the Military Affairs Committee because of the short time remaining before the West Point graduating exercises to be held on June 12.

These nominations have been received today and have been referred to the committee. I now report them favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs. Inasmuch as only 5 days remain before the graduating exercises on June 12, I ask unanimous consent that the West Point nominations be taken up at this time out of order and confirmed, and that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action. The confirmation of these nominations at this time, and the immediate notification of the President, will permit the War Department authorities to proceed with the vast amount of routine work necessitated in the preparation and issuance of these 298 commissions as second lieutenants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of the 1937 graduates of the Military Academy at West Point to be second lieutenants in the Regular Army of the United States are confirmed and, without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first order of business on the Executive Calendar.

AMENDMENT TO INTERNATIONAL LOAD LINE CONVENTION

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Executive H (75th Cong., 1st sess.), an amendment of Annex II (6) (a) of the International Load Line Convention, signed at London, July 5, 1930.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the pending amendment is to what is known as the Load Line Convention, which was signed at London in 1930. That convention applies to vessels engaged in international voyages. It calls for a survey of such vessels and for their marking with what are known as load lines, which fix the point beyond which vessels may not be safely submerged.

The original treaty recognized that conditions varied at different seasons of the year and in different parts of the oceans of the world, and so it provided for the establishment of zones and seasons, and for the application of different rules for the several zones and seasons. One of the zones established was in the South Pacific, just off the Australian coast, and that was designated as seasonal tropical zone. It happens that in that zone there are many harbors where the depth of water is such that vessels may not be loaded down to the load-line mark, and the practice has been for such vessels to leave that zone and go to a port immediately south of the zone and there complete their cargo loading and their submergence to the permitted point.

Mr. President, the port of Mackay, to which these vessels have gone for such completed loading, is in another zone, and another set of rules as to markings applies there. The purpose of this amendment is to permit the vessels leaving this seasonal tropical zone to go to the port of Mackay, there to load down to their marks as permitted by the rules in the seasonal tropical zone.

The effect of the amendment is to provide that Mackay shall be considered as upon the boundary line of this seasonal tropical zone; to be considered, as a matter of fact, for the purpose of the convention, as 75 miles farther north than it in fact is. The amendment has very little importance to the United States, because relatively few American vessels visit that area and utilize that port.

The amendment was suggested by other nations. It has been approved by our State Department and it has the approval of our Department of Commerce, which has to do with the enforcement of our load-line laws.

Mr. President, I know of no opposition from any source to the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the amendment to the International Load Line Convention, which was read the second time, as follows:

Insert in annex II (6) (a) thereof, after the words "south of latitude 11° S.", the words "Mackay to be considered as being on the boundary of the 'seasonal tropical' and 'summer' zones."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the amendment to the International Load Line Convention will be reported to the Senate.

The amendment to the International Load Line Convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive H, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, the amendment of annex II (6) (a) of the International Load Line Convention, signed at London July 5, 1930.

Mr. WHITE. I move the adoption of the resolution of ratification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the amendment to the convention is ratified.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations in the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia general appropriation bill, secured permission to submit a report this afternoon, anticipating that the Senate probably would finish its labors today before the committee was ready to report. With a view to taking up that bill tomorrow, I am about to move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow. I understand very well that if objection to the consideration of the bill were made, it would have to lie over for a day, but I understand there is no objection in prospect.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, from a parliamentary standpoint, would it be possible to get consent to file the report today?

Mr. ROBINSON. Consent has been given to filing the report today. I shall move a recess instead of an adjournment.

I ask unanimous consent that if the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia general appropriation bill shall report today, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The report on House bill 5996, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, was subsequently submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, as appears on p. 5347 of the RECORD.)

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Their names will be found printed in full on pages 5365–5367 of the Senate proceedings under the title "Nominations."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, today and in the days to come be within our memories and in our hopes. We thank Thee for Thy unwearied care in watching over us. Touch our lives helpfully that they may be gladdened and strengthened for true and patriotic service. We pray Thee to give us clear vision, clear perception, and the impulse of a wise purpose. Once more our hearts are bowed in sorrow. Death again has come into our midst and made short a career of vital usefulness to our country. He gave his best to his generation and a good name was the jewel of his soul. He has heard the call; he entered through the gates where no evil thing can find a home. Uphold and sustain the stricken family, assuage their grief, and comfort their sorrows. We praise Thee that earth's darkness vanishes before the golden floods of sunlight, radiating from the glorified tomb of our Savior. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 4, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 11. Concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works to grant certain applications for non-Federal projects for the construction of schools to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of students.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. I make a point of order with respect to the reference of Senate Joint Resolution 155, to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance. This resolution was referred erroneously, in my judgment, to the Rules Committee. I will read section 35, rule XI:

All proposed action touching the rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

I appreciate the fact that in making this point of order I am making it to the court who made the reference, and I am making this point of order under no misapprehension.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not at present.

Mr. RANKIN. Well, tell us what the resolution is about.

Mr. SNELL. It is the resolution relative to the tax matters that was introduced, I do not know by whom, but the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] brought it up on the floor the other day.

I appreciate the fact that the average investigation resolution goes to the Committee on Rules, because it has been determined that that was simply a change in the rules of the House providing for a new committee to make an investigation; but this Senate Joint Resolution 155 goes much further than any resolution of this kind that has ever come to my attention. This resolution is much more than an investigation; it is just full of legislation. In the first place, it authorizes an appropriation. It places new duties on the Secretary of the Treasury. It provides for the repeal of the law for publicity of income-tax returns under certain circumstances. It allows this committee to create positions, fix compensation, and so forth. It also delegates new authority to the employees of the Department of the Treasury. It is so full of legislation that even the chairman of the Rules Committee himself, under a reservation to object to the immediate consideration of the resolution last week, brought up the question of the legislation contained in the resolution. There are at least five definite legislative proposals in this bill.

As we all know, Rules Committee is not a legislative committee, and it has never been the custom of the House to refer legislative proposals to this committee. If the Chair needs any further proof that this is legislation, I refer to the fact that even the Parliamentarian of the House has placed this Senate Joint Resolution 155 on the Union Calendar, and I expect he did so because it authorized an appropriation of funds out of the Treasury of the United States.

I know the argument will be presented against my point of order that it comes too late, but I maintain it does not come too late. There has been no laches on my part as far as public notice of the reference of the resolution was concerned. I know this resolution was on the floor of the House last week and there was something said about it being referred to the Rules Committee, but I watched the calendar each day, and the first public notice that this was referred to the Rules Committee was in the RECORD of June 3, which came to the office on the morning of June 4, and the House has not been in session for business since that time. Therefore there are no laches on my part as far as the time of making the point of order is concerned.

I have looked over several decisions, and where a decision has been made against the erroneous reference of a bill, the Speaker who has made the decision has always referred to the fact that this bill had been in the hands of the committee for some time and the House had been asleep on the opportunity to raise the question of reference. At this time I make this because this is the first possible time to make a point of order against the reference of this Senate joint resolution. I know it will be argued by the majority that this is along the line of resolutions brought in by myself as chairman of the Rules Committee, but I have examined those references and no resolution sponsored by me was in any way similar in form or purpose to this resolution. This, in reality, is nothing but a legislative proposal. I think it was erroneously referred to the Rules Committee and that the Rules Committee had no jurisdiction whatever over matters of this character.

I ask a ruling from the Chair.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the gentleman at the outset that the reference of House Joint Resolution 155 to the Rules Committee was not sought by the Rules Committee. In fact, the Rules Committee would be perfectly content that some other committee had the honor.

On the 1st of June, as I recall it, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] introduced a House joint resolution, which was referred to the Rules Committee, an identical resolution. Senate Joint Resolution 155 passed the Senate on June 2, and when it came to the House the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] asked unanimous consent to call up the Senate joint resolution. At that time the identical House joint resolution which had been introduced as an individual resolution by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and had no connection with or authorship in the Ways and Means Committee was pending in the Rules Committee. Objection was made to the unanimous-consent request, and on the same day, as I have been informed, Senate Joint Resolution 155 was likewise referred to the Rules Committee.

As I understand it, the primary ground for referring both resolutions was that they proposed an investigation.

The language of Senate Joint Resolution 155 is practically identical with the joint resolution which created the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Executive Branches of the Government and which was likewise referred to the Committee on Rules and reported out by the Rules Committee.

This Senate Joint Resolution 155, not being a privileged matter, because it contains provisions as to expenditures required the reporting of a separate House resolution for its consideration. While the joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 155, is on the Union Calendar, No. 328, the other resolution from the Rules Committee, House Resolution 226, for the consideration of the joint resolution has been placed on the House Calendar, No. 113.

Mr. SNELL. That probably is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The situation is similar to that wherein the Rules Committee reports a resolution for the consideration of any other measure.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I have been as interested in the Rules Committee and have been as jealous of its jurisdiction as any Member of the House for a good many years. Would the gentleman maintain that the Rules Committee would have jurisdiction over matter such as is contained in Senate Joint Resolution 155?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; of course it would not. It would not have jurisdiction over appropriations. That is the only big question that I see.

Mr. SNELL. There is authorization for appropriation, also delegation of authority in the resolution and new duties for the Secretary of the Treasury. It also creates new positions. There are at least five definite subjects of legislation contained in the joint resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As to the delegation of duties to the employees of the Treasury Department, I do not believe that is any different than permitting this joint committee to employ the services of persons connected with those departments. Strictly under the rules, of course, under subsection 35 of rule XI, nothing is said about the Rules Committee having jurisdiction of investigations, but as far as I remember—and I served for at least 8 years under the distinguished chairmanship of the gentleman from

New York [Mr. SNELL]—as far back as I can remember, all of these investigating resolutions went to the Rules Committee. I think that is the basis of referring this resolution, that is based on precedent. It is a custom, a practice, that has grown up in the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's statement, but those were simple investigating resolutions that did not carry matters that were definitely legislative in character. We have argued that on the floor a good many times, and we justified the reference of investigating resolutions to the Rules Committee on the ground that it was a change in the rules of the House and would naturally go to the Rules Committee, but I never favored anything carrying such legislation as there is in this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not believe that a careful analysis of this Senate joint resolution would show that it carries any legislative matter.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman himself so stated on the floor the other day.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not recall making such a statement. The resolution provides that the amounts appropriated for the expense of this committee shall be paid out of the contingent funds of both Houses.

Mr. SNELL. That is an authorization for the Appropriations Committee to make the appropriation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; there is no authorization carried in the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. The Parliamentarian would not have referred this to the Union Calendar had there not been an authorization contained in the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is no authorization for appropriation contained in this resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Why is it on the Union Calendar?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The language referred to was first developed in the joint resolution for the creation of the committee to examine into the executive branch of the Government; the reorganization committee. For the first time there appeared this language:

> Amounts appropriated for the expense of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House.

When this language appeared in this resolution I raised the same question about it. It is not an appropriation; it is not an authorization. The only precedent I ever heard of was in the joint resolution on reorganization. The resolution was not privileged, because on page 2 it authorizes the committee to have such printing and binding done as it sees fit. As the gentleman well knows, ordinarily the Committee on Rules strikes out that language, because it defeats the privilege of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. In line 22, on page 2, it contains the language "to make such expenditures as it deems advisable." This, I should say, was an authorization.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The resolution does contain extraordinary language.

Mr. SNELL. Is it an authorization?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; I do not think it is an authorization because they have not got the money yet.

Mr. SNELL. It is sufficient authorization, however, for the Appropriations Committee to make an appropriation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is questionable because of the extraordinary language used in this resolution. It is not usual, I confess.

Mr. SNELL. It is in the resolution as reported to the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there are few bills of all the thousands that are introduced in the House of Representatives which do not contain material that would warrant their being sent to any one of a number of committees. Some of them carry provisions which come within the jurisdiction of as many as six or eight committees of the House; and, on the other hand, few bills are referred to any committee which do not contain material which, if presented alone, would come within the jurisdiction of some other committee or committees of the House. It naturally follows that decision as to which one of a number of committees having some claim of jurisdiction bills are to be referred is a daily occurrence at the Speaker's table. But the rule followed in such references is that the bill goes to that committee having jurisdiction of the principal objective for which the bill was introduced. The primary purpose of the bill is to secure an investigation, and bills providing for investigations in effect propose changes in the rules, and therefore are referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] raises the point of order that Senate Joint Resolution 155 was improperly referred to the Committee on Rules for consideration by that committee. The gentleman from New York further makes the suggestion that although the Rules Committee had reported this resolution back to the House and that it had gone on the calendar, this is his first opportunity to raise a point of order against the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules.

With reference to that particular phase of the gentleman's statement, section 2113 of volume 7 of Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives, states:

> After a public bill has been reported, it is not in order to raise a question of jurisdiction.

Although it may be true, as stated by the gentleman from New York, that this is his first opportunity to raise that question, in view of the fact the bill has already been reported by the committee to which it was referred, the Chair rules it is too late to raise that question.

On the general proposition raised by the gentleman from New York, the Chair may say this is not a matter of first impression. The question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules over joint resolutions creating joint committees to make investigations was decided by Speaker Longworth on April 1, 1930. On that occasion the gentleman from New York, Mr. SNELL, chairman of the Committee on Rules, reported from that committee House Joint Resolution 251, which authorized the appointment of a commission to be composed of Senators, Representatives, and persons to be appointed by the President. The commission was empowered to study the feasibility of equalizing the burden and to minimize the profits of war.

The report on this joint resolution was referred to the calendar and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

On April 1, 1930, when Mr. SNELL called up the resolution for consideration, Mr. Stafford, of Wisconsin, raised the question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules to consider and report on the matters therein contained. In debating the point of order the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], among other things, stated:

> We propose setting up a special committee to do a special piece of work, and that comes under the general provision of the rules, because it is a change of the rules for a specific purpose. As far as I know, there has never been any decision against it, and I believe it is entirely in accordance with the rules, because we are changing the rules for a specific purpose, namely, setting up a special committee to do a specific piece of work. As far as I know, all the decisions have been to the effect that such matters are privileged to come from the Committee on Rules.

That is the end of the argument made by the gentleman from New York at that time on this particular question.

The Speaker, Mr. Longworth, in deciding the point of order, said:

> It has been the common practice of the present occupant of the chair, and I think of many of his predecessors, to invariably refer bills and joint resolutions which create a joint commission, particularly composed of Members of the House, to the Committee on Rules. There is no other committee to which they could possibly go. It is a change in the rules, insofar as it permits and provides that Members of the House shall serve on the commission which it creates.

It appears to the Chair that the reasoning of the gentleman from New York, enunciated at that time, and the decision of the then Speaker, Mr. Longworth, are sound in principle and in precedent. Acting upon that decision as authority, the Chair overrules the point of order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing in the Appendix a radio speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HOFFMAN.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when the earliest pioneers from Virginia and the Carolinas first migrated to the motherly bosom of Missouri a century and a half ago, each settler brought with him his rifle, his Bible, and his pipe, and was equally proficient in the use of all three. There on the fertile alluvial Mississippi bottoms and the rich loam of the Missouri uplands he found Indian maize yielding corn with cobs of such durable texture and generous proportions that he abandoned the colonial clay and briar bowls of the Old Dominion and adopted the Missouri meerschaum, which has become today the standard of pipe comfort, luxury, simplicity, economy, and enjoyment throughout the world. Whether in London or Shanghai, on San Francisco Bay or the sidewalks of New York, buy a pipe at the nearest tobacconist's, and on the bottom of it you will read "Made in Missouri." Fill it up with the golden flakes of your favorite smoke, preferably old homespun from a Missouri hillside, aged and ripened and mellowed in the top rafters of an ancient log tobacco barn, and it will give you such joy and solace as it is seldom human privilege to enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, I have placed an assortment of this exceptional product of Missouri's soil and industry in the cloak room and shall be glad to have the Members of the House avail themselves of the opportunity to sample one of them. When you get crosswise with life or digestion is bad, when things go wrong and you want to kick the dog, when the wife is critical and your best friends are out of town, tamp down an extra-heavy charge in one of these friendly pipes and light it with a coal from the fireplace, and peace and contentment will attend you like a benediction, cares will vanish in dissolving rings of fragrant blue, and life once more will be worth the living.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. CONNERY submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That there is hereby established the Civilian Conservation Corps, hereinafter called the Corps, for the purpose of providing employment and training for citizenship for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment, and to a limited extent as hereinafter set out, for war veterans and Indians, through the performance of useful public work in connection with the conservation and development of the natural resources of the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions: Provided, That the provisions of this Act shall continue for the period of three years after July 1, 1937, and no longer.

"SEC. 2. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a Director at a salary of $10,000 per annum. The Director shall have complete and final authority in the functioning of the Corps, including the allotment of funds to cooperating Federal departments and agencies, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the President in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purpose of this Act, the Director is authorized to provide for the employment of the Corps and its facilities on works of public interest or utility for the protection, restoration, regeneration, improvement, development, utilization, maintenance, or enjoyment of the natural resources of lands and waters, and the products thereof, including forests, fish and wildlife on lands or interest in lands (including historical or archeological sites), belonging to, or under the jurisdiction or control of, the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions, and the several States: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, authorize the Director to undertake projects on lands belonging to or under the jurisdiction or control of counties, and municipalities, and on lands in private ownership, but only for the purpose of doing thereon such kinds of cooperative work as are or may be provided for by Acts of Congress, including the prevention and control of forest fires, forest tree pests and diseases, soil erosion, and floods: Provided further, That no projects shall be undertaken on lands or interests in lands, other than those belonging to or under the jurisdiction or control of the United States, unless adequate provisions are made by the cooperating agencies for the maintenance, operation, and utilization of such projects after completion.

"SEC. 4. There are hereby transferred to the Corps all enrolled personnel, records, papers, property, funds, and obligations of the Emergency Conservation Work established under the Act of March 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 22), as amended; and the Corps shall take over the institution of the camp exchange heretofore established and maintained, under supervision of the War Department, in connection with and aiding in administration of Civilian Conservation Corps work-camps conducted under the authority of said Act as amended: Provided, That such camp exchange shall not sell to persons not connected with the operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

"SEC. 5. The Director and, under his supervision, the heads of other Federal departments or agencies cooperating in the work of the Corps, are authorized within the limit of the allotments of funds therefor, to appoint such civilian personnel as may be deemed necessary for the efficient and economical discharge of the functions of the Corps, in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations made thereunder, and their compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That the employment of employees of the Emergency Conservation Work and of the cooperating Federal agencies whose compensation is paid from Emergency Conservation Work funds, as of June 30, 1937, and for at least two months prior thereto, may be continued, and such employees who do not have a competitive classified civil-service status appropriate for the positions to be occupied shall be permitted to take an appropriate noncompetitive examination to be given by the Civil Service Commission within a period of ten months and those employees who do not receive an eligible rating as a result of said examination shall be dropped from the rolls not later than June 30, 1938: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to Reserve officers on active duty with the Corps, enrollees of the Corps, or unskilled labor: Provided further, That notwithstanding any contrary provisions of this or any other Act the employment of Indians shall be in accordance with section 12 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984).

"SEC. 6. The President may order Reserve officers of the Army and officers of the Naval and Marine Reserves and warrant officers of the Coast Guard to active duty with the Corps under the provisions of section 37a of the National Defense Act and the Act of February 28, 1925, respectively.

"SEC. 7. The Director is authorized to have enrolled not to exceed three hundred thousand men at any one time, of which not more than thirty thousand may be war veterans: Provided, That in addition thereto camps or facilities may be established for not to exceed ten thousand additional Indian enrollees and five thousand additional territorial and insular possession enrollees.

"SEC. 8. The enrollees in the Corps (other than war veterans, enrollees in the Territories and insular possessions, Indians, not to exceed one mess steward, three cooks, and one leader per each company) shall be unmarried male citizens of the United States between the ages of seventeen and twenty-three years, both inclusive, and shall at the time of enrollment be unemployed and in need of employment: Provided, That the Director may exclude from enrollment such classes of persons as he may consider detrimental to the well-being or welfare of the Corps, except that no person shall be excluded on account of race, color, or creed: Provided further, That enrollments shall be for a period of not less than six months and reenrollments shall not exceed a total term of two years: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Director continuous service by the enrollee during his period of enrollment shall not be required in any case where the enrollee attends an educational institution of his choice during his leave of absence: Provided further, That the Director shall be authorized to issue certificates of proficiency and merit to enrollees under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

"SEC. 9. The compensation of enrollees shall be in accordance with schedules approved by the President, and enrollees with dependent member or members of their families shall be required, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Director, to make allotments of pay to such dependents. Other enrollees may make deposits of pay in amounts specified by the Director with the Chief of Finance, War Department, to be repaid in case of an emergency or upon completion of or release from enrollment and to receive the balance of their pay in cash monthly: Provided, That Indians may be excluded from these regulations: Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, unless such enrollees are used as leaders or for special services for which an additional amount of pay is justified.

"SEC. 10. Enrollees shall be provided, in addition to the monthly rates of pay, with such quarters, subsistence, and clothing, or commutation in lieu thereof, medical attention, hospitalization, and transportation as the Director may deem necessary: Provided, That burial, embalming, and transportation expenses of deceased enrolled members of the Corps, regardless of the cause and place of death, shall be paid in accordance with regulations of the Employees' Compensation Commission applicable to employees injured in line of duty: Provided further, That the provisions of the Act of February 15, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 5, sec. 796), relating to disability or death compensation and benefits shall apply to the enrolled personnel of the Corps.

"SEC. 11. The Chief of Finance, War Department, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed, until otherwise ordered by the President, to act as the fiscal agent of the Director in carrying out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That funds allocated to Government agencies for obligation under this Act may be expended in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the usual work of such agency, except as otherwise stipulated in this Act: Provided further, That in incurring expenditures, the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), shall not apply to any purchase or service when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $300.

"SEC. 12. The President is hereby authorized to utilize the services and facilities of such departments or agencies of the Government as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 13. The Director and, under his supervision, the cooperating departments and agencies of the Federal Government are authorized to enter into such cooperative agreements with States and civil divisions as may be necessary for the purpose of utilizing the services and facilities thereof.

"SEC. 14. The Director may authorize the expenditure of such amounts as he may deem necessary for supplies, materials, and equipment for enrollees to be used in connection with their work, instruction, recreation, health, and welfare, and may also authorize expenditures for the transportation and subsistence of selected applicants for enrollment and of discharged enrollees while en route upon discharge to their homes.

"SEC. 15. That personal property as defined in the Act of May 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 311), belonging to the Corps and declared surplus by the Director, shall be disposed of by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, in accordance with the provisions of said Act: Provided, That unserviceable property in the custody of any department shall be disposed of under the regulations of that Department.

"SEC. 16. The Director and, under his supervision, the heads of cooperating departments and agencies are authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay from the funds appropriated by Congress to carry out the provisions of this Act any claim arising out of operations authorized by the Act accruing after the effective date thereof on account of damage to or loss of property or on account of personal injury to persons not provided for by section 10 of this Act, caused by the negligence of any enrollee or employee of the Corps while acting within the scope of his employment: Provided, That the amount allowed on account of personal injury shall be limited to necessary medical and hospital expenses: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to any claim on account of personal injury for which a remedy is provided by section 10 of this Act: Provided further, That no claim shall be considered hereunder which is in excess of $500, or which is not presented in writing within one year from the date of accrual thereof: Provided further, That acceptance by any claimant of the amount allowed on account of his claim shall be deemed to be in full settlement thereof, and the action of the Director or of the head of a cooperating department or agency upon such claim so accepted by the claimant shall be conclusive.

"SEC. 17. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That no part of any such appropriation shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any camp exchange, save and except such camp exchanges as are established and operated, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Director, at such camps as may be designated by him, for real assistance and convenience to enrollees in supplying them and their supervising personnel on duty at any such camp with articles of ordinary use and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided further, That the person in charge of any such camp exchange shall certify monthly that during the preceding calendar month such exchange was operated in compliance herewith.

"SEC. 18. This act, except as otherwise provided, shall take effect July 1, 1937."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill (sec. 1) provided that the Civilian Conservation Corps is established for the purpose of providing employment as well as vocational training. The Senate amendment omits the matter relating to vocational training and substitutes therefor the purpose of training for citizenship. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Under the House bill (sec. 1 and sec. 8), only unemployed persons in needy circumstances were to be included within its provisions. The Senate amendment omits the requirement that such persons be in needy circumstances. The conference agreement limits the class to the unemployed who are in need of employment.

The House bill (sec. 1) contained a provision that at least 10 hours each week might be devoted to general education and vocational training. The Senate amendment and the conference agreement omit this provision.

Under the House bill (sec. 1), the act was to continue only for 2 years after July 1, 1937. The Senate amendment omits the House provision, thus making the act permanent. The conference agreement adopts the House provision except that the period is made 3 years after July 1, 1937 (1940).

The House bill (sec. 4) prohibited camp exchanges from selling to persons not connected with the corps. The Senate amendment omits this prohibition. The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

Under the House bill (sec. 5) civilian personnel necessary for the discharge of the functions of the corps were to be appointed without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations. The Senate amendment provides that such personnel shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations and their compensation fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923. It also provides that the employment of employees of the emergency conservation work and of cooperating Federal agencies may be continued and those who do not have a civil-service status are to be permitted to take a noncompetitive civil-service examination. Those who do not receive an eligible rating are to be dropped from the rolls not later than June 30, 1938. The amendment also provides that the section shall not apply to Reserve officers on active duty with the corps, enrollees, or unskilled labor, and that employment of Indians shall be in accordance with section 12 of the act of June 18, 1934. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Under the House bill (sec. 6), the President could order (among other persons) warrant officers of the Coast Guard to active duty with the corps. The Senate amendment omits this provision. The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

The House bill (sec. 8) authorized the Director to exclude from enrollment such persons as he considered detrimental to the well-being and welfare of the corps. The corresponding provision of the Senate amendment authorizes the exclusion of such "classes of persons" as are so considered. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

The Senate amendment (sec. 8) inserted a provision, not contained in the House bill, under which enrollments are to be for a period of not less than 6 months and reenrollments may not exceed a total term of 2 years; that, in the discretion of the Director, continuous service by an enrollee shall not be required where he attends an educational institution during his leave of absence, and that the Director is authorized to issue certificates of merit to enrollees. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

The House bill (sec. 9) provided that enrollees with family dependents were to be required, under regulations of the Director, to make allotments of pay to dependents. The Senate amendment makes this provision permissive and it applies to all dependents. The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

Under the House bill (sec. 9) only those enrollees who do not have dependent families were to be permitted to make deposits of pay with the Chief of Finance of the War Department. The Senate amendment permits all enrollees to do so. The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

The Senate amendment omits the House provision (sec. 9) which limits to 10 percent the number of enrollees who may receive not more than $36 per month as leaders and a similar provision which limits to 6 percent the number of enrollees who shall receive $45 per month as leaders, and substitutes therefor a provision under which the ordinary $30 limitation may be exceeded in the case of enrollees used as leaders or for special services for which additional pay is justified. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

The House bill (sec. 11) provided that funds allocated to Government agencies for "obligation" under the act were to be expended in accordance with laws and rules governing the agencies, except as otherwise provided in this act. The Senate amendment, in the corresponding provision, substituted the word "obligations." The conference agreement adopts the House provision.

The House bill (sec. 16) contained a provision expressly excluding claims under section 10 (claims by enrollees) from the provisions of section 16. The Senate amendment omits this provision. The conference agreement restores it.

Under the House bill (sec. 16), payment of claims by the Director or other agencies was to be conclusive if accepted by the claimant. The Senate amendment makes action upon any such accepted claim conclusive. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may sit jointly with the Senate Committee on Education and Labor during the sessions of the House for the next 3 days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by the Postmaster General at St. Joseph, Mo., on May 25, on the subject of the pony express and its relation to the Department and the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on next Wednesday, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that will be Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean after disposition of Calendar Wednesday business? I am not going to agree to anyone making a speech ahead of the disposition of business on Calendar Wednesday from now on until certain legislation is disposed of.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi I have the same intention.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us have an understanding about the matter.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am going to object to the gentleman from New York speaking on next Wednesday before the Calendar Wednesday business is disposed of.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us have an understanding, because there was a misunderstanding in the House the other day, and I think certain Members of the House were not treated exactly as they should have been at that time.

I do not want the gentleman from New York to misunderstand me. If the gentleman will amend his request to provide that he may be permitted to speak after the disposition of business in order on Calendar Wednesday, I shall not object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I thought it had been definitely settled that all these requests were subject to all privileged matters, to business in order on Calendar Wednesday, and to unfinished business. If they are not subject to them, the matter ought to be settled now.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am ready to go to bat on that.

Mr. SNELL. What would be the object of making a special request if you put in all these provisos?

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that the other day there were three Members who, under special orders, had permission to address the House. The Committee on Rules brought in a rule for the consideration of a general bill, the "hot oil" bill. Under the construction, mentioned by the gentleman, any other privileged committee could bring up a resolution or a bill. We are not going to permit that practice in the future if it can be prevented, and we may as well understand it now. When a Member is given permission to address the House on a certain occasion, we should not permit the running in of general legislation ahead of it. Therefore, I think if the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] will amend his request so every Member of the House will understand that his request is that he may address the House after the call of the calendar, I shall not object; otherwise, I am going to object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 10 minutes on Wednesday after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and the business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York modifies his request, and now requests that on Wednesday, after the disposition of matters in order on Calendar Wednesday, he may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand this will not interfere with Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DEROUEN. My committee has the call on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The request is based upon the proposition the gentleman's committee shall have the call on Wednesday before the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the Chair hold that on Wednesday, after the disposition of business in order on Calendar Wednesday, the address of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] will come ahead of the unfinished business of the House and privileged matters?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman propounds a parliamentary inquiry which is of some importance to the Chair. It is not the province of the Chair to undertake to say under what circumstances Members shall be allowed to address the House. The Chair thinks at this point there should be a firm decision and determination with reference to the particular question raised by the gentleman from New York. This matter arose a few days ago in the House, and the Chair stated at that time it was his understanding that all these consents which have recently been obtained have been based upon the premise that they would not be in order if there were a regular calendar call or if there were privileged matters which it was desired to call up before the speeches were made. Therefore, for the guidance of the Chair, the Chair thinks this matter ought to be definitely determined once and for all, inasmuch as the question has been raised.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Would it not require an amendment to the rules of the House to establish a rule on this question? The far-reaching attitude assumed the other day would certainly amount to a change in the rules of the House, which must be submitted to the membership in written form.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I want the gentleman to get this certain. I am not advocating this procedure, I am trying to find out whether it has not on several occasions been definitely established, that is all.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will yield, I may say it is peculiar that this does not work both ways.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I think so too.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It appears that tomorrow we have on the calendar a bill from the Committee on Immigration, but I find from the calendar an hour and 45 minutes of speeches are ahead of the consideration of this bill. Therefore, it does not work both ways. It seems to me some Members are getting preference over others. If I have to make a speech, I am willing to make it and abide by the rules of the House. I think it is wrong to have Members get consent to take up 2 hours ahead of the business of a committee. However, I am willing to abide by any rule the House is willing to make.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In regard to the specific case the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has mentioned, that the Committee on Immigration may have a bill up for consideration tomorrow, I may say that if the bill is brought up it will be brought up under a special rule. These speeches are set for tomorrow. I had believed the understanding of the House and the ruling of the Chair to be that a special rule, being a privileged matter, would precede these speeches.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am happy to hear that.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from New York I was not here when those requests were made. If I had been, I would certainly have objected to any Member getting time to speak on Wednesday before the call of the calendar, because there is some legislation on the calendar in which we are interested.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am willing to wait until the committee is through. If there is time left, I am willing to take my time then.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] the Chair is of the opinion it would not require a change of the rules to effectuate the procedure which has been suggested, but the Chair upon reflection is of the opinion that if a request is made such as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has just made, that on Calendar Wednesday after the call of the committee having the call, he may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes, the Chair would feel it to be his duty under such an agreement to recognize the gentleman from New York for 10 minutes.

The Chair desires to make the further observation, that this is a matter entirely within the control of the membership of the House. The leadership of the House or any individual Member may interpose at the time such a request is made the condition that the request shall follow privileged business. In order to protect the Chair and to remove from the shoulders of the Chair any responsibility with respect to saying what are privileged matters and what matters should be considered, the Chair thinks it only proper that that rule should be established.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have stated in the House over and over again that when any Member rises and asks the privilege of addressing the House for the moment or for any day in the future, any Member of the House can prevent this by a single objection. I further stated that wanting to accommodate the Members of the House insofar as we can and yet protect and expedite the legislative program, that when any Member asks consent to address the House, it must be understood I would interpose an objection unless the Member understood and agreed that the time so requested would be subject to privileged matters, such as conference reports, privileged bills from committees that have the right to report privileged bills, reports from the Committee on Rules, or special rules making certain legislation in order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman consider that reports from the Committee on Rules are the same as matters on the Speaker's table and are privileged?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I do not.

Mr. SNELL. There is a difference between privileged matters and privileged reports.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not contend that, and I am simply saying I am going to interpose an objection in order to protect rules making in order legislation that is to be passed upon.

Mr. SNELL. There would be no use of Members getting unanimous consent to address the House with all the restrictions the gentleman has just stated, because the chairman of the Rules Committee always has a rule in his pocket, and if he wants to keep a Member from addressing the House, he can call up his rule.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say that the gentleman from New York has been in this body long enough——

Mr. SNELL. "Long enough", I presume some people will say. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Long enough to know——

Mr. SNELL. I am pleased that the gentleman has added that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYBURN. To know that any Member of the House can interpose an objection to any other Member speaking at any time.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that very well, but with the restrictions the gentleman has just put on, there is no sense in getting unanimous consent to address the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Insofar as protecting the legislative program is concerned, I have announced, and I think this is the sixth or seventh time, I would interpose an objection to any gentleman speaking if it interfered with the program of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That may be right where a program has been set, but if you are going to say to the Members of the House that when one Member has secured time to address the House on a certain day—and we have plenty of time, because we have been adjourning on Thursday or Friday night over Sunday—if we are going to have that kind of ruling, let me say to the gentleman from Texas that you absolutely take away from the entire membership of the House the right to secure a definite time to address the House on any special occasion or at any particular time. You absolutely take away that right, and the time so allotted to a Member is likely to be taken away by reason of any kind of legislation the Rules Committee may want to call up.

That is not fair; and I, for one, shall resist any such procedure.

Mr. TABER. I object to the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] objects to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman objects to my request that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and following the business in order on that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JUNE 7, 1937.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: From the secretary of state of the State of California I have received the certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. A. J. ELLIOTT as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-fifth Congress from the Tenth Congressional District of that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Henry E. Stubbs.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Unless there is objection, the Member-elect will present himself at the bar of the House and receive the oath of office.

Mr. A. J. ELLIOTT appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PERMISSION OF SUBCOMMITTEE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to which has been assigned H. R. 2252 be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House during Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the very able address delivered by our beloved Speaker at the commencement exercises at the University of Alabama in the district which it is my privilege and honor to represent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, together with some questions and answers thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and all other business before the House, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the life and character of the late James Couzens.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AIRPORT FACILITIES IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, what is everybody's business is nobody's business. What I am going to talk about is really none of my business any more than it is the business of every Member of Congress, but the situation with respect to the airport facilities in Washington is absolutely indefensible, and somebody will have to make it his or their business to see that something is done, and that right soon, if Congress is to relieve itself from the responsibility which is its in regard to this matter. Here we are in the most magnificent Capital, or what will eventually be, the most magnificent governmental center to be found anywhere in the world, and any person, or the representative of any foreign country who undertakes to come to Washington by air, and every Congressman who undertakes to leave or arrive in Washington takes his life in his hands because of the obvious dangers which everybody knows exist at the landing field.

Travel by air has come to stay, and it is a matter of self-protection and self-preservation which is involved in my suggestion that this is one of the most important matters which this Congress can consider.

The expenditure of the necessary amount of money to give Washington such a landing field as it is entitled to have would be justified by the exigencies and for the purpose of permanent improvement and development.

The engineering problems involved are trivial and simple when compared with what the engineering brains of this country have already accomplished. Nothing justifies the delay, which delay imperils the lives of the traveling public, not to say those of us who travel by air.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that before we have a major catastrophe incident to and because of the grossly inadequate and unsafe facilities for the landing of airplanes in this, the Capital of the greatest Nation on earth, it seems to me, I say, that somebody—and I mean the District Airport Commission—should count human life, the safety of those who travel by air, and the convenience of the public as compelling inducements to expedition and action, and that some site should be selected, and that right now, which will afford the necessary facilities, ample room, and that safety to which the air-traveling public is entitled.

It is a national disgrace that the present situation has been permitted already so long to exist. I am playing no favorites as to sites or location, but a safe, suitable, and adequate landing field for commercial and visiting planes must be provided eventually. Delays are dangerous.

The situation, as I see it, was pretty well covered by an editorial writer in the Times the other day, when he said:

NONE BUT THE BEST

The District Airport Commission, which was expected to report 4 or 5 months ago, has not yet made a report on the subject of locating an adequate air terminal for the National Capital.

The delay in the Commission's action is deplorable in itself and is also a cause of dismay among those who are interested in seeing a solution of a problem which has vexed the city for more than a decade.

The reason for the dismay is that rumors are afloat to the effect that the Commission is preparing to shelve the merits of the outstanding possible locations of the airport and select a site or sites on a compromise basis.

There is no occasion for compromising upon any site which is less than the best available and obtainable.

Interested real-estate owners with "white elephants" to unload should not be permitted to bring pressure which would force a sacrifice of the decent sites which can be obtained.

It is noticeable that some members of the Commission seem willing to disregard the possibilities of the site at Gravelly Point, a site already largely under Government ownership.

This, it is reported, is due to the fact that there has for years been a controversy between advocates of this site and advocates of the site of the present Washington-Hoover Airport.

In order not to offend the proponents of either of these sites it is understood that the Commission is planning to disregard the claims of both and recommend sites which are not up to the standard of either.

If the Commission follows this weak course it will have wasted all of the effort which it has exerted over the last year, for it will not make any contribution to the building of decent air facilities for Washington.

The location of the projected airport is not a matter to be settled by catering to the wishes of selfishly actuated persons who want to sell real estate to the Government.

It will be necessary for the Airport Commission to prove conclusively in its report that the site which it recommends has outstanding advantages over Gravelly Point before its recommendations will be accepted.

The Commission cannot hope to do this if it is placed in the position of yielding to the urgings of property sellers.

THE GIBSON BILL

The provisions of the pending Gibson bill should offer to the Airport Commission a reasonable basis of procedure.

Under that bill the Gravelly Point site would be filled in and developed as a model airport.

Pending that development the owners of Washington-Hoover would be given an opportunity to improve their present port by elimination of the bisecting Military Road.

That seems to be a sensible program designed to accommodate Washington aircraft.

Other programs are open to the suspicion that their objective is face-saving, not safe terminal facilities.

Senate bill 1449, which was introduced February 10 last by Senator GIBSON, undertakes to create a District Airport Commission to establish a public airport at Gravelly Point; to provide temporary facilities by aiding the Washington-Hoover Airport by closing Military Road, or for leasing other suitable areas.

This may not be the solution, but it is a suggestion and it commends itself to me as a move in the right direction, but somewhere and some way it has been stalemated.

When life and death impend the greed and selfishness of human beings should not be permitted to control the situation. If it is the question of property rights and the sale of real estate and the price to be paid, we know how to proceed to obviate such barriers. Let us take the necessary property by the right of eminent domain for a public necessity. Let us do something right away, for whether you know it or believe it or not, there is not a pilot who makes a landing or leaves the ground at the present airport who does not do so with his fingers crossed and his heart in his mouth. It is dangerous, and that is all there is to it. The situation should be remedied or the airport closed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLUETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address I delivered on May 22, 1937, in Mechanicsville, N. Y., at the celebration honoring the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Col. Ephriam Elmer Ellsworth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERTERRITORIAL FREIGHT RATE PROBLEM OF UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 264)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

Herewith I submit a survey entitled "The Interterritorial Freight Rate Problem of the United States", which survey was conducted by the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, pursuant to Executive Order No. 6161 (June 8, 1933), by which I delegated to it certain powers granted to me by sections 22 and 23 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933. I am also transmitting herewith a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, dated May 28, 1937, forwarding the aforesaid survey to me, and explaining its nature and purpose.

I invite particular attention to the suggestion, contained in Chairman Morgan's letter, that the report, with its accompanying maps and charts, be published as an official document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 7, 1937.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH, Mr. TABER, and Mr. ENGEL objected.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 274. An act for the relief of Lt. Joseph N. Wenger, United States Navy, and for other purposes;

S. 673. An act for the relief of S. T. Dickinson; and

S. 1699. An act granting an annuity to Frank W. Carpenter.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar Day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

MINIMUM SALARY, DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6453) to increase the minimum salary of deputy United States marshals to $2,000 per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TO AMEND THE BANK-ROBBERY STATUTE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5900, to amend the bank-robbery statute to include burglary and larceny.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when the bill was called 2 weeks ago I asked that the bill go over without prejudice in order that we might look into it further, having particularly in mind the fact that no distinction had been made in the penalty between felonies and misdemeanors. I understand the Committee on the Judiciary has met and plans to offer an amendment which corrects that feature, and for that reason I am sure there will be no objection to the bill. I feel certain the amendment will cure all objections which were originally made to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 2 of the act of May 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 783; U. S. C., title 12, sec. 588 b), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever, by force and violence, or by putting in fear, feloniously takes, or feloniously attempts to take, from the person or presence of another any property or money or any other thing of value belonging to, or in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of, any bank; or whoever shall enter or attempt to enter any bank, or any building used in whole or in part as a bank, with intent to commit in such bank or building, or part thereof, so used, any larceny or other depredation; or whoever shall take and carry away, with intent to steal or purloin, any property or money or any other thing of value belonging to, or in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of any bank, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "any", insert the words "felony or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY: Page 2, line 4, after the word "larceny", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both; or whoever shall take and carry away, with intent to steal or purloin, any property or money or any other things of value exceeding $50, belonging to or in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of any bank, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both; or whoever shall take and carry away, with intent to steal or purloin, any property or money or any other thing of value not exceeding $50, belonging to or in the care, custody, control, management, or possession of any bank, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word and I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro-forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 82]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARTER). Three hundred and thirty-one Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COSTELLO, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

MEMORIAL TO CERTAIN OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1120) authorizing an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. S. S. Tulip near St. Inigoes Bay, Md., on November 11, 1864, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TABER objected.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for the erection of a suitable memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. S. S. Tulip on November 11, 1864, such memorial to be erected on the site of the interment of such officers and men near St. Inigoes Bay, Md., and for the acquisition of the land constituting said site.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO LIBERALIZE LAWS GOVERNING SERVICE-CONNECTED BENEFITS FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6384, to liberalize the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. BIERMANN objected.

INTEREST RATES ON LAND-BANK LOANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6763, to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just want to announce to the House that I have a petition on the Clerk's desk to bring out on the floor this Gold Star Mothers bill. If the Members are going to take this kind of attitude to kill the Gold Star Mothers legislation, we will petition it out and pass it anyway.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman has many good things in his bill, but he has many bad things in it also. I would suggest to him that he amend the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. No. What is bad about it?

Mr. BIERMANN. It is bad because it throws the door open to pensioning someone who was not hurt at all.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, it does not. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that we have held this bill down to the very limit. We have asked for a closed rule. These Gold Star Mothers, who sent their sons to the war and never saw them again, are now going off the rolls—their insurance payments are expiring. We intend to see that they are taken care of, and I ask every Member of the House to sign this petition, which I am now placing on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6763?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act as amended (relating to reduction in interest rates on certain Federal land-bank loans), is amended by striking out the following: "occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "occurring within a period of 3 years commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1938."

(b) The fourth sentence of such paragraph "Twelfth" (relating to the time limit on payments made by the United States to land banks on account of such interest reduction) is amended to read as follows: "No payments shall be made to a bank with respect to any period after June 30, 1939."

SEC. 2. Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, as amended (relating to loans by the Land Bank Commissioner), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the rate of interest on loans made under this section outstanding when this amendatory paragraph takes effect or made on or after such date, shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing on the date when this amendatory paragraph takes effect."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REVISION OF AIR-MAIL LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4732, to revise the air-mail laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TO AUTHORIZE AN APPROPRIATION FOR INVESTIGATIONS UNDER THE FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 48, to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. TABER, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS UNDER FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2512, to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of the Interior with respect to an amendment has not been followed and that this authorization, if the bill is passed as it has been reported, will be chargeable against the Treasury and not against the reclamation fund. There is going to be objection to this bill, of course, if we authorize new funds to the extent of $500,000 for this purpose. I am not sure that there would be objection if the recommendation of the Acting Secretary were followed in that respect.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. GREEVER. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I had in mind offering that as an amendment, but I wanted some assurance from the committee or from the sponsor of the bill that it would be satisfactory.

Mr. GREEVER. That would be absolutely satisfactory to me, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan. I offered the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000 for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior, under the Federal reclamation laws, in the construction of small storage reservoirs at such locations within the States subject to the Federal reclamation laws, as the said Secretary may select, no reservoir to be constructed hereunder the estimated cost of which exceeds $50,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert "special fund in the Treasury of the United States created by the act of June 17, 1902, and therein designated the 'reclamation fund.'"

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I may say this amendment is the amendment recommended by Mr. West, Acting Secretary of the Interior, and makes these funds available from the reclamation fund and prevents the necessity of authorizing new funds for the purposes of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE STRAITS OF MACKINAC AT OR NEAR ST. IGNACE, MICH.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1104, granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES, Mr. DONDERO, and Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am opposed to this bill, but I shall not object to its being considered by the House provided opportunity is given to discuss it thoroughly. I know that some of my colleagues are opposed to its being brought up by unanimous consent. Personally, if we can have ample opportunity to discuss it, I shall not object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have an hour in which to discuss this bill?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter not within the control of the Chair.

Mr. SCHULTE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DONDERO, Mr. MICHENER, Mr. CRAWFORD, and Mr. MAPES objected.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5417, to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I feel this bill is of too great importance to be brought up by unanimous consent. It involves tolls in the Panama Canal. The membership of the House has had little or no opportunity to study the merits of the proposed legislation, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been on the Consent Calendar since May 7. If objection is going to be made to its consideration by unanimous consent at this time, it is useless to pass it over for 2 weeks, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. TABER, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH objected.

SELECTION OF SITE FOR THE ALBERT GALLATIN STATUE IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 56, authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this particular bill, as I understand, provides for an appropriation of $10,000 in order to obtain and prepare a site and erect thereon a pedestal upon which to place a statue of Albert Gallatin, at one time a Secretary of the Treasury. I notice from reading the resolution, authority is given to any association organized within 2 years from the date of the approval of this resolution to provide for a statue and donate it to the Government to be erected upon this pedestal. It is my thought that in view of the fact apparently no association exists as the present time, and there are no funds with which to procure a statue, and apparently from reading the committee report there is no statue in existence, it would seem to me illogical to provide a site and a pedestal upon which to place such statue.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. In just a moment. I was going to ask also——

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. One objection is heard. It requires three objections.

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. SCHULTE, and Mr. FADDIS objected.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. It is my understanding a group of patriotic folks have raised the money with which to meet every expense except for the construction of the pedestal. The report, as I understand it, does not show that the statue is in existence, but I am informed it is in existence and is ready to be erected upon a site to be selected by the Fine Arts Commission. This is to be a statue in memory of a great and patriotic American citizen, a distinguished son of Pennsylvania, a former Secretary of the Treasury, the man who was connected with the creation of the first Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. I sincerely trust that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That authority is hereby granted to any association organized within 2 years from date of the approval of this resolution for that purpose to erect a statue of Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury from May 14, 1801, to February 9, 1814, opposite the west entrance of the Treasury Building in the city of Washington within the grounds occupied by such building, or at such other place within such grounds as may be designated by the Fine Arts Commission, subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, the model of the statue so to be erected and the pedestal thereof to be first approved by the said Commission and by the Joint Committee on the Library, the same to be presented by such association to the people of the United States.

SEC. 2. That for the preparation of the site and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place the said statue, under the direction of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "the", strike out the words "Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital" and insert in lieu thereof "Secretary of the Treasury."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES MEMORIAL FUND

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 19) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas by the will of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, admitted to probate on March 9, 1935, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the United States Government has been made the residuary legatee; and

Whereas the Treasurer of the United States will receive such bequest and it will be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts unless the Congress enact legislation for its application to a more specific purpose; and

Whereas that purpose should be a living and useful memorial of the testator, symbolic of his interest and achievements; and

Whereas he also left by his will his own private library to the Library of Congress, a large portion thereof consisting of books on jurisprudence; and

Whereas there could be no more fitting memorial of the distinguished jurist than a collection, developed upon the one thus bequeathed, of the fundamental works in the field of jurisprudence, to be maintained in the National Library, which serves also the Supreme Court of the United States, and to be perpetually known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Collection of Jurisprudence: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the residuary fund from the estate of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes be received by the Treasurer of the United States and immediately credited to the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, as a special fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund, and to be administered in accordance with section 1 of the act of March 3, 1925 (2 U. S. C., 157), creating such Trust Fund Board. The income of this fund shall be used for the purpose of building up and maintaining a collection of legal literature in the Law Division of the Library of Congress to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Collection of Jurisprudence.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the words "Law Division" and insert "law department."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 709, to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States", approved June 30, 1906, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The qualifications, classifications, rights, and obligations of members of said corporation shall be prescribed in the bylaws of the corporation."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) The officers of the corporation shall be a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, a board of directors, an executive committee, a board of trustees, and such boards, councils, committees, and other officers as shall be prescribed in the bylaws.

"(b) Except as limited by this act, as amended, the bylaws of the corporation shall prescribe the powers, duties, terms of office, and the manner of election or appointment of the said officers, boards, councils, and committees; and the said corporation may by its bylaws make other and different provisions as to the numbers and names of the officers, boards, councils, and committees."

SEC. 3. Section 7 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) The board of trustees shall consist of four members elected by the board of directors for a term of 4 years, and the president of the association, who shall be a member ex officio during his term of office. At the first meeting of the board of directors held during the annual meeting of the association at which they were elected, they shall elect one trustee for the term of 4 years. All vacancies occurring in said board of trustees, whether by resignation or otherwise, shall be filled by the board of directors for the unexpired term; and the absence of a trustee from two successive annual meetings of the board shall forfeit his membership.

"(b) The invested fund now known as the 'Permanent fund of the National Educational Association', when transferred to the corporation hereby created, shall be held by such corporation as a permanent fund and shall be in charge of the board of trustees, who shall provide for the safekeeping and investment of such fund, and of all other funds which the corporation may receive by donation, bequest, or devise. No part of the principal of such permanent fund or its accretions shall be expended, except by a two-thirds vote of the representative assembly, after the proposed expenditure has been approved by the board of trustees and the board of directors, and after printed notice of the proposed expenditure has been printed in the Journal of the National Education Association at least 2 months prior to the meeting of the representative assembly.

"(c) The income of the permanent fund shall be used only to meet the cost of maintaining the organization of the association and of publishing its annual volume of Proceedings, unless the terms of the donation, bequest, or devise shall otherwise specify, or the bylaws of the corporation shall otherwise provide.

"(d) The board of trustees shall elect the secretary of the association who shall be secretary of the executive committee, and shall fix the compensation and the term of his office for a period of not to exceed 4 years."

SEC. 4. Section 8 of such act is amended by striking out in the proviso thereof the following: "by the board of directors, or otherwise."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSURANCE ON VALUABLES IN SHIPMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6635, to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as soon as practicable after the approval of this act the Postmaster General shall, with the approval of the President, prescribe regulations governing the shipment of valuables by the executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees of the United States, with a view to minimizing risks of loss and destruction of, and damage to, such valuables in shipment. After the effective date of such regulations, which shall be not more than 30 days after their issuance, it shall be the duty of every such executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer, and employee, and of every person acting for him or it, or at his or its direction, to comply with such regulations in making any shipment of valuables.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the replacement of valuables, or the value thereof, lost, destroyed, or damaged in the course of shipment effected pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated annually, beginning with the fiscal year 1939 and ending with the fiscal year 1948, inclusive, the sum of $200,000 for the said purposes, and from time to time such additional sums as may be necessary for the said purposes. There shall be in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund, to be known as "the fund for the payment of Government losses in shipment" (hereinafter referred to as the fund), to be constituted of the said sum of $500,000 and the sums hereafter appropriated for the said purposes, together with all recoveries and repayments credited to the funds as hereinafter provided. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used for the payment of administrative expenses, including personal services, necessary to carry out the provisions of this act for the fiscal year 1938.

SEC. 3. In the event of loss or destruction of, or damage to, valuables, of which shipment shall have been made pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1, a claim in writing for replacement shall be made upon the Secretary of the Treasury, who, if he shall be satisfied that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred and that shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations, shall cause replacement to be made out of the fund through such disbursing officers as he may designate. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred or that such shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States: Provided, however, That where the Secretary of the Treasury determines that such replacement can be effected, in whole or in part, without actual or ultimate injury to the United States, by a credit in the accounts of the executive department, independent establishment, agency, officer, employee, or other accountable person making the claim, he shall not resort to the fund, except to the extent that such replacement cannot be so effected by such credit, but shall certify such determination to the Comptroller General and upon receipt of such certification the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to make such credit in the settlement of accounts in the General Accounting Office: And provided further, That the fund shall not be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipment shall have been made by or on behalf of the Public Debt Service of the Treasury Department, insofar as such loss, destruction, or damage is chargeable against the indefinite appropriation, "Expenses of loans, act of September 24, 1917, as amended and extended" (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, secs. 760, 761); nor shall it be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipments shall have been made at the risk of persons other than the United States, its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees. All recoveries and repayments on account of loss, destruction, or damage to valuables of which replacement shall have been made out of the fund shall be credited to it and shall be available for the purposes thereof.

SEC. 4. Payments received by a wholly owned corporation out of the fund shall constitute a debt of the corporation to be repaid, out of the corporation's surplus, to the Secretary of the Treasury for the credit of the fund. Repayment to the Secretary of the Treasury shall be in installments in such amounts and at such times as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the total amount of such installments required to be paid by any such corporation during any fiscal year shall not, unless the corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury shall agree otherwise, be less than 2½ percent nor more than 5 percent of the total debt. The corporation shall have the right to accelerate repayment in whole or in part, and in case of dissolution or liquidation of the corporation the unpaid balance shall be immediately due and shall receive priority as a debt due to the United States as though it were a debt due the United States within the provisions of section 3466 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, sec. 191).

SEC. 5. On and after the effective date of the regulations prescribed under section 1, no executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer, or employee shall expend any moneys, or incur any obligation, for insurance, or for the payment of premiums on insurance, against loss, destruction, or damage in the shipment of valuables except as specifically authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may give such authorization if he shall find that the risk of loss, destruction, or damage in such shipment cannot be adequately guarded against by the facilities of the United States or that the circumstances are such that adequate replacement cannot be provided under this act.

SEC. 6. Every officer and employee of the United States and every person acting on behalf of a wholly owned corporation who makes a shipment of valuables in good faith pursuant to and substantially in accordance with the regulations prescribed under section 1 shall be deemed, insofar as there may be concerned the propriety with respect to such shipment of any act or omission governed by such regulations, to be acting in faithful execution of his duties of office and in full performance of the conditions of his bond and oath of office, if any.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, with the approval of the President, to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in him by this act, and may for such purpose require persons making shipment of valuables or making claims for replacement to make such declarations or to furnish him with such other information as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 8. For the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "valuables" means any article or thing or representative of value in which the United States has any interest, or in connection with which it has any obligation or responsibility, direct or indirect, and which is of, or is similar to, a class or kind of article or thing or representative of value which it has been the practice heretofore of the United States to insure, as the insured party, against loss, destruction, or damage in shipment, and includes, but is not limited to, coin, specie, bullion, currency bonds, coupons, debentures, bills, notes, certificates of indebtedness, certificates of deposit, mortgages, assignments, certificates of stock, warehouse receipts, checks, trust receipts, warrants, stamps, and any other securities, papers, or materials of value, whether complete, incomplete, mutilated, in definitive form or represented by interim documents; the term "United States" as used in this subsection means the United States or any of its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, or employees;

(b) The term "shipment" means the transportation, or the effecting of transportation, of valuables, without limitation as to the means or facilities used or by which the transportation is effected or the person to whom it is made, and includes, but is not limited to, shipments made to any executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly or partly owned corporation, officer, or employee of the United States, or any person acting on his or its behalf, or at his or its direction;

(c) The term "wholly owned corporation" means any corporation, regardless of the law or laws under which it is incorporated, the capital of which is entirely owned, directly or indirectly, by the United States, and includes the duly authorized officers, employees, and agents thereof;

(d) The term "replacement" means payment, reimbursement, replacement, or duplication, or the expenses incident thereo.

SEC. 9. (a) Whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury—

(1) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner; or has been lost or stolen under such circumstances, and such a period of time having elapsed after it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, as in the judgment of the Secretary would indicate that it has been destroyed or irretrievably lost, is not held by any person as his own property and will never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States; or

(2) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, which is not payable to bearer and which has not been so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been lost or stolen, so that it is not held by any person as his own property, or has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner; the Secretary, upon receipt and approval by him of a bond of indemnity, if and as required by subsection (b) hereof, shall, in the case of a security which has not matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, issue a substitute marked "duplicate" and showing the serial number of the original security; or shall, in the case of a security which has matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, make payment thereof to the owner, with such interest only as would have been paid had the security been presented when it became due and payable: Provided, That in the case of an interim certificate relief may be given by the issue of a definitive security, whether before or after maturity, rather than by the issue of a substitute or by payment: And provided further, That no payment shall be made on account of interest coupons claimed to have been attached to such original security unless the Secretary is satisfied that such coupons have not been paid and are in fact destroyed or can never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States.

(b) Except as hereinafter provided, the owner of such lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, or defaced security shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require: Provided, That in case of securities payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, the destruction of which has not been proved, a corporate surety, qualified under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 6, secs. 6–13), shall be required on such bond of indemnity: And provided further, That a bond of indemnity shall not be required in any of the following classes of cases, except as hereinafter provided:

(1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner and while the security was in the custody or the control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of this act;

(2) If substantially the entire security is presented and surrendered by the owner and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the security presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States;

(3) If the lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, or defaced security is one which by the provisions of law, or by the terms of its issue, is transferable only by operation of law;

(4) If the owner is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government, or a Federal Reserve bank:

Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

(c) The term "interest-bearing security of the United States" or "security" wherever used in this section, means any direct obligation of the United States issued pursuant to law for valuable consideration and which by its terms bears interest, or is issued on a discount basis, and includes (but is not limited to) bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness and Treasury bills, and interim certificates issued for any such security.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of this section.

(e) Sections 3702, as amended, 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 735, 736, 737, and 738) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. Section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 31, sec. 528), as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Except as hereinafter provided, whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any original check of the United States is lost, stolen, or wholly or partly destroyed, or is so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to its owner or holder, persons authorized to issue such checks on behalf of the United States are authorized, before the close of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the original check was issued, to issue to the owner or holder thereof a substitute, marked 'duplicate' and showing the number, date, and payee of the original check, upon the receipt and approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require; but no such substitute shall be payable if the original check shall first have been paid: Provided, however, That the authority herein conferred to issue substitute checks may, in the case of checks issued on account of public-debt obligations and transactions regarding the administration of banking and currency laws, be issued without limitation of time.

"(b) A bond of indemnity shall not be required under subsection (a) of this section in any of the following classes of cases except as hereinafter provided: (1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner or holder and while the check was in the custody or control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of the Government Losses in Shipment Act; (2) if substantially the entire check is presented and surrendered by the owner or holder and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the check presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (3) if the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the original check is not negotiable and cannot be made the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (4) if the amount of the check is less than $50 and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the giving of a bond of indemnity would be an undue hardship to the owner or holder; (5) if the owner or holder is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government, or a Federal Reserve bank, and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the interests of the United States can be adequately safeguarded without such bond: Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of the provisions of this section.

"(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section, whenever any original check of the Post Office Department has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, the Postmaster General may authorize the issuance of a substitute, marked 'duplicate' and showing the number, date, and payee of the original check, before the close of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the original check was issued, upon the execution by the owner thereof of such bond of indemnity as the Postmaster General may prescribe: Provided, That when such original check does not exceed in amount the sum of $50 and the payee or owner is at the date of the application an officer or employee in the service of the Post Office Department, whether by contract, designation, or appointment, the Postmaster General may, in lieu of an indemnity bond authorize the issuance of a substitute check or warrant upon such an affidavit as he may prescribe, to be made before any postmaster by the payee or owner of an original check or warrant.

"(e) Substitutes, marked as hereinabove provided, drawn on the Treasurer of the United States, shall, after the lapse of the period fixed by section 21 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1235; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, sec. 725 (t)), for the payment of the original checks, be payable only as the original checks would be payable thereunder.

"(f) The term 'original check' wherever used in this section means any check, warrant, or other order for the payment of money, payable upon demand and not bearing interest, drawn by a duly authorized officer or agent of the United States on its behalf against an account or funds of the United States, whether upon a bank or upon the Treasurer or other paying officer of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States nor instruments issued by any corporation or other entity owned or controlled by the United States, whether in whole or in part, against such corporation's or entity's own funds; as used in subsection (c) of this section it means such an instrument drawn by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Post Office Department."

SEC. 11. This act may be cited as the "Government Losses in Shipment Act."

SEC. 12. This act shall become effective on July 1, 1937.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE SITE AND BUILDING, LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6899, to repeal the limitation on the sale price on the old post-office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso (45 Stat. 179) contained in section 1, title I, of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes", approved March 5, 1928, Public Law No. 93, Seventieth Congress (45 Stat. 162), requiring that the old post-office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky., shall not be sold for an amount less than $2,500,000, is hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point by including a further brief favorable report from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the bill just passed:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 4, 1937.

Hon. FRITZ G. LANHAM,
Chairman, Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to H. R. 6899 (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a bill to repeal the limitation on the sale price on the old post-office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky. That limitation, contained in the proviso (45 Stat. 179) in section 1, title I, of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes", approved March 5, 1928, Public, No. 93, Seventieth Congress (45 Stat. 162), requires that the property in question shall not be sold for an amount less than $2,500,000.

In the event of enactment of the bill, the property will become available for sale to the highest responsible bidder, after public advertisement under section 1 (c) of the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 885; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 304 (a)). Although possible purchasers have exhibited interest in the property, no one has been found willing to meet the minimum price of $2,500,000, which is believed to be excessive under present-day conditions. This Department is of the opinion that, if the minimum-price limitation be removed, it will be able to effect an advantageous sale.

In view of the foregoing, this Department recommends enactment of the bill. The bill is in accordance with the program of the President.

Very truly yours,

WAYNE C. TAYLOR,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

CONSENT CALENDAR

AMENDMENT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6049, to amend the Interstate Commerce Act.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 22 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act is amended by inserting after the word "guide" the words "or seeing-eye dog or other guide dog specially trained and educated for that purpose."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: In line 3, after the figures "22 (1)", insert "of part I."

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say this is merely a clarifying amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PREFERRED EMPLOYMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS BY THE GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3423, to provide for the preferred employment of American citizens by the Government of the United States.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'MALLEY reserved the right to object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same request the gentleman from California has just made. The author of the bill, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], is unable to be here today, and has asked me to request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I did not know the author was not here. I want to see this bill acted upon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

RENEWALS OF OATHS OF OFFICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6295, to dispense with unnecessary renewals of oaths of office by civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments of the United States who, upon original appointment, have subscribed to the oath of office required by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be required to renew the said oath because of any change in status so long as their services are continuous in the department or independent establishment in which employed, unless in the opinion of the head of the department or independent establishment the public interests require such renewal.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2708, to provide for the appointment of one additional United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment to this bill which I have discussed with some of my colleagues who are interested in the matter. The amendment is, at the end of the bill, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "who is now a resident of such district." The purpose of the amendment is to insure that whoever is appointed as judge will be a resident of the district. I do not know whether or not there is any objection to the amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the usual amendment which is attached to a bill creating a new judgeship?

Mr. DIES. I do not know anything about the usual amendment, but this provides what I am sure no one would object to, that whoever is appointed as judge shall be a resident of the district.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then, this restricts the appointment to the judgeship to a resident of the district?

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the objection to the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman is not objecting to the bill.

The SPEAKER. That was the question submitted. Does the gentleman object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

OPERATION OF LAWS WITH RESPECT TO EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4740, limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another one of those cases where Congress is asked to make an exception and give to an individual exemption from the law of the land. That law was enacted after most careful consideration, and its wisdom has never been questioned. I do not believe an exception should be made in this case. The facts of this case are that a gentleman by the name of Blair was employed as an assistant in the Office of the Attorney General. He became familiar with certain pending cases in which the Government is interested. The gentleman received as compensation for full-time work as such assistant the sum of $9,000 a year. For that consideration he handled the cases in question along with other duties. After serving for a time in the Department of Justice, the gentleman felt it wise to resign his position and enter into the private practice of the law in Washington. He came to Washington from the State of Missouri as an Assistant Attorney General.

After the gentleman had resigned his full-time position with the Department of Justice, it was discovered that his services to represent the Government in the particular cases involved was indispensable. Therefore this bill was introduced. The Attorney General sent a letter to the Committee on the Judiciary recommending enactment of this legislation. The gentleman to be the beneficiary of the law—and whose services he at least thinks are indispensable to the Government in these cases—was the only witness who appeared in behalf of the legislation. It developed from his testimony that if this bill becomes a law his compensation cannot exceed $10,000 a year, and his best judgment is that these Indian claims will require his attention for at least 3 or 4 years.

In other words, this is one of those cases where an attorney accepts employment in one of the departments of the Government. He becomes familiar with the work in the department. That experience undoubtedly adds to his value as an employee in the department. However, it seems to me that in these circumstances one should not be permitted to receive $9,000 a year for full time until he becomes familiar with a pending case, and resign and immediately seek reemployment with the same agency of the Government at a thousand-dollar-a-year increase for part-time work.

The practice of attorneys in the several departments of the Government obtaining information that might aid them in bringing suits against the Government was so common that the Congress recognized the necessity of passing a law placing a 2-year limitation on any of these Government employees practicing before the departments of the Government, the 2-year period to date from the time the employee severed his connection with the Government. This bill attempts to have that 2-year period run from the date Mr. Blair resigned as Assistant Attorney General and not from the date his service as special counsel in the instant case is concerned.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; to the able gentleman, a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WALTER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Department, after a great deal of persuasion, was able to convince this man that he owed a duty to the Government to continue in the prosecution of these oil cases. This man, perhaps, knows more about the subject than anyone else, and certainly more than anyone who is available at this time. The Department feels this is absolutely necessary in order to work out a proper solution of the matter and see that the best interests of the Government are preserved by the retention of this man in this position.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I appreciate the gentleman's position. I know about the letter that came from the Department. I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary giving consideration to this bill. I heard the testimony of the gentleman, Mr. Blair. I doubt not but that he is a good lawyer, but I do doubt that his service to the Government in this particular is indispensable. If he had been patriotically interested in these particular cases there was nothing to have prevented his remaining with the Government at $9,000 a year and looking after the cases. He seems most anxious to receive this retainer in these particular cases. I say retainer, and that is just what it amounts to. The Government should hire as little special counsel as possible, as long as we appropriate most adequately for the regular force in the Department of Justice. I do not care whether the man comes from Missouri, Ohio, or Michigan. I do not care what his politics is nor what his family connections are. There is an equitable law on the statute books and no exception should be made in this case. It is true that last year we passed a bill of this kind and it went through the House largely because that man was familiar with some Indian claim or some other claim, was a splendid old gentleman, and needed employment. It was hard to turn him down. He could work for the Government. He had been prosperous once but was not very prosperous at that time.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROMJUE. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that he has the cart before the horse. The statute we have against entering into practice prohibits the taking of cases against the Government. This measure provides that this gentleman may be retained to assist the Government, which is an entirely different matter; and I may say to the gentleman that the Department of Justice very strongly recommends the passage of this bill for the reason that this man who has been employed by the Government is in possession of a lot of information that will be helpful to the Government and they desire to employ him to assist the Government——

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I understand the contention.

Mr. ROMJUE. And I may say further that it has been the practice for some time to pass acts of this kind and, in fact, it has not been long since we passed an act of this very nature extending the same privilege to a gentleman from the gentleman's own State of Michigan, as I recall.

Mr. MICHENER. Who was it?

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Weidemann, I believe—at least it has been an unbroken policy of the Government to enact measures of this kind when the particular man's services are needed.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think so.

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; from the gentleman's own State.

Mr. MICHENER. I never heard of the case.

Mr. ROMJUE. Well, I do not question that and I do not question the good faith of my friend the gentleman from Michigan.

I want the House to have a clear understanding of what this bill is. This is not to give any man the privilege of suing the Government. This is to give the Government an opportunity to avail itself of this man's assistance, which the Government desires to do, and have him help defend the Government.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; someone else is appointed to take Mr. Blair's position as a $9,000 assistant, and Mr. Blair receives another assignment at $10,000 a year. The explicit purpose of this bill is to permit this man, who has resigned as an Assistant Attorney General, to be employed by the Government and receive $10,000 in one case, when he has resigned a position paying him $9,000 for his full time. It will extend his employment until the work is completed on this Indian case, I believe, and he thinks it will take about 4 years. The statute which makes it impossible for him to take cases against the Government until a period of 2 years has elapsed from the time he ceased to be employed by the Government, will have no bearing on this case if this bill is passed. Out of deference to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] I dislike to object, but I am opposed to making exceptions to laws of this kind under such circumstances.

Mr. ROMJUE. I will say to the gentleman that he is dealing with an assumption, because there has been no such contract.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I think I have opposed every one of these exceptions, regardless of where the proposed beneficiary comes from, and I shall continue. It is a matter of principle. This type of bill cannot go through by unanimous consent, whether the man comes from Michigan or Missouri. In short, this creates another $10,000 a year job if special counsel is to be employed and if this is the only man who can do the job.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT, TEXAS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 261 on the calendar, H. R. 2708, to provide for the appointment of one additional United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to H. R. 2708. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Texas", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "who is now a resident of such district."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire recognition?

Mr. DIES. Yes, I do; for a few minutes. The only purpose of this amendment is to insure that whoever is appointed the new judge of this district will be a resident of the judicial district. There should not be any objection to that. Certainly no one ought to be in favor of importing some outsider and making him a Federal judge in a district in which he has never lived, when there are plenty of lawyers capable of filling the position in the district.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the gentleman has made several speeches here asserting his faith in the President of the United States. The President will name the man who is to be the judge in this district and he must be confirmed by the Senate. Therefore, if the gentleman has faith in the President of the United States, he cannot believe that the President is going to do some carpetbagging down there and appoint some politician from outside.

Mr. DIES. I am not undertaking to legislate for the President or for the Senate. I am undertaking to incorporate a provision in the bill which will remove any temptation there might be for anyone to do otherwise.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am sure the gentleman has read the President's bill which provides for 44 roving judges hereinafter to be appointed.

Mr. DIES. I am not talking about the President's bill. I am talking about this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. The amendment that the gentleman proposes uses the word "now." The man must now reside in that particular district who is to be appointed. Suppose there should come a vacancy in that district later on and a man living there should be qualified but who is not now residing in that district. What then?

Mr. DIES. The "now" applies at all times, no matter if there is a vacancy.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. He has to be there now?

Mr. DIES. I do not think so.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. As I have followed the proceedings, unanimous consent has been secured to return to this bill, but there never has been unanimous consent secured for its consideration. I am wondering what the parliamentary situation is. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which was reported, but I do not recall that the Chair ever put the question of unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALTER. The unanimous consent was to return to the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. There is one parliamentary inquiry now pending.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order upon the inquiry. I assume that the House has taken action on the bill, and that if the House has taken any action on the bill it would be considered a waiver of the right of anyone to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is a correct one. The Chair cannot independently remember that he put the question, and he probably did not; but inasmuch as the House has agreed to receive the amendment, without objection, the Chair will hold that that is a waiver of any right to now interpose such objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. I was not interested except to find out the parliamentary situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is glad that the gentleman made the inquiry.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, the amendment as written contains the word "now." I ask unanimous consent to strike the word "now" from the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Texas", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "who is a resident of such district."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I have not any particular interest in this bill one way or the other. The judicial conference recommended that this district in Texas be given an additional judge, and I have decided that when the judicial conference makes such a recommendation I should have faith and confidence in their recommendation, because it is an impartial conference which makes no recommendation until they have made an exhaustive study of the conditions in the district. However, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] requiring that the judge be appointed from the district is such a revolutionary change in procedure that we should consider it very cautiously before we vote to adopt it. It may be true in this particular instance that there is some political reason why they should appoint a judge in this district and confine it to this district in order to prevent the appointment of some particular individual whom the President might have in mind.

It seems to me you gentlemen are getting very presumptuous when you try to tell the President of the United States, who is charged with responsibility in the appointment of Justices, that he shall confine himself for the first time in the history of the United States to any given area. I doubt not but that the President will find our action is such a limitation upon the Executive that he will veto the bill. In order to save the bill and carry out the recommendation of the judicial conference, I am contesting our right to restrict the appointment of this judge to this area, because the law gives the President the right and the authority to make these appointments, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. If you want to change your entire policy concerning the appointment of judges of district courts, the circuit courts of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States, this is the entering wedge. If this is adopted as a precedent, there is no reason why we should not say to the President of the United States, "You shall appoint the next Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States from the corporate limits of the city of Baltimore or Detroit or San Francisco."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has stated that this constitutes a precedent. Does the gentleman know of any other bill that has ever passed and become a law that had this restriction upon it?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not. That is why I think it will be a precedent, because I have been informed and I believe that no bill was ever passed by the Congress of the United States limiting the appointment of judges of any court in the United States to a given area.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Two years ago that very question was discussed in the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to a bill creating an additional judge for Georgia. The committee took the position that the limitation ought not be placed in any bill. At that time we examined very carefully the precedents and we found that there was no precedent for a limitation of this sort. The bill was then reported out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I contend that the Committee on the Judiciary has already found, as a matter of fact, that this does create a precedent, and that this House should act very cautiously in establishing precedents by which the appointment of members of the judiciary must come from a particular area.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. It seems to me that if this provision is good for this district in Texas it ought to be good for the country as a whole. It seems to me we ought to work out this policy for the country as a whole, and that the Committee on the Judiciary should give thought and consideration to the advisability of writing such a provision in each bill. It seems therefore that until such time as we do have a bill that will be general in its effect, applying to all districts throughout the United States, we ought not embark upon the policy through unanimous consent.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Can the gentleman conceive of any more appropriate time to make a beginning? What is there to keep this Congress from establishing a precedent? The argument that because they have not done it in the past does not hold. We have done a lot of things since I have been here that have not been done in the past.

Mr. BOILEAU. As far as I know, there have not been any judges appointed in these district courts from any other district. There might have been an isolated case here and there, but I suppose, acting in good faith, the President must have felt in such instances that there was necessity for changing the policy. I would like to ask the gentleman what the necessity for changing the policy is here?

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman recall that Judge Ritter moved from some other State into the State of Florida?

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe he was a resident of the State of Florida at the time he was appointed.

Mr. DIES. He had been there a short while.

Mr. BOILEAU. Under the gentleman's amendment, a man could be living in California now and if he moves over into Texas before the appointment is made he would be qualified?

Mr. DIES. Oh, no.

Mr. BOILEAU. Oh, yes. The gentleman has stricken out the word "now." A man could be living in California now and move to the district before the appointment is made, and he would be qualified.

Mr. DIES. Oh, no. The amendment provides that he shall be a resident of the district.

Mr. BOILEAU. But the gentleman struck out the word "now", so it means a resident of the district at the time of appointment. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the necessity for this particular amendment on this particular bill?

Mr. DIES. Because I think it is a good precedent for this House to establish.

The gentleman knows perfectly well that it is absolutely wrong to permit a judge from one district to be sent over into another district.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman as a matter of general policy. But I do not know of there being any violations of that general policy. In all the instances of which I know they do make the appointments out of the district unless there is no one qualified, unless there is some particular reason; and unless the gentleman has some particular reason in this instance I do not see why we should adopt this amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is a law that probably might be a precedent for the gentleman's amendment, although I do not think it should be adopted. In the last Congress the House and the Senate passed a bill which became a law, providing for the creation of a new judge in the State of Missouri, the judge to serve both in the eastern and western districts, wherever he was assigned by the circuit judges, depending upon the number of cases pending. That law provided that the judge could be appointed from either the eastern or the western district of Missouri. This amendment restricts the President's appointive power, and we know that Presidents have sent bills back to Congress that in any way restricted the power of the President to make an appointment. I do not know of any case where a President has appointed a man to serve in a United States district court that did not reside in the district.

Mr. BOILEAU. That was because there was an individual situation where a judge was being appointed to serve two different districts, and it provided that he might be appointed from either district rather than specifying that he should be appointed from one.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the gentleman from Minnesota was a stickler on precedent.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. DIES. I mean by that that the gentleman has been very progressive in his ideas. Now, if this is a good principle, if the Members of the House believe it is right, why not incorporate it in a bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is just exactly what I am trying to bring out. I think we should ask the Judiciary Committee to bring out a bill general in its policy, general in its application, a bill which establishes a policy rather than apply the principle in one district when it does not apply to the others.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas why he is so anxious to have this amendment on this bill. The bill will pass without the amendment. Why does the gentleman insist on this particular amendment? Will not the gentleman take the House into his complete confidence and tell us why?

Mr. DIES. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I understand that in that district there is a fear that some nonresident will be imported into this judicial district.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the gentleman has some particular man in mind I suppose.

Mr. DIES. And since many Members are satisfied that this is a good principle I see no reason why the gentleman objects to it.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that no Member of Congress would be eligible for this appointment. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. There is no question about that. I may say to the gentleman that I am not in any position to consider the appointment. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts on the subject of the constitutional question raised here by the amendment requiring the judge to be appointed from the district in which the vacancy exists. It is urged that that is beyond the powers granted by the Constitution. Congress has the power under the Constitution to fix the qualification of the judges for the district courts. It seems to me the question of residence is a question of qualification and that that brings it within the province of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not interested in that at the moment. I was very much interested in finding a Member who was getting a bill through insisting upon another amendment to it.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. THOM. The gentleman has not yet succeeded in finding out who the gentleman from Texas was interested in.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not intend to press the gentleman sufficiently to find out. The gentleman has answered enough for me to draw an inference, and I am not going to ask him to answer a question I would not want to have asked of myself were the positions reversed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 91.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-six Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 179, nays 132, not voting 127, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL STATISTICAL STUDIES BY DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1967, to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] explain just what the meaning of this bill is and some of the transactions that have been carried on under it?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, this is explained more fully in a letter written by the Secretary of Labor to Senator BLACK at the time the Senate took up consideration of this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What type of investigations are conducted?

Mr. CONNERY. The purpose of the bill is to extend the act of April 13, 1934, which authorized the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof. Since 1934 the Department has received approximately $9,000 from such representative organizations as the Joint Board of the Dress and Waist Makers Union, the Manufacturers Association, the National Manufacturing Association, the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, Ohio State University, and the New York State Department of Labor for making studies authorized under this act.

This permits them to get statistical figures upon payment by the person asking for the figures.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How is the cost arrived at that they are going to charge those who request this information? In other words, suppose I ask for a statistical study on wool production, we will say, on behalf of the growers of wool. Will they tell me in advance what I must pay for that study?

Mr. CONNERY. I think so. They will give you an estimated cost and then give you the figures which they collect, and you will pay for the collection of these statistics and all the expense that goes with it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I pay in advance?

Mr. CONNERY. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Suppose they make the study and then find I am unable to make the payment?

Mr. CONNERY. They have not had any trouble that way. The Secretary says:

I feel the Department of Labor has been rendering an extremely desirable service which has not required any additional expense, and I earnestly recommend that authorization to render this service be extended.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Are these benefits limited to big corporations, trade associations, and such as that?

Mr. CONNERY. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Or are they subject to use by private individuals?

Mr. CONNERY. By private individuals.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A farmer, for instance?

Mr. CONNERY. Usually a private individual does not ask for this information. It is organizations that want to know about wages, hours, and this thing or that thing. Some of the statistics the Department has right at hand, and some they have to go out and get. The organization seeking the information pays for the whole thing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Since the original act was passed there have been only $9,000 of income?

Mr. CONNERY. Since 1934 the Department has received approximately $9,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. About $3,000 a year?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. There evidently has not been a great demand for this service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me the cost of securing such legislation, setting up machinery to carry it on, and so forth, is a great deal.

Mr. CONNERY. They do not have to set up the machinery. It is already there. This is to help manufacturers or labor organizations and others and is a service the Department will render for whoever pays for it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield,

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The Department already has its contacts for getting their own statistical information. When an association or a union wants additional information that Department can sometimes secure it by a series of letters, if the organization is willing to pay the bill. I think it is a good work.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman have considerable confidence in this work?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; I know what they have done in a number of instances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 582), as amended by the act approved April 11, 1935 (49 Stat. 154), and the authority therein conferred shall be, and hereby is, extended until April 13, 1939.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEADS CORPORATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3058, for the relief of former employees of the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a pretty big subject. I wish there was some member of the committee here who could clarify some of the provisions of this bill. If there is not a member of the committee present at this time who can explain the bill, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT FORT BLISS, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 224, to authorize an appropriation for the purpose of establishing a national cemetery at Fort Bliss, Tex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 to establish a national cemetery at Fort Bliss, Tex.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4582, to amend the act approved August 4, 1919, as amended, providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind", approved August 4, 1919, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That for the purpose of enabling the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to it, in addition to the permanent appropriation of $10,000 made in the act entitled 'An act to promote the education of the blind,' approved March 3, 1879, as amended, the sum of $115,000, which sum shall be expended in accordance with the requirements of said act to promote the education of the blind."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1902, to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SEVENTH WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS AND EXPOSITION

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 365) authorizing Federal participation in the Seventh World's Poultry Congress and Exposition to be held in the United States in 1939.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That pursuant to section 2 of Public Resolution No. 113, approved June 20, 1936 (49 Stat. 1568), authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the World's Poultry Science Association an invitation to hold the Seventh World's Poultry Congress and Exposition in the United States in 1939, and to extend an invitation to foreign governments to participate in and be represented by delegates and exhibits in such congress and exposition, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the expenses of such meeting, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses within the United States (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; official cards; printing and binding; government exhibits; entertainment; hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, after line 17, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of State is authorized to transfer to any department or independent establishment of the Government with the consent of the head thereof any part of the funds appropriated pursuant to this act for direct expenditure by such department or establishment for the purposes specified in this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF ANTIETAM

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 102, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WELCH. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I wonder if the gentleman is fully acquainted with the background and the merits of this legislation? The gentleman may perhaps be governed by considerations which would apply to other bills on this subject but do not apply to this bill.

Mr. WELCH. My purpose in objecting was to get further information.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. May I say to the gentleman this bill concerns the proposed commemoration of the Battle of Antietam, with which, of course, the gentleman must be familiar, one of the great and vital battles of the Civil War.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. If I can answer it, I will do so gladly.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact there has been a tremendous number of abuses with reference to the coinage of these 50-cent pieces all over the country? Committees have been appointed which have made large profits by promoting the sale of these coins, and this has become almost a public scandal wherever it has been done.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I think perhaps that was the consideration which moved the objector. However, that consideration does not apply to this bill, may I assure the House. In this particular instance no racket is or can be connected with the disposition of the coins. A special commission has been appointed to administer the matter, of which a Representative from the State of Vermont is a member, and of which I myself also happen to be a member. Not a single one of these coins will get into the hands of the profit mongers.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am embarrassed by the fact that I am in the first place a coin collector and opposed to this racket in coin collecting. No one is more opposed than I am to such a practice, and no man could be more opposed to it.

In the second place, I am a member of the Antietam Battle Commission, and I may assure the Members of the House that to fail to accord to the Battle of Antietam the recognition that is its due as the outstanding field battle of the war would be a serious error.

Mr. Speaker, heroism, patriotism, and valor wrote their names on history's page, all over the sanguinary field of Antietam, strewn with nearly 21,000 dead and wounded men—3,620 dead bodies North and South, and a total of 17,365 wounded men.

There engaged in mortal conflict 179 regiments of infantry, 14½ regiments of cavalry, 71 batteries of artillery, for the Confederates; 184 regiments of infantry, 15 regiments of cavalry, 50 batteries of artillery for the North. Rightly referred to as a "Hell of Artillery"—Antietam—the greatest single battle of the Civil War, 14 hours of carnage, a field sprinkled with the blood of brothers; 2,108 Union dead and 9,459 wounded; 3,500 Confederate dead, 16,399 wounded.

A sacrifice never equaled nor excelled in military history. A battleground historic in the annals of warfare. In fact, the greatest single battle of the war. Fourteen hours of carnage. From the standpoint of the military strategy employed, may I say that the strategy used at Antietam is unique and outstanding. McClellan's plan of attack used at Antietam was made, and is, historic, for the same strategy was used and followed by Lee at Gettysburg and by Marshal Oyama in the great Battle of Mukden. Antietam—of course, it is entitled to the recognition provided for by this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman defer that request for a moment?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill may bo over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Of course, I would like to object to that course, but I am in a very delicate situation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] may proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. If the gentlemen will consult the report, I think they will feel reassured. The committee has not overlooked that circumstance, and in the report has stated bluntly that the report on this bill and the one following it from the State of Virginia, are not to be taken as indicative of any policy on the part of the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the committee had in mind that this bill passed the House during the last Congress and a small amendment was added in the Senate. They failed in the closing days of the Congress to agree to the amendment and therefore the bill was never sent to the White House. For this reason the committee agreed to report the bill favorably, taking into consideration the fact that Congress itself had provided for a commission, of which the gentleman from Vermont is a member, appointed by the Speaker or by the President, for the Congress to participate in this celebration. This was brought out in committee when the bill was favorably reported.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Will this cost the Government of the United States any amount of money?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Not a cent whatever.

Mr. DONDERO. I think we ought to commemorate the reddest day in the Civil War by coining these 50-cent pieces.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I certainly think so.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say for the benefit of the membership of the House that, in addition to what the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Missouri have said, three amendments were placed on this bill and the bill that follows it on the calendar putting the sale of these coins under the direction of the Director of the Mint, so that they may try to eliminate any of the so-called racketeering in these coins that some of the Members have had the impression has been going on in the last 2 or 3 years; and because these two bills were passed last year by the two Houses but did not become law for the reasons explained by the gentleman from Missouri, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures reported them again at this session.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me so that I may ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not true that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures has practically refused to report any other bills, but has made an exception in this case for the reason the gentleman has assigned?

Mr. PARSONS. That is true; until we can file the regulations that the Treasury has asked us to file, so that all Members may have an opportunity to study the regulations and have their bills conform to them in the future.

Mr. WOODRUM. So these two bills are the only bills reported by the committee?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee did agree to report a third bill, introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] but action was taken at such a late date that the chairman of the committee advised me that the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] did not desire his bill reported, and for that reason it was not reported.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. As a Member interested in one of the bills turned down, I hope this bill passes because the experience that will result from the passage of this bill will help the rest of us who have bills pending before the committee.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. Why is the number of coins limited to 50,000 in Senate bill 102?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It was thought that some limit ought to be placed upon the number of such coins and this is also the view of the Treasury.

Mr. CITRON. If 50,000 commemorative coins are not sufficient for the demand in this country, a situation arises such as has often occurred in the past. While I desire to commemorate the Battle of Antietam, nevertheless I must agree with many of my constituents who have written me, complaining about what we have done in the past by limiting the number of such coins and helping to create a form of racketeering in this country. A few people obtain a large quantity of these coins, thus creating a scarcity on the market and forcing prices upward. I do not believe we should pass legislation which can be utilized by some people in such a manner. I believe such legislation should be surrounded with safeguards to protect us against these evils.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to the bill sponsored by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill S. 102?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, was the request for consideration of the bill or to return to the bill in order to ask that it may go over without prejudice?

The SPEAKER. Objection was made to the original request, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] asked unanimous consent to return to the bill, and that request was granted. The Chair then submitted the question of whether or not the bill would be considered, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] objected, and only one objection is required under the rule.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES, CITY OF NORFOLK, VA.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 4) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk, Va., land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUES OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN AND J. STERLING MORTON

The Clerk called Senate Concurrent Resolution 12, accepting the statues of William Jennings Bryan and J. Sterling Morton, presented by the State of Nebraska and placed in the Capitol of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of this Congress be presented to the Governor and through him to the people of the State of Nebraska for the statues of William Jennings Bryan and J. Sterling Morton, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of our country; that these works of art are accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned to places in the Capitol of the United States already set aside by Congress for the statues of eminent citizens; and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the Governor of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION, UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 363, to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman kindly explain how much money is required here?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, this is the $150,000 additional that was taken out of the original appropriation the last time the bill was under consideration. The amount of the appropriation authorized last year in a similar bill was $350,000. Inasmuch as the full amount was not necessary during the term last year, $150,000 was taken out of it, making the amount $200,000. This is asking for the additional $150,000 that is necessary to continue the Commission for this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why should the Commission be continued for another year?

Mr. BLOOM. We have gone ahead and we have laid out our plans. If we do not go ahead now, all of the work that we have done up to this time would be wasted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How long is it going to continue; how many years?

Mr. BLOOM. Until April 30, 1939.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. This is the celebration of the Constitution.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe, after the way that they are trying to tear down the Supreme Court and the laws of the land, that we will last that long, so that we can celebrate the Constitution of the United States next year?

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. Does this appropriation include enough to enable the printing of those booklets which the gentleman from New York has sent out to some of the Members of Congress? I understand it will take about $150,000 to print them.

Mr. BLOOM. No. There would have to be an additional appropriation if the House should find it necessary to give each Member 1,000 or more of these books. You would have to appropriate specifically for that.

Mr. KRAMER. I have introduced a resolution to give each Member of Congress 2,500 additional copies without any expense. I sent out a few of these to the schools in my district and I have received some very fine reports. They say that the large volumes on the shelves of the libraries about the Constitution are not used, and this is very readily and easily understood, because the matter is handled in such a manner that it can very readily give the information in respect to the Constitution to the pupils of the schools.

Mr. BLOOM. The Commission would be very pleased to see to it that each Member gets a sufficient number of books, if we have sufficient money with which to do it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY CELEBRATION COMMISSION

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 380, to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand this bill carries a revolving fund. How much money is involved in that?

Mr. SECREST. Five thousand dollars is involved, but it will not be reappropriated unless the Committee on Appropriations of the House deems it advisable to do so.

Mr. TABER. The bill does not say that, does it?

Mr. SECREST. Yes; the bill says that.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman call our attention to the particular language of the bill that says that the money shall be appropriated in the regular way so that there will be a check-up on these things?

Mr. SECREST. The bill provides:

Sums received from the sale of such published material are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the continued publication and sale of such material.

Mr. TABER. If it had said "may be appropriated", that would be all right. The Appropriations Committee would not have to perform any function with that language. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MARKER FOR JEFFERSON DAVIS HIGHWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1468, authorizing the erection in the District of Columbia of a suitable terminal marker for the Jefferson Davis National Highway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FORT NIAGARA MILITARY RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3123, to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., a nonprofit membership corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, that portion of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., known as Old Fort Niagara, including all grounds, buildings, and fortifications pertaining thereto which have been restored and rehabilitated by Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., and the United States of America, for the purposes of maintaining and operating there an international patriotic shrine and historical institute, together with such additional adjacent areas and/or buildings as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be or become necessary for such purposes, for such term or terms and subject to such conditions as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, shall be advisable: Provided, however, That the consideration for any lease executed pursuant to this act shall be the maintenance by said Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., of said premises in accordance with the terms of such lease, and every such lease shall reserve to the United States of America the right to resume possession and occupy said premises, or any portion thereof, whenever in the judgment of the President an emergency exists that requires the use and appropriation of the same for public defense.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "America", strike out the remainder of the line, all of line 2, and the words "historical institute", in line 3; line 5, after the word "necessary", strike out "for such purposes"; line 12, after the word "shall", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "be revocable at will by the Secretary of War."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPACE IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS FOR EMPLOYEES' CREDIT UNIONS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6287) to provide for space in Federal buildings for employees' credit unions.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should we jump over all the other bills on the calendar and take up this particular bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], concurred in by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], that this was a bill that should be acted upon at once. Unless that were done some disadvantage would be done to the public service. That is the only reason the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. What is the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. These are Federal credit unions which have been occupying space in various Federal buildings. Six months ago the Comptroller General ruled there was no authority of law for this, and they gave them until June 1, which was the deadline, and the time has been extended pending congressional action.

Mr. SNELL. What does this bill seek to do?

Mr. McCORMACK. This permits the allocation of space in Federal buildings, which they have been occupying for a number of years, until the recent ruling by the Comptroller General.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say to the gentleman from New York this is favorably reported by all the departments, and this will be left within the discretion of the departments if space is available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon application by any Federal credit union, a majority of the shares of which are subscribed for by officers and employees of the Federal Government, to the officer or agency of the United States charged with the allotment of space in the Federal building in the community or district in which the union does business, such officer or agency shall allot adequate space in such building to such credit union. No rent shall be charged for the use of such space, but a reasonable charge shall be collected for heat, light, care, and services furnished to the union.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Federal Credit Union Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 21. Upon application by any credit union organized under State law or by any Federal credit union organized in accordance with the terms of this act, the membership of which is composed exclusively of Federal employees, which application shall be addressed to the officer or agency of the United States charged with the allotment of space in the Federal buildings in the community or district in which said credit union or Federal credit union does business, such officer or agency may in his or its discretion allot space to such credit union if space is available without charge for rent or services.'"

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 8, after the word "employees", insert "and members of their families."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled 'Federal Credit Union Act.'"

OIL CONSERVATION

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, with House amendments, insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. COLE of Maryland, Mr. PETTENGILL, Mr. KELLY of Illinois, Mr. MAPES, and Mr. WOLVERTON.

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7363) to continue the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for 2 years, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby continued until July 1, 1939, and until such date is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on the date of the enactment of this act. All provisions of existing law relating to the availability of funds for carrying out any of the functions of such Administration are hereby continued until July 1, 1939, except that the date specified in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, prior to which, in the determination of the Administrator, a project can be substantially completed is hereby changed from "July 1, 1938" to "July 1, 1939", and except that the amount of funds which the Administrator, upon the direction of the President, is authorized to use for grants from moneys realized from the sale of securities is hereby changed from $300,000,000 to $340,000,000: Provided, That after the date of the enactment of this act no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works prior to such date: Provided further, That in addition to the funds available for administrative expenses for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, not to exceed $3,000,000 of the foregoing amount of $340,000,000 may be used by such Administration for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a brief statement from the Public Works Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. I also ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, this bill—not an appropriation bill as we all understand one—a legislative bill which for some reason unknown to me was referred to the Appropriations Committee—carries out as we believe the tentative understanding, the informal understanding, which was had during the consideration of the relief bill; in fact, it is more liberal than that understanding. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that since the beginning of this program and the creation of the Public Works Administration, and as of March 31 last, 9,298 non-Federal projects have been taken care of at an estimated cost of $2,422,000,000. Out of this total cost the Federal Government has allotted $1,475,000,000 of which $724,000,000 are grants and $751,000,000 are loans; so this has been a large and a comprehensive program, and one which some of us think has been entirely justified.

The purpose of this bill, very briefly stated, is that it extends the life of the Public Works Administration for 2 years. It permits the Administrator to go ahead with the projects on which the P. W. A., as we saw fit to denominate it, was morally obligated; that is, that type of project where there have been bond elections or where there had been legislation making money available. It takes care of all these cases. In addition, it takes care of all so-called hazardous school projects. You will remember that when we discussed this matter the other day the President promised those gentlemen with whom he talked that he would take care of schools that were fire hazards. This bill takes care of all those schools that are fire hazards and in addition those that are regarded as a hazard to health.

We give the Public Works Administration authority to use $40,000,000 additional for grants which gives them an unobligated total of $132,000,000 for grants. We continue the power to allocate funds for loans in the sum of $124,000,000, which amply takes care of their loan needs through the revolving fund, and we give them for administration in addition to the $10,000,000 carried in the independent offices bill, the sum of $3,000,000 for administrative expenses; so, in the judgment of the committee, after conferring with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER], to whom I shall yield time in a few moments, the committee feels that it has brought you a bill which has been fairly considered in the House. It has been debated here for days. We feel that we have brought you a bill which liberally carries out the tentative understanding had when the so-called Beiter amendment to the relief bill was withdrawn.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement that this bill makes provision for completing all of the school projects that already have been approved by the P. W. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in addition to those which had already been approved, it included all school projects where there was a fire hazard and it had been so declared?

Mr. WOODRUM. If the applications were on file with the Public Works Administration.

Mr. MAY. Suppose application should be made to the P. W. A. by a community that has been building a schoolhouse.

Mr. WOODRUM. That does not come in.

Mr. MAY. That it is in process of consideration but has not yet been approved.

Mr. WOODRUM. It does not come in. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that 3,000 projects of various kinds already have been approved by the Public Works Administration. It would require $500,000,000 to take care of all of them. The door has to be shut somewhere.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Suppose it involves a municipal project where a tax levy has been made and the project approved.

Mr. WOODRUM. If it is a school project, it is taken care of in this bill.

May I say this before my time is gone, that I pay my respects to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER], who has been so much interested in this matter and put so much time on it, and to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who has introduced a bill. These gentleman have worked laboriously, and I think each Member of the House and our constituents owe them a debt of gratitude for their industry in bringing this about and making it possible for these worthy and justifiable projects to be completed.

Some inquiries have been made of me as to the proviso on page 2, lines 7 to 11, inclusive, of the bill, which reads as follows:

Provided, That after the date of the enactment of this act no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works prior to such date.

In response to these inquiries I am inserting the following letter from Colonel Hackett, the Assistant Administrator:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATOR OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, June 7, 1937.

Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WOODRUM: In response to your telephone request, the examining divisions of the Public Works Administration have completed their examination of practically all projects that have been received in Washington.

Consequently, the provision in H. R. 7363, lines 7 to 11, inclusive, on page 2, would include all projects contained in the seven lists enumerated below, as they will surely be examined before the date of enactment of this act.

	Loans	Grants
List no. 1. Elections subsequent to June 16, 1933 (approved projects)	$4, 956, 200	$37, 919, 893
List no. 2. Elections prior to June 16, 1933 (approved projects)	364, 000	9, 870, 855
List no. 3. Elections subsequent to June 16, 1933 (which are not finally approved)	785, 000	9, 019, 539
List no. 4. Elections prior to June 16, 1933 (which are not finally approved)		1, 090, 933
List no. 5. Legislative appropriations, approved projects	131, 000	6, 738, 980
List no. 6. Legislative appropriations, not finally approved	2, 231, 000	7, 388, 207
List no. 7. Hazardous school projects	10, 441, 965	60, 000, 000
Total	18, 909, 165	132, 028, 407

All other pending projects now on file in the central office of the Public Works Administration will also have been examined by the examining divisions and placed in an approved or disapproved status before the date of enactment of this act.

There are numerous other applications now on file in the State offices of the Public Works Administration that have not yet been received by the central office. These will not be forwarded to Washington for inclusion in the list of projects now pending before the Public Works Administration.

Sincerely yours,

HORATIO B. HACKETT,
Assistant Administrator.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I regret this important bill has been brought up for consideration under suspension of the rules without any opportunity to offer amendments and with debate limited to 20 minutes on each side. There are two amendments which I should like to have offered, one giving preference to American citizens over aliens in employment by the Public Works Administration, and the other to give preference to American veterans of the World War and the Spanish War. In view of the fact this important legislation is brought up under suspension of the rules, it is impossible to offer any amendments.

This raises another issue. Under the leadership of the distinguished Speaker of the House and the distinguished majority leader, there has been great latitude in permitting Members of the House to speak by unanimous consent. In the many years I have been a Member of Congress I do not recall any Speaker or majority leader who has been so generous and liberal in permitting individual Members to speak by unanimous consent. I regret, however, that a change in this salutary practice has been proclaimed here today, under which individual Members cannot obtain unanimous consent to speak except as subject to other legislation which may be called up to prevent them from speaking.

Mr. Speaker, the only remaining right the minority has is the right of protest. Let us say, vocal protest. The small Republican minority has not sufficient votes to control legislation. The only constitutional right we have as Members of Congress is to speak upon the floor of the House, criticize, protest, and express our views. Now it is proposed that Members will not be permitted to speak by unanimous consent except subject to being cut off by all kinds of so-called privileged measures. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asked unanimous consent for time to speak on any day during the next 2 weeks. His request was denied.

I am not concerned with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is going to say. I do not know and I do not care, but he is a Member of the House and he has the right to be heard. That is his constitutional right. Over in the Senate of the United States a Senator can be heard at any time and speak out of order, which is one of the reasons that the Senate is so powerful and has the prestige and reputation for liberal debate and discussion of current issues.

I hope the leadership of the House on the Democratic side will not enforce the proposed restriction but will permit the greatest latitude and liberality in upholding the dignity and reputation of the House of Representatives for freedom of speech and freedom of debate. This is a serious question and one that can be determined only by the House itself, as the Speaker stated.

We have only one more appropriation bill to be presented under which Members may speak in general debate. For this reason it is all the more important that individual Members on both sides may have the right to be heard by unanimous consent. There are Members who prepare their speeches in advance, who write them out and want to be heard at the time they get permission to address the House. I hope the House itself will see to it that the Democratic majority leader will not refuse consent to individual Members, particularly those on the minority side, when they want to be heard. That is not only their constitutional right but the right to criticize and protest is an inherent and essential power for any minority. Any attempt to deprive the minority of that right undermines the prestige of the House as a deliberative body, and any attempt to gag an individual Member abridges freedom of speech and interferes with freedom of debate, which are essential under our free institutions and American system of government based upon our three separate and independent branches of government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is before the House for the extension of the Public Works Administration for 2 years for liquidating purposes seeks in the utmost good faith to carry out the agreement that was reached last week when differences were composed on a basis of mutual understanding.

Essential features of that understanding were that the President will rescind the Executive order limiting P. W. A. grants to the cost of relief labor on a project plus 15 percent, and that all projects that have been started will be completed in accordance with the original method of procedure where there is a moral obligation on the part of the United States Government to finish them.

While this is a liquidating bill it is not a harsh and untenable form of liquidation that is here proposed. The liquidation that is proposed in this bill is most generous and liberal. In some respects in its meticulous regard for the rights of applicants and in order to guarantee that no injustice shall be done, it goes beyond the verbal agreement that was reached in the conference between our majority leader, Mr. RAYBURN, and the President, and beyond bounds that might reasonably have been expected.

This is notably true in reference to schoolhouse projects. The scope of the understanding when it reached our subcommittee was that in respect to schoolhouses the language of the bill should include those school projects where a fire hazard is involved. Now, there are other hazards affecting schools besides fire hazards, and in the final determination we have made provision for all school applications. The Public Works Administration informs me that there are 1,171 of these applications pending, about half of which involve fire hazard.

The Public Works Administration advises that the school applications where fire hazard is the incentive of the application will require $35,000,000 in P. W. A. grants and $4,500,000 in P. W. A. loans, while the nonfire hazard applications will require $45,000,000 in grants and $7,000,000 in loans, so that the Appropriation Committee's liberal interpretation of the agreement in respect to schools means that more money will be paid out on non-fire-hazard school projects than on projects where fire hazard is involved.

Another circumstance illustrating the liberality of this bill as a liquidating measure is in its wide coverage of projects in which bond elections have been held. It was the wish of the President and was a part of the understanding that was reached when differences were composed that in every instance where there is any moral obligation to carry out the proceedings that were initiated by a bond election the Government shall not fail to do its part.

So far 803 bond elections have been held to qualify for P. W. A. funds, and of these, 497 were held prior to January 1, 1937. The act creating the Public Works Administration was signed and became effective on June 16, 1933. It is an interesting fact that 54 of the 803 bond elections referred to were held prior to June 16, 1933. In other words, they were held before the P. W. A. was in existence. Obviously these bond elections were not held for the purpose of qualifying for P. W. A. funds, for when they took place the P. W. A. was not in existence. When the P. W. A. sprang into being the various communities that had ordered these bond elections saw a chance to qualiy for Federal grants, and so switched their plans as to enable them to qualify for Government funds to pay for 45 percent of the cost of their projects.

What is the status of these 54 projects as regards the factor of "moral obligation"? It could hardly be said that there is any moral obligation to comply with a bond election that was held before the law creating the Public Works Administration was enacted.

It may be said, furthermore, that there is some doubt about the moral obligation resting upon the Government to carry out some of the other bond elections, particularly some of the 306 that have been held since January 1 last, when it was known to all men that P. W. A. was on a retrenchment basis. As far back as March 11, 1936, Col. Horatio B. Hackett, Acting Public Works Administrator, put all State directors and division heads of P. W. A. on notice that following that date new applications must be accepted only with the understanding that there was no commitment on the part of P. W. A. for the allocation of funds. I quote his letter as sent out at that time to State directors and division heads:

P. W. 51768

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1936.

Letter of instructions no. 52
Subject: Acceptance of new applications

In the future you are authorized to accept new applications submitted by applicants with the understanding that such acceptances carry no commitment on the part of the Public Works Administration for the allocation of funds.

State directors will not solicit applications, as the Public Works Administration has no funds for allocations to projects at this time.

Applicants must be informed fully that we are accepting these applications for their convenience and that they will be examined In the State offices and sent to Washington but that no assurance can be given that favorable action will be taken or funds allocated.

HORATIO B. HACKETT,
Assistant Administrator.

I only cite these facts to show that in allowing all school projects and all applications based on bond elections to come under the wire and qualify for P. W. A. funds your Committee on Appropriations certainly has not been narrow and parsimonious in its attitude but has been most liberal in framing this bill in a way that will do injury to none and justice to all. In other words, as stated before, we have made every effort to carry out in good faith and with the most liberal interpretations the agreement that was reached in regard to the disposition of this entire matter.

As stated heretofore, this bill will provide money to carry out all bond elections and all school projects, and it also provides money for all projects for which appropriations have been made by State legislatures. These "legislative" projects, so-called, will require $14,000,000 in Federal grants and $2,300,000 in Federal loans.

Obviously, with the return of better times and with the necessity of retrenchment so apparent, there is an imperative obligation resting upon Congress to close out the Public Works Administration as soon as it can be done in justice to all. I commend to your thoughtful consideration the following quotation from the report on this bill, which, I believe, embraces sound philosophy:

There has been great demand and pressure from many sources in the United States for continuation of the Public Works Administration and the making of grants. Naturally there would be and will be such a sentiment so long as the Federal Government continues to give to communities a substantial proportion of the cost of their public improvements, but with the return of more normal conditions of business and a continuing and improving prosperous condition in all sections of the country the Federal Government must, of necessity, as soon as possible, withdraw from this emergency field. With the funds provided in the bill, the United States will be able to discharge all of the obligations that any community can reasonably expect in connection with Public Works Administration activities.

At the present time the Public Works Administration has 4,323 applications on hand which, if allowed, would involve the expenditure of Federal funds in the sum of $933,000,000—$643,000,000 for grants and $290,000,000 for loans. To qualify for these grants on a 45–55 basis, the States, counties, and other subdivisions sponsoring the projects would have to bond themselves in the stupendous sum of $785,000,000, thus enormously increasing their burden of debt and taxation. If, in addition to the grants, the loans that have been applied for were allowed, the debt of the local communities would be swollen by over a billion dollars.

The files of the Public Works Administration are stuffed with applications covering almost every conceivable kind of project, some sound and others fantastic. It is perfectly apparent that the Government cannot go on and on in this kind of activity. The bill before us terminates it in a gradual, humane, and proper way. It is my belief that it is a wholesome measure, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Does this bill provide an absolute dead line on new applications not heretofore filed?

Mr. TABER. I think perhaps the best way I could answer that would be to read for the information of the membership the provisos.

Mr. PETTENGILL. This is a matter the entire House is interested in, and it ought to be a matter of record whether there is a dead line or not with respect to schoolhouses.

Mr. TABER. I will read the provisos, if I may be permitted to do so; then I shall attempt to answer the gentleman's question specifically.

On page 2 there is this proviso:

Provided, That after the date of the enactment of this act, no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works prior to such date: Provided further, That in addition to the funds available for administrative expenses for such Administration in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, not to exceed $3,000,000 of the foregoing amount of $340,000,000 may be used by such Administration for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1938.

According to my understanding of the first proviso, only those projects which already have been approved by the P. W. A., for which bond issues have been voted, and in addition a small number of projects comparatively amounting to about $40,000,000, are included. This covers schools where there is a fire or health hazard and for which applications have already been submitted and approved tentatively by the P. W. A., but such bond issues have not yet been arranged. The whole amount runs approximately $132,000,000.

It is the understanding of the Administration—and I get this from the majority leader, the Budget, and representatives of the P. W. A. who appeared before the committee—that this activity shall cease with the expenditure of the $132,000,000, and in addition to that there will be required certain funds for taking up of bonds of municipalities and localities where the localities determine to float their bonds through the P. W. A.—and most of them do not. There are a few of them that have, and the authorities themselves estimate very little loss as a result of those bonds.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. My understanding is all schools that have been approved but where the money has not been available will come under this, provided there is a fire hazard in the school, or unsanitary or unhealthful conditions.

Mr. TABER. That is, providing the application is now pending and is contained within a certain list of projects, which total about $40,000,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Must it be in that list of projects?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes. Only a certain group of projects are included, as I understand it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But not the special schools. They are not named?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; that is my understanding.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is that list available?

Mr. TABER. I understand it is. I have not the list myself, but I understand it is available.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What happens to additional funds coming into the revolving fund from the sale of municipal bonds now in the portfolio?

Mr. TABER. Anything not required for obligations now existing or existing as a result of the act which we have before us reverts to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire whether it is estimated that projects already approved amount to the $300,000,000 provided in this bill?

Mr. TABER. No. The projects which are already approved, which this act attempts to cover, amount probably to approximately $275,000,000 of which the Government would make grants of $132,000,000. The object of changing the limitation of $250,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can now hold at one time of the bonds which the P. W. A. has taken over from localities is to provide the funds for operation under this bill. There will be grants amounting to only $132,000,000 in all under this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to state that only $132,000,000 will be provided by reason of the enactment of this legislation?

Mr. TABER. One hundred and thirty-two million dollars of grants under the 45 percent rule, but no one can tell what amount of bonds there may be. It may run to $150,000,000, because 55 percent can be bonds. It will not, however, because a very large percentage of the communities float their own bonds directly to local people.

Mr. DOWELL. Independent of this legislation?

Mr. TABER. Independent of this legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman mentioned fire hazards and health hazards. As I understand the measure, it matters not how great the fire hazard or health hazard may be, if the application is not already in and is not included in a certain group of projects it would be out of the picture under this bill.

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. As I understand it, the $340,000,000 is not here appropriated, but will come out of the $1,500,000,000 we appropriated the other day?

Mr. TABER. The $340,000,000 may mean nothing at all. This is simply a raising of the limitation of $250,000,000 which now exists as to the amount of securities which the R. F. C. may buy from the P. W. A. and hold at one time. Frankly I do not believe the R. F. C. would have to hold more than the $250,000,000 at any one time to carry out the purposes of this bill, because the R. F. C. has been accustomed to dispose of a very large percentage of the bonds it takes over from the P. W. A. immediately, so that it has never been anywhere near the limit of $250,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Can the gentleman tell us how much of the billion and a half we appropriated in the relief bill could be taken for the purposes of this bill?

Mr. TABER. I suppose the President could allot the funds for certain purposes in connection with this bill, but not directly. He would have to create a set-up under the W. P. A. to construct buildings. It could not be just exactly as this bill would operate, or just exactly as the P. W. A. would operate, as I understand it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am sure the Members of the House would be very much indebted to the gentleman if the gentleman could give information as to how much could possibly be taken out of the billion and a half for this purpose, so that we may have some idea of how much could be left for W. P. A.

Mr. TABER. The President could order the W. P. A. to construct buildings similar to those things the P. W. A. has done to the full extent of the billion and a half. The way the bill was passed in the House it is entirely up to the President to do as he pleases with it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Do the two bills have any relation one to the other?

Mr. TABER. They do not.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. There is one thing which is not quite clear to me under the provision with reference to the time applications will be barred from further consideration. In other words, those which are not approved at the time this law goes into effect or those which have not already been approved cannot be considered? There are a number of projects, I understand, where bond issues have already been voted but which are not yet in an approved status.

Mr. TABER. My understanding—and I may not be correct, but I think I am—is that where bond issues have been approved this takes care of them absolutely.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, they are supposed to have approved them before the date this law goes into effect to get the benefit from them?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Where financial arrangements have already been completed, although not through bond issues, would such projects be covered?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; absolutely. There is no question about that, if their application is filed in this group over at the P. W. A. offices.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What is the gentleman's opinion under this proviso with reference to this situation? An application was made to construct a project under the W. P. A. a year or two ago, and was approved. Bonds of the municipality were issued. Subsequently they have concluded they can build the project more cheaply under P. W. A., and P. W. A. has taken jurisdiction of it, though I believe they have not finally approved it. However, the municipality had issued bonds when the W. P. A. had approved the project.

Mr. TABER. I do not know that I could say anything about that situation, which is evidently an arrangement operating between the W. P. A. and the locality. I would have to know all about the facts before I could answer the gentleman. I am afraid I cannot attempt to answer it here on the floor.

Mr. HEALEY, Mr. FITZPATRICK, and Mr. THOMASON of Texas rose.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], and then I must take the rest of the time myself.

Mr. HEALEY. Do I understand correctly that only projects where bonds have been issued can be considered under this bill? In other words, projects which have been approved but which have not arrived at the stage of issuing bonds cannot be carried out under this bill?

Mr. TABER. Projects with reference to the schools which are in this selected list of schools, which have been approved, where there is a fire or health hazard involved, can be considered under this.

I feel that I must go along and say two or three things I had intended to say. As I understand, this bill is the price which is being paid by the Treasury for persuading the gentlemen who reversed their stand on the allotment of funds the other day to vote for absolute discretion on the part of the President in the so-called relief bill.

I want to call the attention of the House to two or three facts which exist at the present time as we are considering this bill. We carried in the bill which was passed here last Thursday one and a half billion dollars direct and what was told to us by the Budget was $223,000,000 of reappropriations. In addition to this, the head of the W. P. A., Mr. Hopkins, told us there was $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 that would be the balance left over in addition to what the Budget estimated, and the head of the Resettlement organization told us there would be something like $25,000,000 in addition to what the Budget estimated in that case. So the total amount carried in the bill last Tuesday and made avaliable was something like $1,770,000,000. These are rough figures.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman will recall that it was testified before our committee and reported in the hearings that a working balance of approximately the amount the gentleman mentions must be retained at the end of each fiscal year.

Mr. TABER. I think that is true.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. At the end of the coming fiscal year the same amount will have to be retained so that the amount actually provided by the relief bill as it passed the House was one and a half billion dollars. This charge was made so frequently and refuted so conclusively each time it was made during the debate on the relief bill that it has become trite.

Mr. TABER. The statement that the gentleman from Missouri has made would be correct if this were a continuing operation and as to a part of the funds, but for the fiscal year 1938 the major part of the two-hundred-and-seventy-odd million will be available absolutely for expenditure. In addition to that this bill carries $135,000,000, so that the total funds available for expenditure in 1938 that have so far been provided for the continuation of the current so-called relief items of the Government run approximately $1,900,000,000 instead of the $1,500,000,000 which has been talked about.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield right there?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no time remaining.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 1, the Members of the House who had previously voted to earmark for the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works $300,000,000 of the 1937 relief appropriation, accepted a compromise offered by the administration with the understanding that a bill would be immediately introduced to extend P. W. A. for 2 years and provide funds sufficient to finance or aid in the financing of all pending moral obligation projects and school projects to relieve hazardous conditions. In order to fulfill the conditions of the compromise I introduced, on June 1, a bill designed to bring about this end which was immediately referred to the Appropriations Committee. The bill is now before us for consideration, as redrafted and recommended by the Appropriations Committee. It does provide for the extension of P. W. A. until June 30, 1939, and while it does not insure sufficient funds to finance or aid in the financing of all the moral obligation and hazardous school projects, it does include many essential features which were included in the bill I introduced.

The footnote at the bottom of page 3 of the report of the Appropriations Committee accompanying this bill states that—

> The above figures are predicated on the assumption that the items under no. 2 and no. 3 above will yield, in the process of liquidation, a sum not less than $233,271,656.60, which represents the securities on hand and still to be purchased less the profit in the amount of $9,637,407.25 now being held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Of course, the political subdivision bond market is at a very low ebb and it may be that P. W. A. will be unable to sell the securities it now holds, the par value of which is $127,751,167.90, and the securities it is already obligated to purchase, having a par value of $115,157,895.95, without sustaining a heavy loss. Under existing law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot purchase securities from P. W. A. in an amount beyond $250,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is now holding P. W. A. securities in the amount of approximately $198,000,000; therefore it could not invest more than $52,000,000 additional in P. W. A. securities under existing law. The Appropriations Committee conscientiously assumes that P. W. A. will be able to sell at par value the securities it now holds and those which it is obligated to purchase, and let us hope this will be the case. It would have to sell these securities at par value in order to obtain the $124,000,000 for loans which will be necessary in order to carry out the program contemplated in this bill. P. W. A. will probably not be able to sell any of these securities until the bond market is more favorable unless ample provision for their sale is made by law. The bill I introduced contained a provision amending existing law so as to permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase P. W. A. securities in an amount sufficient to insure the financing of all pending moral obligation and hazardous school projects, and I should have liked to have had some such provision included in this bill.

Coming to the grant side of the picture, the report of the Appropriations Committee accompanying this bill explains that under existing law P. W. A. is authorized to use not to exceed $300,000,000 of funds received from the sales of securities for making grants. Only $95,000,000 of these funds remain unencumbered for grants to aid in financing the program in question. The committee's report shows that $135,000,000 will be necessary. This bill provides for increasing the $300,000,000 permitted under existing law to $340,000,000, thereby providing an additional $40,000,000, which, together with the $95,000,000 on hand, will be sufficient for the grants required to carry out this program. Here, again, we are up against the sale of securities. Unless these securities can be sold, P. W. A. will be $40,000,000 short of sufficient funds to make these grants.

Analyzing the loan and the grant features of this bill, we find that P. W. A. will have to sell at par value the securities it now holds, the securities it is already obligated to purchase, and a portion of the securities it will receive for loans made under this new program in order to carry out the program contemplated in this bill. Under the present conditions of the political subdivision bond market, P. W. A. will have difficulty in disposing of these securities at par value unless existing law is amended so as to require the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase them at par value. If P. W. A. sells these securities in the open market, it will necessarily have to sell them below par value. Under the terms of this bill, P. W. A. will be short the difference between the par value of these securities and the sale price in carrying out the contemplated program.

It is apparent that these essential financing features were overlooked in the present bill, and I hope that some such provision can later be made.

The Administration's compromise proposal included, among other things, a definite assurance that administrative order no. 197, fixing the grant P. W. A. could offer at 115 percent of the amount expended for relief labor, would be immediately withdrawn, and that P. W. A. would be authorized to use its unexpended balances on hand to make grants of 45 percent of the project cost on moral-obligation projects. I am advised that the order is being drawn today, and trust it will be ready for the President's approval in the next day or so.

There is another feature of the administration's compromise proposal which the P. W. A. supporters in the House, including myself, desire to see fulfilled concerning a provision for financing or aiding in financing all projects for which bonds had been voted or the sponsors' share of the project cost otherwise guaranteed on a 45-55 basis. As the bill now stands it provides a definite means for financing the projects it covers, but does not specifically include many projects for which the sponsors of such projects have appropriated or otherwise guaranteed their share of the project cost. The bill covers only those projects on which bond elections were held and carried prior to May 12, 1937, projects for which legislative appropriations were made prior to May 12, 1937, and hazardous school projects included in a list compiled by P. W. A. as of April 20, 1937. It leaves out many projects for which the sponsors' share of the project cost has been guaranteed, and in which many Members of the House are particularly interested. I believe the list of projects covered by this bill was compiled from P. W. A. lists which are not up to date. Since these lists were made up, bonds have been voted, legislative appropriations have been made, or the sponsors' share of the project cost on a 45–55 basis has been otherwise guaranteed for many projects which are not included in the lists upon which this bill is based. Such projects are as clearly moral obligation projects as those projects covered by the bill.

Now that this bill has been reported to the House under a suspension of rules, P. W. A. supporters will, I am sure, vote for its passage, with the hope that some provision will be made for financing the Government's share of all projects on a 45-55 basis, which have been assured of financing by the sponsors.

Statistics show that construction in this country is only 60 percent of normal and that the private construction which enters into this figure is principally home building, mill, and factory renovation to replace obsolete equipment and processes, and the transfer of mills and factories to more favorable locations. This type of private construction may decline sharply on account of the completion of many P. W. A. projects or be almost entirely abandoned if anything happens to adversely affect the confidence of the private investors involved. The bulk of construction now being carried on is public works, and by far the greater part of this construction is being financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government. If Federal aid is withdrawn from public-works construction, it will drop to almost nothing, which will result in the second largest industry in this country being again on the rocks. I heartily agree with the committee's report to the effect that the Public Works Administration has played an important part in national recovery. It not only has played an important part but it is still playing an important part, and it must play an important part for years to come if permanent recovery is achieved. Everyone who is familiar with construction statistics in this country knows that the Public Works Administration is one of the most important factors in the construction industry, and that no other single organization, Federal or private, in this country is doing so much to restore this industry to normalcy. Certainly it must be continued. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I regret my colleague, Mr. CURLEY, of New York, is absent on account of illness. He has always been an ardent supporter of P. W. A. and would have covered some of the points not included in my remarks. He has requested me to state to the House he would vote "aye" on this bill if he were able to be present.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I rise for a moment to explain that I am delighted that this bill has been introduced, although I wish it might have been somewhat modified. The legislature of my State has recognized the importance of P. W. A. work and has asked me to urge its continuance for at least 2 years to round out a general program. The city manager of Phoenix, the board of supervisors of Yuma County, and other officials have asked for it.

I do not feel that this present measure limits us in this very worthwhile work to a great extent, but that the President himself, as indicated to our floor leader prior to last Tuesday, will continue, through relief work, to do whatever additional construction may be needed to keep faith with those communities and projects where commitments have been made. We were assured last Tuesday that special consideration would be given schoolhouses and school projects. It was that assurance which caused me to withdraw from my earlier intention to earmark the relief bill $300,000,000 for P. W. A. and leave the administration of that part of the $1,500,000,000 relief fund entirely in the hands of the President.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

(Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the continuation of the Public Works Administration is most advisable. I believe the Public Works Administration, through constructive and permanent improvements, has added to the recovery and well-being of the country.

It is generally agreed among impartial observers that the expenditures under this program have played a vital part in bringing about the restoration of prosperity that is taking place. The material wealth of the Republic has been augmented by worth-while projects from the largest cities to the smallest towns.

Public buildings, roads and bridges, waterworks, sewers, airports, parks and playgrounds, dams for conservation of water, flood control dykes and reservoirs, all have a permanent value. States, counties, and municipalities have sponsored undertakings which would have been impossible without Federal help.

In my district, and in the State of West Virginia, the Public Works Administration has inaugurated and carried forward a major program which has brought about improvements of social and economic value. I feel very strongly that continuation of P. W. A. is warranted by results attained.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all satisfied with the pending bill. I agree that the P. W. A. should be extended for a period of 2 years as provided in this measure, but I do not agree that this measure actually carries out the gentlemen's agreement that the House entered into with reference to the so-called Beiter amendment, which this body adopted by an overwhelming vote when the W. P. A. was being considered, but which we did not insist upon after the agreement was made that this bill should carry out the provisions of the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

When the pending bill was before the Appropriations Committee I raised the objection to the proviso, beginning on line 7, page 2:

> That after the date of the enactment of this act no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the Examining Division of the Federal Emergency Administration of the Public Works prior to such date.

We have heard much talk this afternoon about all fire hazards and health hazards being taken care of, but the fact is that under this bill unless application has actually been made and approved by the Examining Divisions prior to the passage of this act that there is not a Chinaman's chance for such a school district to have any consideration whatever so far as the P. W. A. is concerned.

When the Appropriations Committee was considering this bill I suggested that this part of the measure be amended in order to take care of all worthy projects that had heretofore been filed, even though they had not actually been approved by the Examining Divisions. The committee ordered that an amendment be presented if it were found that such were needed to take care of the situation. Now we are told that all worthy projects where bonds have been voted will be O. K.'d by the Examining Divisions before the bill actually becomes a law. But certainly that will be an impossibility, and I am disappointed that the committee has brought this bill in without an amendment and under a rule that does not permit any kind of an amendment to be offered on the floor of the House.

Although this bill is supposed to and possibly will provide for all P. W. A. projects that have actually been approved by the Examining Divisions, it will also have the effect of not only preventing the filing of any new applications but will prevent many worthy projects that are now pending and being studied by the Examining Divisions from having any further consideration. That is certainly not in keeping with the agreement of those who supported the Beiter amendment in the hopes of getting many worthy projects finished.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter that I desire to discuss at this time. We are told that the President is very much in favor of constructing new school buildings in every instance where such buildings are fire hazards or health hazards. Under this bill all such P. W. A. projects, where applications are approved before the President's final signature to the measure, will undoubtedly be taken care of. The question in my mind is why should a P. W. A. project be finished and at the same time, if the school district happens to file its application as a W. P. A. project it cannot be further considered. It is well known that all W. P. A. projects, like school buildings, are out of the picture unless the communities who were sponsoring these projects are able to put up a greater percentage of local contribution. In many instances this is absolutely impossible, as some school districts have voted bonds to the maximum amount and it is absolutely impossible to vote additional bonds to meet the requirements of the W. P. A.

Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote for this bill reluctantly, but again I want to protest against the action of the committee in refusing to permit the House to vote on the amendment to bring all worthy projects under the provisions of this act, and I hope when the bill goes to the Senate that it will be amended to include many worthy projects that are entitled to the same consideration provided for in the pending measure.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, when the relief bill was being considered I voted against every amendment to earmark and stated at that time that if any one of the amendments were brought before the House in the form of a bill I would support it. For this reason I am supporting this bill to extend the life of the P. W. A. for 2 years.

We all recognize that the P. W. A. has been one of the major factors in the Roosevelt recovery plan.

Because of the many splendid projects that have been constructed, projects that have added to the Nation's permanent wealth, I am happy indeed to see that its important activities are to be extended for an additional 2 years.

I opposed the earmarking of the relief bill to the extent of $300,000,000, because I did not then believe, nor do I believe now, that the relief bill was the place to provide for permanent public works. For this reason I am glad to support this bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is a little unusual for the Committee on Appropriations to present a bill in this way. Suspension is such an arbitrary procedure that, as a rule, it should not be applied to bills of this character; but, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of circumstances which justify the consideration of this bill under suspension.

In the first place, the bill is reported unanimously by the committee. There was no dissenting vote, either in the subcommittee or in the committee en banc. So far as I know, every member of the committee has approved the bill in its present form and has approved its report to the House.

In the second place, it is in furtherance of an agreement reached by our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], in conference with the Members of the House who wished to amend the relief bill, and is approved by the administration, the House leadership, and, I take for granted, by the entire membership of the House, and inasmuch as its passage is largely a matter of formality, the enactment of a program so fully agreed upon and so exhaustively debated when it was before the House in the form of amendment to the relief bill, it was felt that further debate could add little to the information already deduced, and the procedure was adopted which would most expeditiously record the will of the House.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In just a minute, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Just one word. And it is brought out in this form in order to facilitate the consideration of the relief program as a whole and to insure its enactment by the end of the fiscal year, the last day of the current month. With the P. W. A. bill and the relief bill definitely differentiated and messaged over in concrete form final consideration ought to be considerably simplified. For instance, if the P. W. A. bill had preceded the relief bill in the House as was originally contemplated—as a matter of fact, we held hearings on this bill before we began hearings on the relief bill—I feel certain that understanding the P. W. A. program in advance, there would have been no occasion for the long debate on the relief bill. Passage of the P. W. A. bill in this form would have removed, perhaps the greatest obstacle to the prompt and effective disposition of the relief bill, and prompt passage of this bill at this stage of the proceedings ought to simplify the remaining stages for both measures.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BEITER. Has the gentleman any up-to-date information with reference to the revocation of the administrative order 197?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Of course, the gentleman understands that arrangements are already in progress to take early action on the matter.

Mr. BEITER. It is my understanding that they are working on it this afternoon, and it will be ready for the President's approval tonight?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is my understanding.

Mr. DISNEY. Reference is made in the bill to approval by the examining divisions of the P. W. A., but the bill does not state that that shall be final approval of the projects. Does the gentleman understand that shall include tentative or contingent approvals?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The only proposition considered by the committee was approval.

Mr. DISNEY. For my part I understand that to mean approvals that might be contingent on some circumstances yet to arrive.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. So far as I have been acquainted with their procedure they have either approved or disapproved.

Mr. DISNEY. Some times they have approved with conditions yet to be fulfilled.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under such conditions it would seem reasonable to consider the project as approved upon the fulfillment of the conditions precedent.

Mr. DISNEY. Does the gentleman consider that the agreement announced by the floor leader [Mr. RAYBURN] is a part of the consideration for the passage of this bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Of course, the leader speaks for himself, and I would not presume to in any way supplement or enlarge upon his statement.

Mr. DISNEY. We do consider that the agreement announced on the floor by the floor leader is a part of the consideration of why so many of us voted the way we did on earmarking in the relief bill, and why we are for this bill in this form. We considered that as part of the debate here.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very much in favor of this bill. There is one thing that I have not clear in my mind, and that is where a community had a bond election and presumably would come under the Executive Order 197, and then they thought it was held in abeyance until such time as they thought some kind of a bill might go through Congress extending P. W. A. Necessarily they have not got the approval of the P. W. A. What is their status?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We are advised that such instances are comparatively rare and that all such cases as are now on file in the central office of the Public Works Administration will have been examined and approved or disapproved before the date of the enactment of this bill. No doubt where an election has been held and bonds have been sold that fact would warrant a very sympathetic consideration by the examining officials and projects which otherwise complied with the requirements would be assured of favorable action.

Mr. HOUSTON. They have not sold the bonds. They just held the election.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is not necessary that the bonds shall have been negotiated. If they have held the election and voted the bonds and are now prepared to proceed as soon as the Federal grant is available, they come within the purview of the law.

Mr. Speaker, this bill meets with the approval of all Members of the House. It is satisfactory both to those who are insisting on completion of the P. W. A. program and those who favor liquidation of the activity and discontinuation of emergency expenditures at as early a date as practicable. It extends the P. W. A.; provides $137,000,000 for grants and $124,000,000 for loans. It insures completion of all projects now under construction and all approved projects on which bond elections have been held and all approved school projects submitted in response to Senate Resolution 97, where existing buildings are deemed hazardous to life. At the same time it closes the door to other projects, and with the exception of the funds carried, practically places the Public Works Administration in a status of liquidation. It is one of the last steps in the great relief program under which the Nation is rapidly beating back to complete and permanent recovery.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and all other business before the House, I may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and Calendar Wednesday business, he may address the House for 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants it clearly understood, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that the gentleman has the privilege to address the House for 25 minutes right after the call of the Calendar Wednesday business, without interposition of other matters.

PUBLICATION OF CERTAIN HISTORICAL AND EDUCATIONAL MATERIAL BY NORTHWEST TERRITORY CELEBRATION COMMISSION

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House Joint Resolution 380, to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Reserving the right to object, for what purpose does the gentleman wish to return to that bill?

Mr. SECREST. The bill was passed over without prejudice. The commission has its budget set up and expects to have a meeting this week. It is imperative that we have some action before the 2 weeks' period. I think there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory", approved August 2, 1935, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (a) The Commission is authorized to prepare, publish, and sell such historical and educational material pertaining to the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory as it deems advisable for the dissemination of information and the advancement of knowledge concerning such Ordinance and settlement. Sums received from the sale of such published material are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the continued publication and sale of such material.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to have printing, binding, photolithography, and other work done at establishments other than the Government Printing Office."

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITH of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BURCH), for 2 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILCOX, for 5 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAMBETH (at the request of Mr. UMSTEAD), for today, on account of important business.

To Mr. CURLEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania (at the request of Mrs. HONEYMAN), for 1 day, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. MAVERICK, for 3 days, on account of important business.

THE LATE PHILIP A. GOODWIN

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with very deep regret that I announce to the Members of the House the death on yesterday of our fellow Member, PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN, at his home at Coxsackie, in the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of New York.

Mr. GOODWIN had been desperately ill for several weeks, yet the sudden notice of his passing comes as a shock to his many friends on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. GOODWIN had been a very conscientious, hard-working Member of the House and had made many friends among his colleagues. At a later date I shall ask for an opportunity to make more extended remarks on the life and character of our friend, but at the present time I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 232) and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 232

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. PHILIP A. GOODWIN, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee: Mr. REED of New York, Mr. TABER, Mr. LORD, and Mr. BYRNE.

The Clerk will conclude the reading of the resolution.

ADJOURNMENT

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 8, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1937

(Legislative day of Monday, June 7, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, June 7, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Philip A. Goodwin, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLE of Maryland, Mr. PETTENGILL, Mr. KELLY of Illinois, Mr. MAPES, and Mr. WOLVERTON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 709. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States", approved June 30, 1906, as amended;

S. 1120. An act authorizing an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. S. S. Tulip near St. Inigoes Bay, Md., on November 11, 1864, and for other purposes; and

S. 1967. An act to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 12), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of this Congress be presented to the Governor and through him to the people of the State of Nebraska for the statues of William Jennings Bryan and J. Sterling Morton, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of our country; that these works of art are accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned to places in the Capitol of the United States already set aside by Congress for the statues of eminent citizens; and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the Governor of Nebraska.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

H. R. 224. An act to authorize an appropriation for the purpose of establishing a national cemetery at Fort Bliss, Tex.;

H. R. 2512. An act to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws;

H. R. 2708. An act to provide for the appointment of one additional United States district judge for the southern district of Texas;

H. R. 3123. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y.;

H. R. 4582. An act to amend the act approved August 4, 1919, as amended, providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind;

H. R. 5900. An act to amend the bank-robbery statute to include burglary and larceny;

H. R. 6049. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act;

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act";

H. R. 6295. An act to dispense with unnecessary renewals of oaths of office by civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments;

H. R. 6635. An act to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6763. An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioners' loans for a period of 2 years;

H. R. 6899. An act to repeal the limitation on the sale price on the old post-office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky.;

H. R. 7363. An act to continue the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for 2 years, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 19. Joint resolution for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund;

H. J. Res. 365. Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the Seventh World's Poultry Congress and Exposition to be held in the United States in 1939; and

H. J. Res. 380. Joint resolution to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 274. An act for the relief of Lt. Joseph N. Wenger, United States Navy;

S. 609. An act for the relief of Edith Lewis White;

S. 673. An act for the relief of S. T. Dickinson;

S. 1699. An act granting an annuity to Frank W. Carpenter; and

H. J. Res. 394. Joint resolution making an appropriation for expenses of the Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Jackson, Miss., in 1937.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	La Follette	Pittman
Andrews	Davis	Lee	Pope
Ashurst	Dieterich	Lewis	Radcliffe
Bailey	Donahey	Lodge	Reynolds
Bankhead	Duffy	Logan	Robinson
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Russell
Berry	Frazier	Lundeen	Schwartz
Bilbo	Gerry	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Gibson	McCarran	Sheppard
Bone	Gillette	McGill	Smathers
Borah	Green	McKellar	Smith
Bridges	Guffey	McNary	Steiwer
Brown, N. H.	Harrison	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hayden	Murray	Truman
Burke	Herring	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Hitchcock	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Holt	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained from the Senate because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

APPLICATION OF MACKAY RADIO & TELEGRAPH CO., INC., TO ADD OSLO, NORWAY, AS A COMMUNICATION POINT

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that some days ago the Senate adopted a resolution requesting the Communications Commission to make a report on a certain matter. That report has been received, but in the report there is the omission of what I think a very important feature, namely, the Engineer's report upon the subject which was then under investigation. I take it that by calling attention to the omission in the RECORD the Commission will make a full report upon the matter.

ALBERT GALLATIN STATUE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for the Albert Gallatin statue in Washington, D. C., which was, on page 2, lines 8 and 9, to strike out "Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EARL W. THOMAS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1068) for the relief of Earl W. Thomas, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "employ" and insert "performance of his duty as an inmate"; and on page 1, line 8, after "States", to insert "Industrial Reformatory."

Mr. FRAZIER. On behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who is absent on account of illness, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS BY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES—DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION (S. DOC. NO. 78)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Disaster Loan Corporation, reporting, in response to Senate Resolution 119 (submitted by Mr. MINTON and agreed to Apr. 22, 1937), relative to loans made to, and the relief of, sufferers by floods in 1937, which, with the accompanying statement, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

VISITOR TO THE MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. McKELLAR presented a letter addressed to the Senate, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act approved May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint Senator F. RYAN DUFFY to represent the Senate Committee on Appropriations on the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, said authority to date from May 20, 1937.

KENNETH McKELLAR,
Acting Chairman, Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas there exists in the State of California a great need for a neuropsychopathic hospital for veterans of the World War; and

Whereas it is the accepted fact that it is the duty of a nation to provide for and care for needy war veterans who have so generously served their country; and

Whereas the United States Government could graciously perform its duty to neuropsychopathic veterans by providing additional hospitals in this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully urged to enact legislation that would result in the construction of additional hospitals by the Federal Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Celerino Tiongco, acting president of the Sakdalista Party of the Philippines, praying on behalf of that party for the granting of immediate independence to the Philippine Islands, which, with the accompanying paper or petition addressed to the President of the United States and Members of the Congress, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter and resolution endorsing the pending low-cost housing bill.

There being no objection, the letter and resolution were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOMEN'S AUXILIARY TO THE CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR UNION OF ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY,
St. Louis, Mo., June 5, 1937.

Hon. EDWARD C. STEAGALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEAGALL: We thought you might be glad to have a copy of our resolution which is in support of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, and a copy of which resolution has been sent to our Congressmen and Senators from Missouri.

We shall be very happy to have any further information that you have on hearings on this bill as we are very intensely interested in its purpose.

Thanking you for the kind and understanding consideration that is shown in this bill, we beg to remain,

Respectfully,

MARY E. RYDER,
Chairman, Legislative Committee.

(Copy to Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER.)

Whereas the Central Trades and Labor Union Auxiliary of St. Louis desiring to supplement the ideals and objectives of the Central Trades and Labor Union of St. Louis whose splendid efforts to obtain decent living and working conditions for workers has occupied a long and honorable chapter in this field of endeavor; and

Whereas we are fully aware that the efforts of organized labor to establish standards of living that takes root right in the home by providing proper home environments free from the infection of slum life, and that they have gone a long way forward in helping to correct some of the vicious results of the frustrated lives of boys and girls who are raised in the atmosphere of slum life; and

Whereas we believe that slum life is directly responsible for the major portion of the delinquency among children. Statistics reveal that the lawbreakers average in age from 17 to 24 and that 20 percent of the major crimes committed in the United States are committed by children not old enough to vote and that on an average of 1,000 murders are committed each year by children; and

Whereas reports on crime show that the United States spends $13,000,000,000 annually to prevent crime and that we have more people in prisons in America than England, Wales, Belgium, and France combined. That these same reports show that 70 percent of this crime is committed by white Americans; and

Whereas we are pleased to note the efforts of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill and we believe this bill is a step to correct causes instead of costly measures to meet the effects. We believe it contains the germ of an effort that will do more to alleviate the conditions above described. Crime and poverty go hand in hand and slum life is as deadly an infection as it would be to subject the children raised in its atmosphere of slum life to typhoid and other dangerous health infections: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we do hereby endorse the Wagner-Steagall housing bill and that we send a copy of the resolution to our Senators and Congressmen and ask their unqualified support of this bill.

Respectfully submitted.

MARY E. RYDER, Chairman,
LAURA NESBIT,
Mrs. J. B. MCGINTY,
Mrs. CHRISTINE CAIN,
Mrs. A. M. LANRENCE,
Mrs. R. E. MCCLANAHAN,
Mrs. P. WALDRON,
Legislative Committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) to provide for payment for nine airplanes obtained from the Stinson Aircraft Corporation by the Bureau of Air Commerce, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 693) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4213) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended, authorizing the Secretary of War to extend the services and operations of the Inland Waterways Corporation to the Savannah River, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 694) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1984) for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 695) thereon.

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 696) thereon.

Mr. POPE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 432) to add certain lands to the Cache National Forest, reported it with an amendment.

"MORRO CASTLE" AND "MOHAWK" INVESTIGATIONS (REPT. NO. 184, PT. 2)

Mr. COPELAND. From the Committee on Commerce I submit a further report, prepared by a subcommittee thereof known as the Special Committee on Safety at Sea, on the Morro Castle and Mohawk investigations, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following additional preliminary report (pursuant to S. Res. 7, 74th Cong., 1st sess.):

Supplementing the committee's Reports No. 776, submitted June 3, 1935; No. 776, part 2, submitted February 6, 1936; No. 776, part 3, submitted May 20, 1936; No. 776, part 4, submitted June 20, 1936; and Preliminary Report No. 184, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, submitted March 17, 1937, the following additional preliminary report is submitted. This has particular reference to that portion of Senate Resolution 7 requiring "(1) (b) the inquiry into the Morro Castle disaster, and the actions taken in connection with or subsequent to such inquiry, by the United States attorney for the southern district of New York", and "(6) to investigate whether the laws governing liability for loss of life and property at sea, the laws and usages of salvage and the laws, usages, and practices of the business of marine insurance tend to encourage the installation and utilization of such devices and the promotion of such practices as are conducive to safety and to a paramount concern at all times for the preservation of life."

ACTION OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The "Morro Castle"

Indictments were found by the grand jury in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York against Eben S. Abbott, William F. Warms, the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., and Henry E. Cabuad, in that each of the persons named had violated section 461, title 18, of the United States Code. The indictments were called for trial before the Honorable Murray Hulbert, district judge, and a jury on November 12, 1935. They were founded on section 461, title 18, of the United States Code, which reads as follows:

"Loss of life by misconduct of officers of vessels; liability of corporation officer: Every captain, engineer, pilot, or other person employed on any steamboat or vessel by whose misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties on such vessel the life of any person is destroyed, and every owner, charterer, inspector, or other public officer, through whose fraud, neglect, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law the life of any person is destroyed, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both. When the owner or charterer of any steamboat or vessel shall be a corporation, any executive officer of such corporation, for the time being actually charged with the control and management of the operation, equipment, or navigation of such steamboat or vessel, who has knowingly and willfully caused or allowed such fraud, neglect, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law, by which the life of any person is destroyed, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

The trial occupied approximately 11 weeks of the court's time. Eighty-six witnesses were sworn and examined on behalf of the Government. Twenty-three testified on behalf of the defense. Two hundred and thirty-nine exhibits were received in evidence or marked for identification during the course of the trial.

The issue was ably and exhaustively handled by counsel for the Government and the defendants. The trial judge demonstrated great ability in the conduct of an unusually difficult proceeding. There are few precedents which a judge may follow in the trial of an indictment of this character. No similar prosecution had been tried in the courts of this district since the year 1904. The last one was the General Slocum disaster, where several indictments were found, but only the captain of the steamer was prosecuted and convicted.

On January 25, 1936, the jury in the Morro Castle case brought in a verdict of "guilty" against all of the defendants, and on January 28, 1936, sentence was pronounced—defendant Abbott to a term of 4 years; defendant Warms to a term of 2 years; defendant Cabaud to a term of 1 year, with a fine of $5,000, the prison sentence to be suspended and the defendant to be placed on parole on condition the fine was paid. A fine of $10,000 was also levied against the defendant New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co. Both fines were paid.

Defendants Abbott and Warms appealed to the United States circuit court of appeals, and they were admitted to bail pending the appeal. The transcript of record is a voluminous structure. It contains 13,413 folios—4,471 pages. The briefs of counsel for the appellant and the appellee cover 215 pages more. The examination and review of a record of such volume in a cause of this character must have required a prodigious amount of work by the appellate court. The appeal was argued January 5, 1937, before Judges Martin T. Manton, Learned Hand, and Augustus N. Hand, and on April 7, 1937, the court handed down a decision which reversed the judgment of conviction as to both Warms and Abbott.

Stating the section of the code under which the defendants were indicted and giving the points of fact upon which negligence was charged and claimed during the trial to have been proved, the court says:

"The fire spread with great rapidity and cut off many of the passengers from access to the boats, but, in spite of the fact that the responsibility of Warms as master of the vessel was a new one, that the situation required management of passengers and crew in a terrible emergency, and that he maintained the best traditions of the sea by staying on his vessel until the bridge had burnt under him and no one else remained on board, it may be that there was enough proof of negligence rather than of mere errors in judgment to justify submission of the case against him to a jury. We do not need to decide this difficult question which depends on reasoning after the event about what ought to have been done at a time of storm and stress where the considerations for action were conflicting and doubtful.

"The chief difficulty in sustaining Warms' conviction is that some of the most important charges of neglect submitted to the jury were his alleged failure when acting as mate during the years he was on the vessel before the fire to conduct proper fire and boat drills. It is said that the neglect to hold proper drills accounted for the confusion and inefficiency of the crew when the fire broke out and contributed to the great loss of life. There was proof that the drills had been inadequate and failed to comply with regulations. But we think it cannot be said that the duty to regulate these drills devolved upon Warms and are of the opinion that he was only liable for neglect insofar as the conduct of drills was assigned to him and he failed properly to carry out what thus came within his province * * *. The evidence, we think, tends to show that Wilmott was in general charge of the drills before Warms joined the ship and that after the advent of the latter he continued his former practice. Wilmott, and not Warms, told the operating vice president of the line that he had decided not to lower the lifeboats to the rails, and Wilmott it was who excused the purser and the chief engineer from attendance. Moreover, it seems unlikely that, if Warms was in general charge, he would have been personally engaged in such routine activities as routing out members of the crew to take part in the drills * * *. It was certainly wholly consistent with such control and makes any conclusion to the contrary highly speculative * * *. It would be against all theories of maritime law that a mate should have any power or duty to control drills when the captain of the ship was on board unless the latter had delegated to him the authority. Not only is the above applicable to fire and boat drills but to the instruction of passengers in the use of life preservers. There is no evidence that Warms had that duty, which seems, by the direction of the master, to have been one of the stewards * * *. Wilmott apparently exercised control at all times. Indeed, the hesitation of the trial judge to believe that Warms was given control of drills by Wilmott is shown when he said at the time of sentence: 'There is a grave question in my mind whether Warms assumed the duty and task of the discipline of the crew or whether he merely carried out certain directions in that regard, as imposed upon him by the captain.'

"Now if we are right in concluding that the duty to conduct drills in accordance with the regulations devolved upon the master and any evidence that it devolved upon Warms was unsubstantial, then it was error for the court to leave it to the jury to determine whether the duty to conduct such drills was imposed upon the latter (fols. 12375–12376). This error in the charge was challenged by an exception (fols. 12393–12394) as well as by the refusal to charge defendant's request no. 33. Accordingly we think that the judgment must be reversed as to the defendant Warms."

As to the appellant Abbott, the court continues:

"We think the situation of the appellant Abbott is similar. He was charged (1) with failure to train the men in his department, (2) with neglect to go to his fire station at the time of the fire, (3) with neglect to maintain adequate water pressure, (4) with neglect to provide passengers with life preservers, and (5) with neglect of duty after he left the ship while he was in the lifeboat.

"The obligation to maintain water pressure was doubtless that of Abbott, but pressure was maintained until the fire prevented the electric pumps from working and it became inadequate only after the opening, in order to put out the widespread conflagration, of more hydrants than the system would stand. Even when the engine force was compelled to leave the engine room the steam pump was left running so that water was available for some time to protect passengers who had gathered at the after end of D deck. The claim that Abbott was responsible for furnishing life preservers to the passengers is quite without foundation and contrary to the evidence as well as to general experience. It is true that his acts on the ship during the fire seem to have been largely futile and in a practical sense were of little import except as they may have damaged his own case, but so far as we can see they could not have contributed to the death or injury of any of the unfortunate victims of the Morro Castle disaster. While he stayed out of the engine room to an almost inexplicable extent, everything there was properly managed by his subordinates, and until he got into lifeboat no. 1 we are inclined to the view that he was guilty of no fault which caused the death or injury of anyone.

"There was evidence that Abbott was placed in command of lifeboat no. 1 by Warms. The boat left the ship with 29 members of the crew and 3 passengers—only about one-half its capacity—and reached shore without taking on any other persons. It may be that there were no more passengers left on the forward starboard side of the ship, but there were plenty of them in the stern, where they had congregated to avoid the fire in the bow. It is clear that an attempt should have been made to take them into the lifeboat. This we believe is not disputed, but it is said that Abbott was too sick from the effects of smoke and fire exhaustion to direct movements at the time; that the motor did not work, and there was not enough power in the oars the seamen were pulling to bring the boat up to the stern of the ship. Whether Abbott was so disabled at the time that he could not direct operations is disputed and was a question of fact for the jury. Other lifeboats from the Luckenbach came to rescue passengers and were operated only by oars. They successfully reached the stern of the Morro Castle, took off passengers, and carried them over to the Luckenbach.

"It is doubtful whether the motor of the lifeboat was in fact out of commission or whether no serious attempt was made to operate it because Abbott was afraid of the danger of sparks from the steamer. Had it been put in operation there could certainly have been no difficulty in reaching the ship. We think the operability of the motor was a question of fact for the jury.

"The court when dealing with the liability of Abbott charged as follows:

"As to the defendant Abbott, as chief engineer, he had charge of the engine room and the maintenance and upkeep of the machinery and appliances connected therewith throughout the ship, subject to the directions of his superior officer, the master. He had charge of the men in the engine room. There is testimony, and it is for you to weigh that testimony, that in the event of an emergency the engine-room employees, not on watch, should report to him either in the engine room or at his office on the navigating deck, to receive instructions. There is testimony that he was assigned to command lifeboat no. 6, and that he was relieved from that duty by Captain Wilmott. There is testimony that he was ordered from the bridge by Captain Warms and directed to take charge of lifeboat no. 1, and that he did not do so, because of his physical condition, as a result of smoke and other causes. Neglect in respect to the engine-room operations is not to be attributed to the defendant Abbott, if you find that the engine room was properly operated and attended to in his absence. If the pumps in the engine room furnished all the service which they were capable of in respect to water pressure, the absence of Abbott from the engine room is not imputable to him—he cannot be held for a mere error of judgment but it is for you to say, upon all the testimony in this case with regard to the defendant Abbott, whether in the catastrophe that occurred on the Morro Castle on the date in question, from the time that he learned of the fire, he acted as a reasonably prudent man, considering his official position and his duties as chief engineer, would be expected to act, and whether the life of any person on board said vessel was destroyed due to his misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties." (Folios 12368–12371.)

"We have already said that in our opinion there was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury of any criminal neglect on the part of Abbott while he was on the Morro Castle which resulted in the death of any person. Yet it is entirely clear from the foregoing charge that the court instructed the jury that the conduct of Abbott while on the Morro Castle might afford sufficient basis for conviction under the statute and that no specific instructions were given as to the circumstances under which Abbott's neglect to rescue passengers after he was in command of the lifeboat might amount to criminal negligence.

"In other words, the jury may perfectly well have convicted Abbott because he neglected to train the men in his department to go to his fire station or to maintain adequate water pressure or to provide passengers with life preservers, though we hold that there was not sufficient evidence under any of these items. The only words in the charge which might permit a conviction because of conduct in the lifeboat were those stating generally that it was for the jury to say 'upon all of the testimony * * * whether in the catastrophe that occurred on the Morro Castle on the date in question, from the time that he learned of the fire he acted as a reasonably prudent man, considering his official position and his duties as chief engineer, would be expected to act, * * *'.

"In view of the insufficiency of the proof necessary to convict Abbott of misconduct while on board the Morro Castle, we think he could not be convicted for misconduct on the lifeboat under a charge which dealt with his acts thereon in such vague and general terms. It is true that there was no specific objection to the charge in respect to Abbott and that the court carefully instructed the jury that neglect was not to be attributed to him if the engine room was properly operated in his absence and if the pumps furnished all the service they were capable of in respect to water pressure. But inasmuch as there was lack of proof of criminal negligence on the part of Abbott while on board the Morro Castle, we think specific instructions as to his liability while on the lifeboat were necessary to sustain any conviction. As the excerpt from the charge shows there really were no such instructions, and the following requests, which were 'refused, except as charged', ought to have been granted in order to render his liability for conduct while on the lifeboat intelligible:

"81. If while in the lifeboat Abbott was physically incapable of taking charge, or permitted a competent person to take charge, he may be deemed guilty of negligence in the operation of the lifeboat because of his failure to take charge * * *.

"83. If while in the lifeboat Abbott was physically incapable of taking charge of doing work therein, the failure to rescue passengers is not attributable to him; particularly if he advised that the lifeboat be kept in the vicinity of the ship * * *.

"We hold that in spite of the failure to except to the charge as delivered, the omission of any specific instructions as to the liability of Abbott while in the lifeboat which was raised by the foregoing refusals to charge was error. Indeed, if Abbott was to be convicted for misconduct while in the lifeboat, the instructions ought to have dealt with the issues of fact fully and clearly."

The effect of reversal of judgment as to Warms and Abbott will probably close the door to further criminal prosecution arising out of this fire. The appellate court gave Captain Warms a clean bill of health, and, although Abbott may find little comfort in the court's opinion concerning his conduct, it seems improbable that in the face of the court's findings the Government will devote the time and effort necessary to try Abbott again.

A settlement agreement has been in effect since the early part of September 1936, limiting the liability in the Morro Castle cases to $890,000, and on March 27, 1937, an order was granted and entered by Hon. John C. Knox, district judge, on the application of the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Navigation Co. and the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., affirming this settlement agreement. A committee of counsel will pass upon approximately 400 death and injury claims. The amount of the aggregate settlement has been accepted by more than 95 percent of the claimants. This committee will fix the award on each claim, determining as to amount by the usual factors of age, income, and life expectancy on the death claims, and by the ordinary rules of damage upon the claims for injury or property loss.

It seems clear, therefore, that no further activity may be expected in connection with the Morro Castle fire.

The "Mohawk"

The New York board of local inspectors of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection (now the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation), Department of Commerce, made its report on March 2, 1935, setting forth the results of their investigation of the foundering of the steamship Mohawk. This report dismissed the case without further action. The report found no cause for action against any of the surviving officers of the Mohawk. The motorship Talisman, which collided with the steamship Mohawk, was of foreign registry and, consequently, did not come under the jurisdiction of this board.

Between February 1 and March 1, 1935, before the January morning grand jury, by Martin Conboy, then the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, 14 witnesses testified. The grand jury was discharged on or about March 28, 1935, without finding indictments.

The United States Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, investigators interviewed all but two of the Mohawk's crew and all but five of the rescued passengers.

The United States attorney for the southern district of New York completed his investigation of the collision, which resulted in the sinking of the steamship Mohawk, in April 1936. No further material facts were developed. No indictments were found. The record also received the attention of the successor United States attorney. It is probable, therefore, that no further action may be expected in connection with the foundering of the steamship Mohawk.

The New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co. has concluded an agreement of settlement with the Mohawk claimants to pay an aggregate of three hundred and sixty thousand ($360,000) dollars in full settlement of all claims. This amount to be apportioned by a committee representing the claimants. Of this, three hundred and forty-two thousand five hundred ($342,500) dollars is supplied by the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co., seventeen thousand five hundred ($17,500) dollars is supplied by the owners of the steamship Talisman.

OWNERS' LIABILITY INSURANCE, ETC.

Subdivisions 6 of Senate Resolution 7 directed the committee to investigate whether the laws governing liability for loss of life or property at sea, the laws and usages of salvage, the laws, usages, and practices of the business of marine insurance, tend to encourage the installation and utilization of such devices and the promotion of such practices as are conducive to safety and to a paramount concern at all times for the preservation of life. It is very doubtful, however, if any liability law has sufficient influence to induce the shipowner to respond to any great extent with special safety appliances for the reason that the percent of voyages on which liability is met is too small to offer any inducement for the expenditure of the money involved. It seems inevitable that this will always be so regardless of the extent of the owners' liability, because with proper management and operation the likelihood of incurring liability is almost nil.

Since the Morro Castle and Mohawk disasters the laws governing the owners' liability for loss of life or property have been considerably improved, but there is no reason to believe that this has affected the safety of the ships. In fact, it is almost certain that the action to improve the safety of ships has come from quite other laws.

So far as salvage is concerned, it does not appear that the laws governing salvage have any influence on the installation and utilization of devices and the promotion of practices such as might be conducive to safety "and to a paramount concern at all times for the preservation of life."

Salvage in its simple character is a service which volunteer adventurers spontaneously render to the owners in the recovery of property from loss or damage at sea, under the responsibility of making restitution and with a lien for their reward. It comes into play only after the casualty has occurred and has little concern with the cause of the casualty.

MARINE INSURANCE

In the matter of marine insurance, the underwriters' problems and rates of premium must be grounded on experience rather than on the particular arrangements or conditions of a ship. They apply the rules of indemnity to an existing condition in view of past experience. The owner places insurance on his ships as they are, not on what they might and should be.

From the insurance standpoint the risks are not so much in the ships themselves as in the hazards they encounter, whether through unusual perils of the sea or through mismanagement on the part of the operating personnel. If a ship is constantly damaged by encountering ordinary storms, it is very costly to the insurance underwriters; this condition brought about the organization of what are known as classification societies. The classification societies usually represent shipowners, underwriters, and shipbuilders, and they classify vessels in accordance with the satisfactoriness of their construction. Therefore, if an owner has his ship classed by one of the classification societies, the underwriters will write insurance on it on the basis of its classification; in general, it may be said that the more ships an owner operates and the fewer casualties his ships encounter, the lower will be his rates, regardless of whether his ships are satisfactorily equipped or not.

It does not seem possible, therefore, that the insurance companies are likely to go further in their demands for safeguards than their actuarial experience necessitates. The demands for safety will have to come from public interest rather than insurance underwriters. The duty of the Congress in this matter cannot be questioned. Safer ships built under advanced rules of construction and better personnel are demanded if safety at sea is to be promoted.

FURTHER REPORTS

We shall make a further report in order to complete the requirements of Senate Resolution No. 7.

ROYAL S. COPELAND.
MORRIS SHEPPARD.
WALLACE H. WHITE, JR.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. RUSSELL introduced Senate bill 2601, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 2602) for the relief of George Yuhas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BONE (for himself, Mr. CLARK, Mr. NYE, Mr. POPE, and Mr. FRAZIER):

A bill (S. 2603) to provide for Government ownership and operation of shipbuilding facilities, and plants for the manufacture of Army and Navy ordnance and other war materials, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REFUNDING OF TAXES UNDER CERTAIN ACTS

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask consent to introduce a bill which I request be referred to the Committee on Claims, and I ask also that the bill, together with a brief statement explaining it, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2601) to provide for refund of amounts collected as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, the Kerr Tobacco Act, as amended, and the Potato Act of 1935, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims, as follows:

A bill (S. 2601) to provide for refund of amounts collected as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, the Kerr Tobacco Act, as amended, and the Potato Act of 1935

Be it enacted, etc.—

SECTION 1. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized and directed to refund any amount paid to or collected by a collector of internal revenue as tax (which for the purposes of this act shall include penalties and interest) under the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 598), as amended, Kerr Tobacco Act (48 Stat. 1275), as amended, and under the Potato Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 750).

SEC. 2. (a) Such refund may be allowed only to the person or persons who paid, or for whose account there was paid, the tax.

(b) In the case of amounts paid as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act with respect to the ginning of cotton:

(1) Refund shall be allowed to the ginner of the cotton only to the extent that the ginner has not shifted the burden of the tax by including it in any charge or fee for ginning, or by collecting it from the owner or owners of the cotton ginned, or in any manner whatsoever.

(2) Refund shall be allowed to the owner or owners of the cotton at the time of ginning, to the extent that the amount of tax was shifted to such owner or owners by the cotton ginner and was not shifted by such owner or owners to other persons. In such cases, but only for the purposes of this act, the tax shall be considered to have been paid by the ginner to the United States for the account of such owner or owners.

(3) In the case of seed cotton sold by a producer prior to the ginning thereof, refund shall be allowed to such producer to the extent that the burden of tax was shifted to him.

(4) As to tax paid to a collector of internal revenue by a person other than the ginner, as in the case of tax paid under section 4 (f) of the Bankhead Cotton Act, refund shall be allowed to and claim therefor shall be filed by the person or persons who paid such tax to the collector of internal revenue.

(5) In the case of any claim for refund filed by a person other than the ginner of the cotton with respect to which the tax was paid, the Commissioner may require that there be submitted a waiver of refund executed by such ginner.

(c) No refund may be allowed of any amount paid as tax under the statutes referred to in section 1 with respect to which refund or reimbursement has been heretofore made by the Secretary of Agriculture or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(d) For the purposes of this act, satisfaction of tax liability by surrender or submission of tax-exemption certificates, tax-payment warrants, or tax-exemption stamps shall not be considered as payment of tax.

SEC. 3. Except as authorized by this act, no refund shall be made or allowed, in pursuance of court decision or otherwise, of any amount paid as tax under the statutes set out in section 1.

SEC. 4. No refund shall be made or allowed, in pursuance of court decision or otherwise, of any amount paid by or collected from any person as tax under the statutes set forth in section 1 unless after the enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1938, a claim for such refund of such amount by the person entitled thereto has been filed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. All evidence relied upon in support of such claim shall be clearly set forth under oath.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no court shall have jurisdiction of any suit or proceeding, whether brought before or after the date of enactment of this act, for the recovery, recoupment, set-off, refund or credit of, or counterclaim for, any amount paid by or collected from any person as a tax under the statutes set out in section 1, (a) before the expiration of 6 months from the date of filing a claim therefor under this act, unless the Commissioner renders a decision thereon within that time, or (b) after the expiration of 2 years from the date of mailing by registered mail by the Commissioner to the claimant a notice of disallowance of that part of the claim to which such suit or proceeding relates. Any consideration or any action by the Commissioner with respect to such claim following the mailing of notice of disallowance shall not operate to extend the period within which any suit or proceeding may be brought.

SEC. 6. Concurrent with the Court of Claims, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of cases to which this act applies, regardless of the amount in controversy, if such district courts would have had jurisdiction of such cases but for limitations under the Judicial Code, as amended, on jurisdiction of such courts based upon the amount in controversy.

SEC. 7. No interest shall be allowed by the Commissioner or by any court with respect to any amount paid or collected as tax under the statutes set out in section 1, except with respect to amounts refund of which is made or allowed under this act.

SEC. 8. In the absence of fraud the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Commissioner upon the merits of any claim presented under this act, and the mathematical calculations therein, shall not be subject to review by any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States.

SEC. 9. No collector of internal revenue or internal-revenue officer or employee shall be in any way liable to any person for any act done by him in the assessment or collection of any amount as tax under the statutes set out in section 1, or for the recovery of any money exacted by or paid to him and paid into the Treasury in performance of his official duties under the said acts, or if such collector or officer acted under the direction of the Secretary or other proper officer of the Government.

SEC. 10. No claim for refund shall be denied upon the ground that a proceeding to recover had become barred by the limitation provisions of the statutes set out in section 1.

SEC. 11. The Commissioner shall, with the approval of the Secretary, prescribe such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sums that may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The statement presented by Mr. RUSSELL relative to the bill is as follows:

STATEMENT ON SENATE BILL 2601

This bill is designed to authorize the repayment of taxes collected under the Bankhead Cotton Act, the Kerr Tobacco Act, and the Potato Act, and to provide a procedure whereby that refund may be made. The bill is patterned largely upon the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 dealing with the refund of Agricultural Adjustment Act taxes, which was declared constitutional in Anniston Mfg. Co. v. Davis, decided May 17, 1937. Like that title, the present bill is designed to insure the refunding of the taxes to the persons who actually bore the burden of the payment of that tax.

Specifically, the bill, by section 1, authorizes the refund of the amounts paid. By section 2, the persons who are entitled to the refund are defined. In the case of tobacco and potatoes, the burden of the tax was actually borne by the taxpayer, and there is, therefore, no need for further provision. In the case of cotton, however, the ginner, who was the taxpayer, did not in the usual case bear the burden of the tax, but shifted it to the person for whom the ginning was done. For that reason section 2 (b) (2) provides that such persons may recover to the extent that the amount of tax was shifted to them. In some cases the amount of the tax was borne by the producer even though he sold the cotton prior to ginning. Section 2 (b) (3) allows a refund to be made to him to the extent that the burden of the tax was shifted to him.

The bill is not designed to provide for satisfaction of amounts paid for tax-exemption warrants or certificates; consequently, section 2 (d) states that for the purposes of the act satisfaction of the tax by means of exemption warrants is not to be considered as a payment of the tax.

Sections 4 and 5 provide for the filing of a claim for refund under this act and for the procedure for contesting the determination of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the district courts. Section 6 allows the district courts complete jurisdiction to deal with such cases. Pending suit, however, based upon a denial of refund by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue prior to the passage of this act must be discontinued and a new claim for refund filed under the provisions of section 4.

The remaining sections deal with minor administrative matters. Section 7 provides that no interest shall be allowed except with respect to amounts refund of which is made under the act, and is similar to the provision in title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936. Section 8 makes the findings of fact and conclusions of law conclusive except insofar as they may be reviewed by the courts. Section 9 eliminates suits against collectors, a procedure which was held proper in the Anniston case, provided that an alternative remedy for the recovery of the tax was provided. There can be no question that such a remedy is provided by this act. Section 10 resolves the doubtful question with regard to the taxes refund of which had become barred by the limitations of the Cotton and Tobacco Acts prior to the repeal of those limitation sections by providing that all taxes collected under the act shall be repealed irrespective of any period of limitations provided in the act under which they were paid.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 224. An act to authorize an appropriation for the purpose of establishing a national cemetery at Fort Bliss, Tex.; and

H. R. 3123. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 2512. An act to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws; to the calendar.

H. R. 2708. An act to provide for the appointment of one additional United States district judge for the southern district of Texas;

H. R. 5900. An act to amend the bank-robbery statute to include burglary and larceny; and

H. R. 6295. An act to dispense with unnecessary renewals of oaths of office by civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 4582. An act to amend the act, approved August 4, 1919, as amended, providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

H. R. 6049. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

H. R. 6287. An act to amend Public Act No. 467, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "Federal Credit Union Act"; and

H. R. 6763. An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H. R. 6635. An act to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 6899. An act to repeal the limitation on the sale price on the old post-office and courthouse site and building at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, Ky.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 7363. An act to continue the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for 2 years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 19. Joint resolution for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund; and

H. J. Res. 380. Joint resolution to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material; to the Committee on the Library.

H. J. Res. 365. Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the Seventh World's Poultry Congress and Exposition, to be held in the United States in 1939; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MAXIMUM HOURS, MINIMUM WAGES, AND CHILD LABOR—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BRIDGES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed.

USE OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT BY UNDESIRABLE INDUSTRIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. ANDREWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2286) to prohibit the use of buildings or premises in the District of Columbia for the carrying on of certain undesirable industries, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

STATUS OF PROVISIONAL OFFICERS OF THE WORLD WAR—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. POPE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 86, line 1, strike out "$65,500" and insert "$68,380."
On page 86, line 2, strike out "$52,000" and insert "$54,900."
On page 87, line 9, strike out "$615,000" and insert "$637,500."
On page 87, line 24, strike out "$240,400" and insert "$250,400."
On page 89, line 20, strike out "$305,000" and insert "$334,850."
On page 90, line 5, strike out "$82,690" and insert "$87,690."
On page 90, line 24, strike out "$274,790" and insert "$324,970."
On page 91, line 1, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$262,700."

WORLD PEACE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN

[Mr. HARRISON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on World Peace, delivered by Senator PITTMAN to the Nevada Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi at the University of Nevada on May 8, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

DOMESTIC ECONOMY AND FOREIGN TRADE—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY ROPER

[Mr. COPELAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Relating Our Domestic Economy to Foreign Trade", delivered by Hon. Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, at New Orleans, La., Monday, May 17, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SUPREME COURT—ADDRESS BY WILLIAM H. LEWIS

[Mr. LODGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Mr. Roosevelt and the Supreme Court", delivered by William H. Lewis, Esq., of the Massachusetts Bar, which appears in the Appendix.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5996, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the amendments I make an appeal to the Senator from Oklahoma, who has the bill in charge, to make a short statement of the contents of the measure, whether it involves an increase over the appropriations of the current law, and the differences between the bill as reported to the Senate and the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] desires recognition in order to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will make a very brief statement, as requested by the Senator from Oregon, and then, of course, the bill will be open for consideration, at which time the Senator from Washington may take the floor for such remarks as he may desire to make.

The pending bill proposes to make available money for the District of Columbia for the next 12 months, beginning on the 1st day of July. It is now obvious that unless additional taxes shall be raised, the revenue for the ensuing fiscal year will be from seven and a half million to $10,000,000 short of the sum which will be necessary to meet the appropriations carried by the pending bill.

The bill as now before the Senate suggests items of appropriation aggregating about $350,000 less than the Budget estimates; so that if the bill shall pass in its present form it will carry a sum less than the Budget estimates of approximately $350,000. There are some changes in the bill which are material.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Am I to understand the Senator to state that the appropriation bill carries about $7,500,000 more than will be raised unless additional taxes are imposed?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill as now before the Senate, if passed by this body and approved by the House, will call for an increase in revenue from some source above what will be levied by existing law of at least $7,500,000 additional. It may run as much as $8,000,000 or $9,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. I take it the Appropriations Committee did not take into consideration how the necessary additional money should be raised?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The committee did take it into consideration, but all revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives. If we could have found in this bill some slight opening for attaching tax-raising legislation, we ourselves could have amended the bill to take care of that situation; but there is nothing in the bill that proposes to raise funds, so it cannot be considered to be a revenue-raising bill from any standpoint. Therefore, our committee could not suggest the amendment necessary to raise funds to take care of the additional appropriations in the bill.

However, we had information before the committee, submitted by the Commissioners and others, that the House is now considering measures which it is thought will raise the necessary money to make up the deficit which it is now apparent will ensue if the bill as now pending shall be passed. We think the House will pass the necessary revenue measures to raise additional taxes in the District to meet the now obvious deficit.

The main change in the bill is the transfer of Gallinger Hospital and one other hospital from the Board of Public Welfare to the Board of Public Health. The senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], an eminent authority on matters of the kind, after full consideration recommended that the House amendment making this change be approved by the Senate committee, so the Senate Committee on Appriations acted on his recommendation and we are asking the Senate to concur in the action of the House. Of course, the action of the House was only in the form of an amendment which was stricken out on a point of order, but the House desires that the transfer be made. Mr. COLLINS, chairman of the House committee, is very insistent that the hospitals be placed under the Board of Public Health instead of under the Board of Public Welfare.

There are other amendments in the bill of more or less importance. In times past the District of Columbia has been bearing all the expense of maintaining the judicial system of the District, both the District courts and the Circuit Court of Appeals, both 100-percent Federal agencies.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the matter of the transfer of Gallinger Hospital and another hospital, I wish he would explain just what the two boards are and what the change contemplates.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the District are two boards, one the Board of Public Welfare and the other the Board of Public Health. They are both positive entities in the District government. Heretofore the Board of Public Welfare has been taking care of and supervising the operations of Gallinger Hospital and another hospital. It is believed by eminent authorities that the supervision of these hospitals should be under the Board of Public Health rather than under the Board of Public Welfare. It may be a fancy, but the best authority appearing before us was in favor of the transfer.

Mr. NORRIS. How long have the hospitals been under the supervision of the Board of Public Welfare?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Always, so far as I know.

Mr. NORRIS. What are the functions of the two boards? Do they conflict in any way?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They have the same general end in view, but the Board of Public Health has more detailed work to perform than has the Board of Public Welfare. The Board of Public Health has to do more or less with sanitation and health, while the Board of Public Welfare has to do with public relief. It occurred to the committee that it was proper to transfer the hospitals to the Board of Public Health, which is more concerned with health than with public relief. The Board of Public Welfare has more to do with relief work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to recur to the question of taxes in the District. It has been rumored that the committee had contemplated a sales tax in the District for the purpose of taking care of the deficit.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, I am not authorized to speak and am not advised, but I understand from the public press that a sales-tax proposal is under consideration. Whether it has been voted out by the committee in the House which has charge of the matter, I cannot say, but it has been under consideration.

Let me say for the benefit of the Senator from Idaho that there is a way to raise the additional sum needed without the passage of additional legislation; that is, by raising the general tax rates upon real estate in the District of Columbia. In the last analysis the Commissioners can raise the tax rates upon real estate sufficiently high to cover the deficit, but, of course, that would make the real-estate tax rather heavy in the District of Columbia, because in the District all real property is assessed at approximately 100 percent valuation.

Mr. BORAH. Does the subcommittee of which the Senator is chairman consider favorably the question of the sales tax?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I may state that it has not been considered by the subcommittee; but personally I have always opposed a sales tax, and I oppose it now.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will continue to oppose it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was referring to another important amendment in the bill. We have in the District of Columbia the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. For a long time past the residents of the District of Columbia have been taxed to pay the entire expense of maintaining the United States district court and the United States court of appeals. The evidence shows that 70 percent of the business coming before the court of appeals is Federal business, much of it originating outside of Washington, and only 30 percent of the business before that court originates in and should be taxed to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. Because of this evidence the committee recommends that division be made of the money necessary to be raised to maintain the two courts. As to the United States district court, we suggest a division of 60 percent from the Federal Treasury and 40 percent from the District of Columbia. As to the United States court of appeals, we suggest 70 percent from the Federal Treasury and 30 percent from the District of Columbia. We think that is fair because the people outside of the District of Columbia who receive the benefits from the activities of these two courts should, in my opinion, bear a just proportion of the expenses of the courts.

If there be any question which may arise during the consideration of the various amendments, I shall do my best to explain the amendments. I do not care to take the time now to discuss the amendments further unless there be one of special interest to some Member of the body who desires to ask a question.

I suggest that the first amendment of the committee be stated, and then the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] may proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "General Expenses—Executive office", on page 3, line 22, to strike out "$121,360" and insert "$122,860", so as to read:

Building-inspection division: For personal services, $122,860.

CONTROL AND PREVENTION OF CANCER

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to express my very deep appreciation of the generous impulses which moved 94 of the Members of this body to place their signatures on a bill introduced a short time ago, being Senate bill 2067, which is intended to establish a research bureau or activity of the Federal Government in an effort to discover the causes of cancer. If Senators will bear with me briefly, I wish to discuss some of the practical and very terrifying aspects of the problem. I know the bill will make a very definite appeal to all Senators.

Ninety-four Members of this body introduced a bill March 29 for the high purpose of fighting one of the worst scourges of humanity. I refer to S. 2067, generally known as the cancer-research bill. It would provide $1,000,000 annually to be expended under direction of the Surgeon General of the United States to conduct research into the cause and cure of cancer.

There has lately come to my desk a book, Cancer, the Great Darkness, put out by the editors of Fortune magazine.

On the title page of this book is the statement:

Cancer, the Great Darkness, which engulfs 135,000 lives per year. It is partially penetrated by radium, X-ray, and surgery, but only a new light from the scientific laboratory could dispel it entirely. Yet United States endowments for cancer research total only $5,000,000, their incomes only $200,000.

The cancer research bill is designed to provide $1,000,000 annually to illuminate the cancer darkness with the light of well-organized research. My purpose today is to provide a factual statement about this disease and what can be done about it.

I refer again to the book put out by Fortune, because it is the latest thing on the subject. It asks and answers five pertinent questions. These are:

"What is being done to discover the cause of cancer?"

Answer: "Criminally little. This is largely due to public apathy and ignorance."

"Are deaths from cancer increasing?"

Answer: "Yes; the cancer mortality rate has increased 60 percent in this century."

"Is cancer infectious; is it hereditary?"

Answer: "Probably not; but you will have to wait until science somewhere finds the money to carry on the necessary research work to prove this before you can be sure."

"How long has cancer been recognized, if so little is known about it?"

Answer: "About 3,000 years. The ancient Egyptians used remedies as effective as many modern nostrums."

"Are quack cures still sold?"

Answer: "Yes. If this book can play a part in starting legislation to stop one of the most cruel frauds ever practiced on the American public, it will have further justified its publication."

Statistics show that 1 in each 10 persons past 35 years of age is destined to have cancer. This dread disease has been growing in importance in recent years until now it is second only to heart disease as a cause of death and outranks tuberculosis. Iit kills more persons in 2 years in the United States than were killed and wounded in battle in all our wars from the foundation of the Republic. Cancer in 2 years kills 270,000 human beings—our wars killed or wounded only 244,000.

Despite the importance of cancer as a killer, the amount spent for cancer research by the United States Public Health Service and by private research institutions yearly is less than the cost of building a few big guns. The death rate from cancer advanced from 86 per 100,000 population in 1921 to 116.2 per 100,000 population in 1935 in our country. In 1936 there was a further increase based on data in 21 States for which figures are available.

The following table is made up partly from figures given on May 18, 1928, in this Chamber by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and from data given me by the United States Public Health Service. The Senator from West Virginia told the Senate at that time that "the naked facts and figures which record the rapid, progressive, and persistent advance of this frightful scourge are so appalling as to render superfluous any attempt to emphasize the tale of horror that they tell."

Deaths per 100,000 in the United States:

1921	86.0
1922	86.8
1923	89.4
1924	91.9
1925	92.6
1926	94.9
1931	98.9
1932	102.1
1933	102.2
1934	106.2
1935	116.2

The latter figure being for 23 States. In 1936 there was a further increase based on data in 21 States for which figures are available. The increase between 1921 and 1935 in the mortality per 100,000 population was 34 percent.

As the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] pointed out, in 1928, because of the unusual susceptibility of the female to cancer, 60 percent of the victims were females and 40 percent males. I note that at that time the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who, of all Senators, because of his profession, knows best the ravages of cancer, said, "There is no suffering in the world equal to the torture of cancer." There are no "words strong enough to express the suffering of the human beings with that terrible disease."

Mr. President, I feel that I should be untrue to myself, and I do not believe that I should express what is in the hearts of Members of this body who visualize this frightful scourge at work, if I did not digress for a moment to pay a tribute to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who made a gallant fight in this body in 1928 to secure money to handle this situation, which was then so rapidly developing. The Senator from West Virginia is an able Senator and a very fine gentleman, and he then made a gallant and noble fight; and if he did nothing else so long as he remains in this body, he would stamp himself as a statesman of a high order in visualizing the importance of this subject and in striving to do for suffering humanity what a man in a public body ought to do. If 140,000 persons in this country were burned over slow fires every year, it would stagger the moral conscience of the world; and yet here, we, a body with our fingers on the purse strings, have it in our power at least to try to do something to stamp out a disease which not only takes 140,000 lives each year but which claims them in such a hideous fashion.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has also given of his talent and ability here to draw attention to the situation; and I think it is now time for the Congress of the United States, having met other challenges of insect and parasitic life—the boll weevil and the Texas tick, parasites that infest cattle and animal life—to lay the ax at the root of this tragic problem that confronts it.

The extent to which cancer is claiming its victims is shown by figures supplied by the United States Public Health Service, as follows:

Number of deaths in 1931, exclusive of Texas	118,141
Number of deaths in 1932, exclusive of Texas	122,739
Number of deaths in 1933, all States	128,749
Number of deaths in 1934, all States	134,428

Medical science is able definitely to cure cancer of certain easily reached parts of the body in the early stages but does not as yet know how to prevent development of cancer by removing its cause, for it does not know the cause.

It is fortunate that the press and the radio are turning the spotlight of publicity on this frightful disease. An organization of which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is a leader is calling public attention to the fact that cancer is no longer entirely incurable; that radium, X-ray, and the knife can conquer this malignant growth if recognized in time; that there is no reason for the victim of this disease to cover the fact as though it were something to be ashamed of. Physicians have been much handicapped by the feeling of the public that if a person has cancer he should guard that fact as a secret, speak of it only in whispers, and that if someone dies of cancer his death should be attributed to some other cause.

The importance of obtaining and disseminating knowledge about cancer is indicated by the fact that four out of five cases of early cancer can be cured, but not even one out of five of late cases can be cured.

There may be those in this and other countries who have information about cancer that would be of great benefit to the medical profession if that information were properly tested by a Government research organization and approved. When an organization is set up to test every new finding, knowledge may be brought forth that will result in bringing health and surcease from suffering to millions.

It is pointed out by Dr. Ellice McDonald, director of the Biochemical Research Foundation of the Franklin Institute, that petty jealousies of scientists are holding up discovery of the cure for cancer. Dr. McDonald has been endeavoring to establish a plan for correlation of all work on cancer, believing this would prevent duplication and give investigators the advantage of each other's growing knowledge.

"I found", he stated in his report, "that university men were very jealous of their plans and results, as they considered their advancement within the university to be dependent upon their reputation as gained by publication, and that their results were their own stock in trade."

The New York Times, in an editorial on March 25, 1937, points out the need for coordinating the work of cancer research agencies. It calls attention to the outstanding contributions to science of such organizations as the Bell Telephone laboratories, where a research director heads the various types of work done by scores of specialists.

The New York Times says:

> In cancer research, on the other hand, cytologists, radiation experts, biochemists, pathologists, and geneticists go their own separate ways. Of planning, organization, teamwork, expert direction there is not a trace. The council—

Referring to the Cancer Council—> would not approve formal attempts to regiment or to organize cancer research under the direction of a "supermind" or dictator. It thinks that no one person knows enough about physics, chemistry, surgery, biology, and other sciences. It ought to visit the Kodak laboratories and learn how Dr. C. Kenneth Mees, without presuming to be a dictator or a scientific Admirable Crichton, supervises the work of specialists in radiation, vitamins, photosynthesis, and the manifold and difficult branches of photochemistry and geometric optics.

In an article on March 15 in the Washington Herald by Gobind Behari Lal, Universal Service science editor, the statement was made that—

> The failure of science to discover a real cure for cancer was attributed by the Cancer Council here today to lack of money for research work.

There is a striking comparison between the lack of money spent to conquer this disease and the amount of money spent to conquer diseases that affect property, such as plants and animals. There was appropriated for the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine by the Seventy-fourth Congress $5,317,675 to safeguard the country against diseases affecting plants. For instance, $399,531 was appropriated for safeguarding fruits, grapes, and nuts from fruit insects; $366,000 for combating insects affecting truck crops, ornamental, and garden plants; and $372,229 to combat insects affecting cereals and forage.

The Seventy-fourth Congress appropriated for eradicating tuberculosis in livestock $2,631,616; for inspection and quarantine, including eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle, $681,174; for eradication of cattle ticks, $613,940; for investigating diseases of animals, $381,755; and for the eradication of hog cholera, $373,424.

I have no quarrel with expenditures for combating diseases of plants and animals. I only call attention to the grievous disparity between the expense to which we go to preserve property as compared with the small amount of money spent to preserve human life.

In closing, I would like to call attention to a letter I received from Willis R. Whitney, vice president in charge of research of the General Electric Co. In Mr. Whitney's opinion cancer research can and should be organized in somewhat the same way as the research work in an industrial organization such as the General Electric. I quote from Mr. Whitney's letter:

> We heartily endorse the undertaking authorized by this bill. Continuous intensive research in the physical sciences is insured by the necessities of industry. Research in the equally or more important fields of biology and sociology must for the most part be dependent on private endowment until the Government takes up this work of utmost importance to the welfare of all citizens.
> No better beginning could be made than in the study of cancer. Much excellent work on cancer is already in progress in a number of separate institutions.
>
> The Senate bill seems to make possible the gradual upbuilding of a cancer research laboratory or center possessing the advantages of systematic coordinated efforts. It means simply the establishment of facilities for maximum helpfulness of a group of research workers—helpfulness through interchange of plans for mutually supplementary, rather than unrelated or merely duplicative studies, and through the prompt combination of results to speed the fabrication of the growing structure of knowledge. Organization makes possible the union of effort, which multiplies manyfold the efficiency of the individual worker and the value of his results. It should not be repressive of initiative, but should widen opportunity. It should provide the most fertile soil for the growth and fruition of all the ideas of all its component individuals.
> A large organization possessing this character cannot be created overnight. It must have an organic growth, and time is needed for this and permanency so that fine quality young men will be willing to join as a life undertaking.
>
> I can visualize a procedure somewhat as follows: First, I would create an advisory committee composed, perhaps, of the presidents of the scientific societies covering the several fields which should contribute to cancer research. This committee might be comprised of presidents of such societies as the National Academy of Sciences, the American Medical Association, radiological societies, the chemical and physical and biological societies, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science. This committee should be purely advisory. All authority should be invested in the Surgeon General and exercised by the director of cancer research to be appointed by him.
> The selection of the director will be the first and by far the most important task of the Surgeon General. The director should possess youth, enthusiasm, judgment, tact, a research background, and a willingness to seek continually for the ablest research workers to be had, abler, if possible, in research than the director himself.
>
> No large and elaborate laboratory should be erected at the start. Space might be found in or adjoining some Federal hospital receiving cancer patients. Clinical material will always be important. One by one, as the right men were found, the director would build up his staff—biologists, chemists, and physicists, giving each man encouragement and facilities to expand his own ideas and researches, but maintaining close contact and helpful cooperation among all, and building up the esprit de corps which gives organic unity of effort.
>
> In this work the authority of the director should be absolute, subject only to the general supervision, the general policies, and the veto power of the Surgeon General.
> Since, under the prevailing governmental system, it is desirable that the annual appropriation be spent each year, and since the building up of the new organization will and should take time, I would suppose that, for the first year or two, much of the money would be used by making grants-in-aid to institutions already engaged in cancer research. In deciding on the allocation and size of such grants, as well as in the selection of the director, such an advisory committee as I have suggested should be very helpful. But with the building up of the new organization, and with the growing experience and confidence of the director, the amount spent in grants should diminish, as more and more, and finally all, the appropriation is required for the work of the laboratory.

I have not commented in detail on the wording of the bill, as I understand it is simply an enabling act.

I believe that in this letter Mr. Whitney has made a substantial contribution to the body of facts needed in consideration of legislation of this kind. His letter, based as it is on many years of experience in operating a great research organization, will doubtless be of much value to the committee considering the bill.

I have also received a valuable letter from F. B. Jewett, president, Bell Telephone Laboratories, who says he will be most happy to put at the disposal of the Senate committee or at the disposal of the Public Health Service any information which he has as to methods of organization of scientific research. Mr. Jewett says he will be glad to appear before the committee and I hope that he and others of like capability will be given that opportunity.

Since the bill has been introduced I have received upward of 50 letters from persons and organizations in this and foreign countries asserting that they have valuable information in regard to the cause and cure of cancer. Perhaps some of them have—who knows? Certainly some of them have not, since it is obvious from many of the letters that the writers are talking from ignorance and not from knowledge.

If this bill passes, a central agency will be created which can sift the wheat from the chaff and I believe that it would perform a function of value to the public by condemning nostrums that delude cancer sufferers, in addition to its more important task of forwarding discovery of new information about cancer.

I know from the number of signatures on this bill that the Senate of the United States is fully alive to the necessity of providing the monetary ammunition to make an effective battle against cancer.

Mr. President, this bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, the chairman of which is our good friend the senior Senator from New York, Dr. COPELAND, an able and eminent physician, and I know from what the Senator from New York has said that it is his desire to have the best technical, medical, and surgical information in the country made available to his committee in some sort of a hearing which I think he intends to have. I think we may look forward to a fine piece of work at the hands of Dr. COPELAND, who certainly knows more about this subject than any other Member of the Senate.

I again wish to say, before I conclude, that I think the people of the United States owe a great debt of gratitude to the senior Senator from West Virginia for having made the fight he did make many years ago. We are now approaching this matter realistically. We do not necessarily have to plow a fallow field. The conscience of the country has been touched by the ravages of this disease, and I hope that the splendid work done by the Senator from West Virginia, and the contribution and aid given to him by the Senator from New York at that time, will bear fruit in the enactment, before this session shall end, of the bill to which I have called attention.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to what the Senator from Washington has said about cancer. I may state that immediately on receipt of the bill he has been discussing, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, a request was made of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service that one official from his organization be assigned to make up a list of prospective witnesses. That information will be available, I may say to the Senator from Washington, within a very few days, and I hope that we may proceed then with the hearings, which are so desirable.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on June 7, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 430. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Elmer E. Miller;

S. 451. An act for the relief of Farley J. Holloman;

S. 522. An act for the relief of R. R. Purcell;

S. 556. An act for the relief of W. B. Greeley;

S. 733. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of Robert A. Watson;

S. 1081. An act for the relief of H. G. Carriere, Charles E. Livingston, and John Latham;

S. 1471. An act for the relief of Jordan Roberts;

S. 1479. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles White;

S. 1507. An act authorizing the return of the commission of John Baptiste Ashe as a major in the Continental Army to Martha B. Rogers, nee Ashe;

S. 1572. An act for the relief of Frank Fisher;

S. 1753. An act for the relief of James A. Fox; and

S. 2059. An act to authorize Austin H. Clark and Ellsworth P. Killip, of the United States National Museum, to accept certain decorations, respectively, from the Danish and French Governments.

REFERENCE OF BILL CREATING REGIONAL CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] presented a very comprehensive bill, a very worthy bill, relating to the establishment of a number of authorities to deal with all questions relating to flood control, navigation, the control of rivers, and other allied subjects, together with due consideration to erosion and forestation. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This morning the Committee on Commerce, by unanimous vote, directed the chairman to say to the Senate that it is the feeling of the committee that the bill to which I have referred properly belongs in the Committee on Commerce. Matters of the nature of those dealt with in the bill of the Senator have always been considered by the Committee on Commerce. A companion bill in the House of Representatives was referred, I believe properly, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

A few days ago the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] gave notice of his intention to ask for the discharge of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the further consideration of the bill and its reference to the Committee on Commerce. At this time the Senator from Missouri is at the bedside of his mother, who is seriously ill. I had word yesterday that he desires to press this matter. It is the desire of the Committee on Commerce that the matter be pressed, and I give notice that some time next week—early in the week, we hope, with the return of the Senator from Missouri—an effort will be made to present the question to the Senate in such a way that it will decide to send the bill where we believe it properly belongs.

I do not want it understood from anything I have said this morning that I am committed in any sense to opposition to the bill of the Senator from Nebraska. If it shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce, it will receive there the consideration which the importance of the subject demands. It will be the pleasure of the committee to extend an invitation to the Senator from Nebraska to be present and to participate in the discussion of the bill on a plane of equality with all the members of the Committee on Commerce. I myself am perfectly clear that the bill belongs in the Committee on Commerce, and the purpose of my comments this morning is merely to call attention to the fact that some time soon the Senate will be asked to determine whether or not the reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the proper one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course the Senator has the right to make the motion to which he has referred. I recognize the right of any Member of the Senate to make a motion to discharge the committee having charge of any bill at any time, and that he can move to refer the bill to any other committee, even after the committee to which it was originally referred has reported the bill to the Senate.

I do not care at this moment to discuss the issue; but when the motion for change of reference of the bill is made I shall enter upon a discussion of the question in some detail. At this time I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the Senator from New York is just now enjoying the honor of having had referred to the Committee on Commerce a bill dealing with the subject of cancer, its cause and its cure. The Committee on Commerce now has before it the bill referred to so eloquently earlier in the day by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], dealing with the study of the cause and the cure of cancer. Of course, as everyone can see, that is a question which directly affects commerce, and it is clear that such a bill should go to the Committee on Commerce. That situation, however, directs our attention to the broad jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, dealing, as it does, with subjects all the way from medical subjects to farming operations, and to the fact that bills dealing with such subjects should go to the Committee on Commerce.

I suppose in due time, when the motion is made, the Senate will have the right to vote by roll call, which I shall demand and which I will welcome, upon the matter of referring the bill in question to the Committee on Commerce.

Following the line of procedure and practice of many years, bills of the nature of the one in question have been referred by the Senate to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee yesterday took up the bill and referred it to a subcommittee for hearings; and that subcommittee has today arranged for its first meeting in order to have, if possible, logical hearings upon the question. However, I presume it now will be the duty of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to stop operations, to wait until those who are versed in cancer cures shall decide whether this farm bill ought to go to a committee dealing with agricultural matters or should go to a committee which has charge of subjects relating to cancer, and deals directly with matters affecting commerce. In due time the question will come up, and we shall discuss it when it comes up.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not intend to be sarcastic or trivial in his comments. If there is any other committee of the Senate which can properly deal with the subject of cancer, I shall be happy, indeed, to have the bill referred to that committee. We have no public-health committee, and so the bill may well go anywhere.

With respect to the bill referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that I recall very well the problem dealt with in connection with the Tennessee Valley, because I helped him at the time to do what in my humble way I could do to deal with it. But the question involved at that time was not flood control or the navigability of the river. The question involved was the making of fertilizer, essentially an agricultural product. That is why that subject went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to split hairs with the Senator from Nebraska or with anyone else; but when a committee, the prime function of which is to deal, among other things, with commerce, with the control of floodwaters—a committee which has always dealt with such problems—is suddenly confronted with the fact that it is disregarded, and a bill the primary purpose of which has to do with flood control, with rivers, is sent to another committee, then I think that committee very well has the right to enter its protest, as it did unanimously this morning.

At the proper time we can discuss all the adventitious and auxiliary questions involved in connection with this matter; but I am sure the Senator from Nebraska, when he thinks about it, will come to the conclusion that, so far as the bill introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is concerned, it might perhaps just as well go to the Committee on Commerce as to any other committee. However, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I should be very glad to have the bill dealing with the subject of cancer referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, since the bill dealing with cancer has been mentioned, I desire to say to all interested Senators that when the bill was prepared I understood generally that a Senator might suggest that it go to any committee. I am frank to say to my brethren here that I did not know where this kind of a bill ought to go; but the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] being a physician, I talked to him about the bill before it was introduced and asked him, if it were sent to his committee, whether he would undertake its consideration. I did not know any Member of the Senate who was so well qualified as the Senator from New York to handle this particular type of bill.

When the bill was filed, I requested that it go to the Committee on Commerce merely because of the fact that its chairman is a physician, which perhaps will explain why I requested that this particular bill should go to the Committee on Commerce. Frankly I did not know where to ask that it be sent, but my problem was solved by the fact that the chairman of the Commerce Committee was a physician.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course, I made no effort and I do not intend to make any effort to have the Senator's bill referred to some other committee. I have not objected and I do not now object to the reference of that bill to the Committee on Commerce. However, when the Senator says that offhand and without giving the matter any particular thought he did not know of any committee to which the bill relating to cancer should be referred, I should like to state that we have in the Senate a standing Committee on Education and Labor. I think it would be very appropriate that the bill should be referred to that committee. However, the Senator from Washington asked that his bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, the chairman of which is the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]—or I will say Dr. COPELAND—and, having such a wide scope of jurisdiction, there is not any doubt that the Committee on Commerce does have jurisdiction over almost any subject.

However, for over 20 years the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has had jurisdiction of bills dealing with subjects similar to those dealt with by the bill under discussion. That committee has had months and months of hearings on the subject, and when the time comes I shall be able to show that bills on this subject by the dozen—yes; by the hundred—have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, have been reported favorably to the Senate, and have been passed by the Senate.

Mr. President, the question which will be involved in connection with the consideration of the bill is not a question of navigation, although that is the constitutional peg on which the proposed legislation hangs. It is not going to be a question of flood control, although that is a question which under the Constitution we are privileged to deal with. The enemies of the bill are fighting it for another reason—because the question of power is involved in it, and the private power companies of the country are going to try to send it to the Committee on Commerce or any other committee to get it away from a committee which has studied the subject for 20 years, has held hearings on it, and has favorably reported bills which have not suited the private power companies.

So let us not get away from the real point at issue. There is more in that bill pertaining to agriculture than anything else, although it has features which could very properly be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. Many pages of the bill deal entirely with legal questions. Questions of navigation are involved in it. That is the constitutional reason why we can legislate on the subject. It also deals with soil erosion; it deals with reforestation; it deals with control of submarginal lands.

After all, Mr. President, all the other reasons for the proposed legislation can fade away if we confine it to one thing—flood control. The farmers of America have lost millions of tons of soil and are still losing millions of tons of soil, especially in the Mississippi Valley. Fertile soil is going down the Mississippi River every year to be deposited in the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean. After all, when we get down to the bottom of it all, it is a matter having to do with conservation of our soil and the improvement of our farm life, having to do with the development of agriculture, upon which our industries, navigation, and everything else depend.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to add one word to what has been said.

I do not like the implication of the words of the Senator from Nebraska about the power companies. I know nothing about the power companies. I have not been approached by any power company. I am here as a Senator to do my duty as best I can. I preside over a committee which this morning unanimously took this action. They made no reference to the power question.

The main problem of this bill, as I see it, is flood control and river control. The Senator from Nebraska, who perhaps thinks in other terms, thinks of it in terms of a farm bill. But since the projects in question head upon rivers and relate to the control of rivers, no matter what the incidental benefits to agriculture may be, the main question involved in every project is what it has to do with the control of water.

Mr. President, I do not know anything about the power companies. I am not at all interested in them. But I am interested to do my duty as a Member of the Senate in connection with the work to which I have been assigned and in which I was joined unanimously by my colleagues this morning.

Now, Mr. President, as we have finished that debate——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is through with the subject, I want to say a word about power.

The Senator said that he knows nothing about power. Well, for God's sake, why not refer this bill that has power features in it to a committee that does know something about power? The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has been studying the question for 20 years; they do know something about it, I think. Even that would be a reason for the reference to that committee, although such action is not advocated solely on that ground. It is no insinuation against the Senator——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not say that we did not know about power.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator said he did not know anything about power.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator talked about power companies and what they are seeking to do. My reply to the Senator related to the possible influence of power companies. We are just as competent in the Committee on Commerce to deal with power in connection with river and flood-control projects as are the members of any other committee of the Senate, and I think it is quite unfair for the Senator repeatedly to make implications which reflect upon the Committee on Commerce and its chairman.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say—and his statement will appear in the RECORD—that he did not know anything about power. If the Senator does know something about power, I take that all back; that is all right. There is no insinuation against the Senator or his committee or anybody else. I do not object to the private power companies trying to get an advantage, if they think they can get one. They know what to expect from the Agricultural Committee; but they do not know what they will get from some other committee, and they would rather jump into the dark and take a chance than to run up against a certainty as to what they might expect from the committee that has given the subject attention.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think for one moment that it was because of the influence of the power companies and the utilities that this protest has been entered here?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know who makes the protest or where it originates; so I cannot answer the Senator's question.

Mr. COPELAND. I can answer it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has a right to answer it, of course.

Mr. COPELAND. I can answer that the attitude of the committee, so far as I know, has not been influenced in any manner whatever by the utilities.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that is true. Here is a committee that the power companies, however, know nothing about, and here is another one with which they have had experience; they do not like it, and they would rather get away from it to another one that they do not know anything about.

Mr. COPELAND. And on that account they have influenced us to take this position? That is the natural implication of the Senator's words.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the implication?

Mr. COPELAND. That we are trying to get possession of this bill in order that we may serve the power companies.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any such implication; the Senator has no right to draw that kind of a conclusion from anything I have said. Here, however, we have a case where for 20 years one committee has handled a certain line of bills. All at once, out of a clear sky, after they have handled such bills—and I think it can be demonstrated that the law from which the bill in question is copied has been the greatest example in the world of the comprehensive control of floodwaters, if you please—it is now proposed to take jurisdiction away from that committee and lodge it in some other committee. Is there any implication or insinuation against the Agricultural Committee that the Senator makes by his motion? I do not draw any. I concede he has a right to make it; but, if I were ticklish and tender-skinned, I could easily find a reason for asserting that it was an insult to the Agricultural Committee that, after many years of experience and labor, this work should now be taken away from them. If that is done, as the Senator wants it done on a roll call, I will have nothing more to say. If it is the desire of the Senate to relieve us of that kind of work, very well, go ahead. I am not taking it that the Senator who makes the motion or any other Senator who believes with those who think the motion ought to be made is casting an insinuation against the honesty or the fidelity of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; but when I resist the motion, then I am confronted with the suggestion, "Why, you are casting slurs or insinuations against another committee of this body." There is no foundation for that suggestion; there is no reason for it. I do not want to shear off the work of the other committee, and if the Senator thinks his committee ought to do this work, it will be up to the Senate to decide the question when he makes the motion.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was not present at the meeting of the Commerce Committee this morning when the action was taken supporting the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that the bill proposing an extension of the T. V. A. principle and to spread it over the whole country be considered by the Committee on Commerce. The chairman of the committee, however, telephoned me and asked for my consent to support the proposition if supported by the committee, and I readily gave it. I gave it for reasons, and of course I am willing to state the reasons.

I do not think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] intended any reflection on the Committee on Commerce. I will say to him candidly, and, of course, courteously, that when he made the expression in his remarks I wondered that he made it, but his second statement cleared my mind. I will call his attention to his expression. He said the power companies wished to get the bill before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think all I stated was that the power companies would be glad to get the measure away from the Agricultural Committee. If I used the language the Senator attributes to me, I should like to modify it in that way.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think the Senator meant to reflect upon the committee, and I do not think the Senator has any reason for saying or suggesting—I do not think he meant to suggest—that the Committee on Commerce was a party to anything of that sort. I think we have cleared away that idea.

My reasons for supporting the motion of the Senator from Missouri and the action of the committee are very simple. I will agree that the bill creating the T. V. A. Authority was considered and reported by the Agricultural Committee, and I will agree that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry did a great job and is entitled to the thanks of the Nation for its work; I raise no question about that. But on what basis was that done?

The Muscle Shoals Dam, Mr. President, was built in response to the then President's view of the necessities of national defense. He conceived, since our country did not naturally produce nitrates, that it was a wise and prudent and really necessary thing to find waterpower in the central portion of the country by means of which nitrate could be produced for war purposes. The war ended before the dam was completed. Then the question arose as to what we should do with the dam. A great deal of discussion and no end of difficulty ensued, but the general consensus was that we could use the power created at Muscle Shoals for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates from the air, and, of course, the nitrates would be for the benefit of the farmers in our country. Very naturally, under that theory, the Muscle Shoals measure, developing into the T. V. A. project, being centered in the objective of nitrates for farmers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Now, Mr. President, we have quite a different situation. No one contends that the present purpose is to manufacture nitrates by means of the instrumentalities that are to be constructed all over the country; and if it were so contended I fear that the legislation would fall to the ground as being without authority. The proposition as it comes before us now by reason of the President's message is quite candidly and clearly based on flood control and navigation. Are flood control and navigation proper subjects for the consideration of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or are they more properly subjects for the consideration of the Committee on Commerce. That is all the question we have before us. I know the Senator from Nebraska would not say that our committee is incapable of handling that subject. We have always handled measures affecting navigation; we have always handled measures affecting flood control. Why should there now be a change?

I have given the reasons why the T. V. A. and the Muscle Shoals bills rather logically fell under the jurisdiction and received the consideration of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. But now we have a departure. No longer is there involved a proposal to make nitrates. The objective primarily is no longer in the interest of the farmer. The necessary objective, the practical objective, is flood control, and it is flood control largely on the navigable streams. The secondary motive is navigation. The proposed legislation is to be justified on the basis of flood control and navigation. No one will contend that legislation, the primary and secondary motives for which are respectively flood control and navigation, should logically go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am sure everyone will concede that it should logically go to the Committee on Commerce. That is the basis for the position we have taken.

I do not intend to give anyone any offense, and I do not intend to take any offense. I would be willing to have the matter disposed of at the present moment but for the fact that the Senator who made the motion is absent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The motion never has been made, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], before he went away, said to me he would not press the motion and authorized me to state that fact, if necessary, to the Senate. That is what happened.

Mr. BAILEY. That leaves me in some confusion. The Senator from Nebraska first said that the motion has never been made, and then said that the Senator from Missouri stated he would not press the motion.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the RECORD will not show the motion has been made.

Mr. BAILEY. Then how could he press the motion?

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what he said. That is not difficult to understand, it seems to me. I take it from what he said that he is not going to make the motion. He used the words, as I remember, "You are authorized to state, if it is deemed best, even in the Senate, that I will not press the motion."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. What happened was that the Senator from Missouri, following a discussion which took place the other day——

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I remember the discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. No motion had been made, but during the discussion the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] indicated that he would at some time in the future make a motion to change the reference. Before the adjournment of the Senate on that day the Senator from Missouri rose and gave notice that upon his return from Missouri, where he was about to go, he would enter the motion; but the motion was not actually made.

Mr. BAILEY. That is perfectly clear, and I thank the Senator from Nebraska and also the Senator from Kentucky for the information. The difference is that a motion is not pending, but a notice of the motion has been given. That is modified by the statement of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator who gave the notice has stated to him he would not press the motion. I believe that is a true statement of the situation. I was under the impression that the motion was pending and that we were not going to dispose of it until next week. I got that impression from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I take it we will have to wait until the Senator from Missouri returns in order that he may not press his motion.

Mr. President, under the circumstances, I think I can bring the matter to an issue. I am perfectly willing to make the motion that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, for the reason that the bill relates fundamentally, primarily, and necessarily to navigation and flood control. I make the motion, further disavowing any intention whatever of intending any offense to anyone.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not a consideration of such a motion displace the appropriation bill which is now under consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would require unanimous consent to make the motion at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not make the motion until after the pending appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I give notice that on behalf of the committee and in response to its action this morning, and on its merits and without the slightest intention of offending anybody or doing any injustice in the premises, I shall make the motion later. If the Senate shall adopt the policy—and that is what we would be doing—of referring bills relating to navigation and flood control to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and not to the Committee on Commerce, then that committee will understand the position of the Senate from that time henceforth.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk may read the first section of the bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] outlining the purpose and policy of the so-called Norris bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the Conservation Authorities Act of 1937.

PURPOSE AND POLICY OF THE ACT

SECTION 1. It is the purpose and policy of this act to develop, integrate, and coordinate plans, projects, and activities for or incidental to the promotion of navigation, the control and prevention of floods, the safeguarding of navigable waters, and the reclamation of the public lands, in order to aid and protect commerce among the several States, to strengthen the national defense, to conserve the water, soil, and forest resources of the Nation, to stabilize employment and relieve unemployment, and otherwise to protect commerce among the States, to provide for the national defense, and to promote the general welfare of the United States.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will again be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 22, under the subheading "Executive office", it is proposed to strike out "$121,360" and insert "$122,860", so as to make the paragraph read:

Building inspection division: For personal services, $122,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$43,160" and insert "$43,660", and in line 25, after the words "in all" and the comma, to strike out "$43,460" and insert "$43,960", so as to read:

Plumbing inspection division: For personal services, $43,660; two members of plumbing board at $150 each; in all, $43,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after "(49 Stat., p. 1917)" and the comma, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$20,500", so as to read:

Smoke and boiler regulation: For personal services, equipment, instruments, supplies, transportation, and other contingent expenses necessary for the enforcement of the Act entitled "An act to prevent the fouling of the atmosphere in the District of Columbia by smoke and other foreign substances, and for other purposes", approved August 15, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 653), and the act entitled "An act to provide for the inspection, control, and regulation of steam boilers and unfired pressure vessels in the District of Columbia", approved June 25, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1917), $20,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Care of the District buildings", on page 4, line 22, after the word "hour" and the comma, to strike out "$99,526" and insert "$104,200", so as to read:

For personal services, including temporary labor, and service of cleaners as necessary at not to exceed 48 cents per hour, $104,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, at the end of line 4, to change the appropriation for personal services in the assessor's office from $209,920 to $223,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, at the end of line 6, to change the appropriation for personal services in the collector's office from $47,020 to $47,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Auditor's office", on page 5, line 8, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$136,700, of which $10,000 shall be available immediately, for examination of estimates of appropriations, and for other purposes" and insert "$126,700", so as to read:

For personal services, $126,700; and the compensation of the present incumbent of the position of disbursing officer of the District of Columbia shall be exclusive of his compensation as United States property and disbursing officer for the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of corporation counsel", on page 5, line 19, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$113,360" and insert "$102,580", so as to read:

Corporation counsel, including extra compensation as general counsel of the Public Utilities Commission, and other personal services, $102,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Alcoholic Beverage Control Board", on page 5, line 21, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "including two inspectors in the field at $2,300 each", so as to read:

For personal services, streetcar and bus transportation, telephone service, not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase of samples, not exceeding $100 for witness fees, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $42,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coroner's office", on page 6, line 4, to strike out "$10,600" and insert "$12,040", so as to read:

For personal services, including deputy coroners, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $12,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets", on page 6, line 13, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$63,880, including not exceeding $10,080 for the issuance of licenses under the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat., pp. 550–563)" and insert "$53,800", so as to read:

For personal services, $53,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of chief clerk, engineer department", on page 6, line 26, before the word "employment", to strike out "temporary", so as to read:

For personal services, $31,940, including $2,600 for the employment of one safety inspector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "services" and the comma, to change the appropriation for personal services in the municipal architect's office from $56,980 to $57,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Utilities Commission", on page 7, line 13, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$61,500" and insert "$69,000", so as to read:

For two commissioners, people's counsel, and for other personal services, $69,000, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 19, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,500", so as to read:

For incidental and all other general necessary expenses authorized by law, including the purchase of newspapers, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 3, to strike out:

The Public Utilities Commission is authorized to make an investigation of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. with a view to ascertaining the reasonableness of existing rates, tolls, charges, and services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of Insurance", on page 8, line 13, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "including one fire-insurance-rate expert at not exceeding $4,600 per annum, $29,220" and insert "$24,980", so as to read:

For personal services, $24,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, after the word "services" and the comma, to change the appropriation for personal services in the surveyor's office from $79,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 19, to insert:

MINIMUM WAGE BOARD

For personal services in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $12,170.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 22, to insert:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including purchase of equipment, printing and binding, office equipment, telephone rental, postage, and other necessary items, $2,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 4, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF VEHICLES AND TRAFFIC

For personal services, $82,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 6, to insert:

For purchase, installation, and modification of electric traffic lights, signals and controls, markers, painting white lines, labor maintenance of non-passenger-carrying motor vehicles, and such other expenses as may be necessary in the judgment of the Commissioners, including not to exceed $30,000 for the operation and maintenance of electric traffic lights, signals and controls, $93,000, of which not less than $25,000 shall be expended for the purchase, installation, and modification of electric traffic-light signals: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be expended for building, installing, and maintaining street-car loading platforms and lights of any description employed to distinguish same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 19, to insert:

For the purchase of motor-vehicle identification number plates, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 23, after the word "services" and the comma, to change the appropriation for personal services under the register of wills from $73,500 to $74,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 7, after the word "services" and the comma, to change the appropriation for personal services under the recorder of deeds from $106,020 to $114,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 16, after the word "expenses" and the comma, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$12,500", so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including telephone service, printing, binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; typewriters, towels, towel service, furniture and equipment and repairs thereto; books of reference, law books and periodicals, streetcar tokens, postage; not exceeding $100 for rest room for sick and injured employees and the equipment of and medical supplies for said rest room, and all other necessary incidental expenses, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 17, after the word "deeds" and the comma, to strike out "$12,600" and insert "$14,000, to be expended without reference to the provisions of section 6 of this act", so as to read:

For rent of offices of the recorder of deeds, $14,000, to be expended without reference to the provisions of section 6 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses", on page 11, line 21, after the words "law books", to insert "including $500 for law books for the office of corporation counsel", and on page 12, line 17, after the word "offices" and the comma, to strike out "$29,050" and insert "$29,550", so as to read:

For checks, books, law books, including $500 for law books for the office of corporation counsel, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, stationery; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; ice; traveling expenses not to exceed $2,000, including payment of dues and traveling expenses in attending conventions when authorized by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; expenses authorized by law in connection with the removal of dangerous or unsafe and insanitary buildings, including payment of a fee of $6 per diem to each member of board of survey, other than the inspector of buildings, while actually employed on surveys of dangerous or unsafe buildings; not exceeding $3,000 for the settlement of claims not in excess of $250 each, approved by the Commissioners under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia", approved February 11, 1929 (45 Stat. 1160), as amended by the act approved June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 500); and other general necessary expenses of District offices, $29,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Central Garage", on page 14, after line 10, to insert:

For allowances for furnishing privately owned motor vehicles in the performance of official duties at a rate of not to exceed $264 per year for each automobile, $10,296: Provided, That allowances under this appropriation shall be made only to persons whose duties require full-time field service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 22, after the words "total of", to strike out "$10,400" and insert "$8,900", so as to read:

The Commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to furnish necessary transportation in connection with strictly official business of the District of Columbia by the purchase of streetcar and bus fares from appropriations contained in this act: Provided, That the expenditures herein authorized shall be so apportioned as not to exceed a total of $8,900: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not include the appropriations herein made for the fire and police departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sewers", on page 19, line 4, after the word "services" and the comma, to strike out "$180,030" and insert "$183,000", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 3, after the word "Northwest" and the comma, to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$350,000", and in line 4, after the word "sum", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$28,300", so as to read:

For beginning the construction of a new senior high school on a site already owned by the District of Columbia at Fifth and Sheridan Streets NW., $350,000, of which sum $28,300 shall be available for the preparation of plans, specifications, and administration; the employment of such personal services to be without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $1,350,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, regarding the amendment on line 3, page 36, I desire to say that the construction of a high school at Fifth and Sheridan Streets has been advocated for a number of years. As far back as 1930 a site was procured for the building, and the citizens' associations and the people in general of that section of the city have urged the building of a high school there. Two or three high schools have been built in the city—I do not remember just how many—since that site was purchased, and there is no question about the need of a high school at that point. Members of the citizens' associations have come before the committee year after year and have demonstrated that there is need for a high school in that district. They now send their children from the north, from what may be called the Manor Park or Takoma district, to high schools all over the city, and it results in adding to the congestion of traffic and bringing about a great deal of inconvenience to the people who live out there.

This year the Budget Bureau approved an amount of $450,000 for the commencement of this building, including the plans, specifications, and so forth. The committee has cut down the amount from $450,000 to $350,000. I desire to say that ordinarily the first contract for a high-school building runs to seven or eight or nine hundred thousand dollars. The total amount authorized for this building, as provided in line 10, is $1,350,000. If only $350,000 is appropriated this year, as recommended by the committee, it will mean an appropriation next year—if the building is to be completed next year—of $1,000,000, and, of course, that will be a large appropriation. I understand that under the present tax system of the District of Columbia there will not be enough money raised to pay all the appropriations contained in this bill; but the House Committee on the District of Columbia now is working on a bill to raise some $7,000,000 of additional taxes in the District of Columbia to take care of the necessary appropriations that are included in this bill. I am told that $100,000 was taken out of the appropriation for this high school and $100,000 out of the appropriation for another high school and put in the new paragraph at the middle of page 36 for the commencement of a colored school on some playground.

It strikes me as just a little out of place for the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate of the United States to provide for building a colored school, or any other school, on a playground. We now have altogether too few playgrounds in the city; and to spoil one of the few we have by putting a high school or a grade school on it, it seems to me, is just a little out of all sense of propriety and justice; and so far as the children are concerned, I know that it will spoil the playground forever to have a school building erected on it.

I mention that because $200,000 is taken from the high school I have spoken of by the amendment on line 3, page 36, and from another high school to make this appropriation. I have no objection, of course, to building schools for colored children. They need them; but the point I make is that the citizens' associations in the territory that will be covered by the school at Fifth and Sheridan Streets NW. are in need of a high school, and they have been advocating it for years. Two or three sessions ago I secured the adoption of an amendment in the Senate providing money to begin the work there, but it was stricken out by the House conferees; and I ask the Senate to reject the Senate committee amendment on page 36, line 3, in regard to this high school.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to oppose the rejection of the committee amendment, as urged by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]

It is true that the District needs a school at this particular point. It is true that the authorization has been made to build a school at this particular point; and the first estimate submitted by the Budget Bureau was for $350,000 with which to start the construction of the school. That is the exact amount carried by this bill. The bill carries, as a direct appropriation to be made immediately available for starting the construction of the school, the exact amount of money which was recommended by the Budget Bureau; so no harm can be done by carrying the amount as recommended. This will permit the construction of the school to be started immediately. Of course, if the amount were increased by $100,0000, it might be that the District authorities could spend $100,000 more during the coming fiscal year; but the Congress will meet again in January. The authorization is the law; and if the authorities should run out of money by that time, one of the deficiency bills could carry a sufficient sum to carry on the construction work until the end of the next fiscal year, June 30, 1938.

Some complaint is made about building a school for the colored population on a playground. Mr. President, we already have the playground; and it was thought entirely proper to build this school on this colored playground, where the colored population are accustomed to assemble. The building of a school will not destroy the entire area for playground purposes but it will result in building a school on what is now a public playground. The fact is that all school-building grounds are used for public-playground purposes. There will be no change from the present condition in the case of this particular item after the school is built, and the ground there will be used for public-playground purposes.

Mr. President, I may say just one further word. The House of Representatives increased the items for white-school construction purposes considerably above the estimates. At the same time the House reduced the estimates for colored-school construction far below the estimates. A strong protest was registered with the committee against increasing the estimates for the white school population and against decreasing the estimates for the colored school population. In this city approximately one-third of the population can be classified as of the colored race. Two-thirds are white and one-third colored. That is not exact but it is approximately correct. Of the school population, probably a larger percentage than one-third are colored. In other words, out of a school population of 90,000, there are over 30,000 colored, and somewhat less than 60,000 of white-school population.

So, Mr. President, while we can make this additional $100,000 appropriation, it will increase the total amount that much. We face a deficit anyway of between seven and a half and ten million dollars, depending upon the amount of taxes raised next year. Since the school will be built as rapidly as humanly possible, there will be no delay because of lack of money either now or later, because Dr. Ballou, the head of the schools, states that with the amount recommended by the committee the authorities can start this school building and have it under way, and to take $100,000 off the appropriation now would not cause any substantial delay in the construction of the school building.

For these reasons I trust the amendment of the committee will be agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I concede that the school will be started under the present provision of the committee, but $450,000 is claimed by the school board to be necessary to carry on the work this year. So far as getting more money later on is concerned, that would be a pretty difficult matter, and we do not know whether sufficient money will be provided to complete the school during the next year. We think that $450,000 is none too much; we think it is too little as it is, and should not be cut down. I have no objection whatever to authorizing the construction of a school for the colored students, but I do object to cutting down the appropriation for the high school at Fifth and Sheridan Streets, which has been needed for years and has been neglected in the past.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The interest of the Senator from North Dakota in the section of the city involved has been well known to the committee, and this matter was discussed at considerable length in the committee. The Senator will observe that the Commissioners are authorized to enter into the contract for this school. In all human probability, the provision for $350,000 will be carried. Regardless of that, the officials of the District would be permitted to make a binding contract. I assure the Senator that, from my knowledge of what went on in the hearings, exactly what he has in mind will be accomplished.

As was stated, taking $100,000 from this appropriation and another $100,000 to provide for the plan to begin the construction did help in the erection of a building for the colored people. So exactly what the Senator has in mind will be accomplished, and at the same time provision will be made for a school for the colored pupils.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no objection to the erection of a building for the colored children, and I think in all fairness they should have another school. But it seems to me that the District of Columbia, the National Capital, should be a model, especially for a school system.

I am very glad to note that the last paragraph on page 36 has been stricken out of the bill by the committee. It provided for the erection of two portable school buildings. Portable school buildings, as they have existed in the past, have been a disgrace to the city of Washington and a disgrace to the Nation. Since I have been a Member of the Senate, schools in the District of Columbia have been housed in little portable buildings which were not fit for use as hog pens, I was about to say, and I think that is about the right comparison. I think practically all of them have been replaced or done away with, and I think they should be replaced.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not believe there is the slightest difference of opinion between the Senator and the committee. We took exactly the same view the Senator takes about the portable school buildings, and we discussed these other matters. I hope the Senator will not press his objection, because the building at Fifth and Sheridan Streets will be proceeded with at once, there will be no delay, and at the same time the school for the colored children will be erected.

Mr. FRAZIER. This is an unusually small amount with which to start a school building. It would leave still to be appropriated the balance of the authorization, amounting to a million dollars, and that would be a mighty hard sum to get another year.

Mr. COPELAND. The authorization will be made, and the building will be proceeded with.

Mr. FRAZIER. It will not be proceeded with until the money is made available.

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose someone will be taking a little chance about getting his money.

Mr. FRAZIER. There will have to be money for the contractors and for plans, although it is understood that the plans of another school building could be utilized and followed in this case. But the officials have raised the price of the plans from $25,000 to $28,300, to come out of the appropriation, leaving that much less for the erection of the school building.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the committee affecting the appropriation for this high school will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 36, line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 10, to insert:

For the erection of a junior high school building on a portion of the site of the existing Banneker Playground, $200,000, of which sum $15,217 shall be available for the preparation of plans, specifications, and administration, and the Commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $724,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 18, to strike out:

For the erection of two portable school buildings in the Bradbury Heights section southeast, on a site to be selected by the Board of Education with the approval of the Commissioners, such work to be performed by day labor or otherwise, in the discretion of the Commissioners, $8,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, in line 19, after "$5,500", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising the delinquent tax list for more than once a week for 2 weeks in the regular issue of one morning or one evening newspaper published in the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer another amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 48, in line 8, after the word "sanatoria", it is proposed to insert the following:

, which, on and after July 1, 1937, shall be under the direction and control of the Health Department of the District of Columbia and subject to the supervision of the Board of Commissioners.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer a further amendment and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 11, after "$107,030", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That upon occupancy of the new Police Court Building the Commissioners are authorized to transfer such part of this appropriation for payment of custodial employees as may be necessary to the appropriation in this act for "Care of the District buildings."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, on this amendment I raise a point of order. The amendment involves legislation and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the same or a similar amendment was introduced in the other House, and was ruled out upon a point of order as constituting legislation, and not properly a part of the appropriation bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator call the attention of the Senate to the colloquy on that subject in the House?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In response to the request of the Senator from Wyoming, I will say that the bill came up in the House on April 2; and on page 3108 of the RECORD Mr. NICHOLS said:

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the language contained in the paragraph beginning in line 22 of page 48, after the "$107,030", which reads:

"Provided, That upon occupancy of the new Police Court Building the Commissioners are authorized to transfer such part of this appropriation for payment of custodial employees as may be necessary to the appropriation in this act for 'Care of the District buildings' "— that it is legislation and changes existing law.

There was considerable discussion upon the question. The Chairman said:

Patently, the language referred to is legislation on an appropriation bill. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the issue in this case is very clear, and I shall be brief in presenting it.

The District has under construction a new Police Court Building. Under existing law the judges of the police court have jurisdiction over the Police Court Building, and the police court now has an old building which it is using. It is true that the present police court has jurisdiction over its present building. So, under existing law, when the new building is constructed, if the law is not changed, the police-court judges will have supervision over the new building.

The new building is a large structure, and for a long time perhaps the police court will not have sufficient personnel or business to occupy the entire building; so there will be vacant space in the building which should be available for use for other District purposes. If the police court retains jurisdiction it can make disposition of this extra space. If the jurisdiction is transferred to the Commissioners the Commissioners can use the extra space for some other and necessary purposes in connection with the District government.

There is one other point that I wish to suggest. At the present time, to the extent that the police court needs a force of plumbers, electricians, and custodial servants to take care of the building, it has them; but I understand that when the new building is constructed this force must be largely increased, so it would be an added expense to the District to keep the jurisdiction of this building under the police court. On the other hand, if the jurisdiction is changed to the Commissioners they can, when the need occurs, assign their regular custodial force of electricians, plumbers, and so forth, to take care of the Police Court Building.

Of course, Mr. President, the amendment is legislation. Otherwise, it would not have been offered from the floor; it would have been placed in the bill. But if it had been placed in the bill, and a point of order had been made against it, it would have caused the entire bill to be sent back to the committee, and the committee did not desire that to be done.

Any Member has a right to make a point of order, and, of course, neither the chairman of the committee nor the committee itself has the power to resist such a point of order. I agree that if the point of order is made, and insisted upon, it must be sustained.

I make this statement, and respectfully ask the maker of the point of order to withdraw the point of order, if he can see his way clear to do so.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma has discussed the merits of the question. On a point of order which is concededly well taken I do not feel that I should go at great length into a discussion of the merits of the proposition. It does involve a dispute over the question as to whether or not certain portions of the building shall be used for other than court purposes.

Those who are in charge of the court building have the feeling that as the needs for additions to the court occupancy of the building increase, if the Commissioners have control over the building there will be difficulty in meeting those needs in the time to come. I cannot agree with the Senator that it will mean any greater expense. It does not make any difference whether the custodian, janitors, and persons of that kind are hired by the court or are hired by the Commissioners. They must be paid, one way or another. I cannot see any difference so far as the question of expense is concerned. In all of our discussions these days about the superior ability of courts it seems to me that even those of us who have some doubts about the courts should recognize that a judge is capable of hiring a janitor. Perhaps there may be some dispute about other things, but certainly there is nothing about the duty of hiring a janitor and other employees which makes the court incapable of performing it.

I dislike very much to raise the point of order; but, since the amendment is subject to the point of order, and since I believe in my own mind that for the future the building should be left under the control of the judges, I am reluctantly compelled to insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, since the point of order is sustained, it will be necessary to rearrange some figures carried in the bill; and I shall submit several clarifying or perfecting amendments to make the bill mean what it should mean with the point of order sustained.

I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 4, line 22, was adopted, in order that I may offer an amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the committee amendment on page 4, line 22, I move to strike out "$99,526" and insert "$96,700."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$37,350" and to insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$107,030" and to insert in lieu thereof "$114,530."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "$4,250" and to insert in lieu thereof "$11,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, in line 4, after the word "justices", it is proposed to insert "marshal, $3,600, whose appointment is hereby authorized", and in line 8 to strike out "$111,800" and to insert in lieu thereof "$115,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, after the sum "$40,150", in line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Commission may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50: Provided further, That a statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, line 5, after the numerals "$900,000", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, should they deem such action to be to the advantage of the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to purchase a municipal asphalt plant at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit another amendment, and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 83, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the construction of a bridge to replace the bridge in line of Pennsylvania Avenue over the Anacostia River in accordance with plans and profiles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, including construction of and changes in sewer and water mains, travel expenses in connection with the inspection of material at the point of manufacture, employment of engineering or other professional services, by contract or otherwise, and without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and engineering and incidental expenses, $325,000, and the Commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the completion of said bridge at a cost not to exceed $2,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit a further amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 98, after line 9, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to secure and to install, at no expense to the said District, mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of said Commissioners; and said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of the parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the privilege of parking vehicles where said meters or devices are installed.

The Commissioners are further authorized and empowered to pay the purchase price and cost of installation of the said meters or devices from the fees collected, and thereafter such meters or devices shall become the property of said District and all fees collected shall be paid to the collector of taxes for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of said District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the amendment proposes legislation on a general appropriation bill, and is therefore repugnant to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit another amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 98, after line 9, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. Credit is allowed in the accounts of the District of Columbia for disbursements made from the permanent and indefinite appropriation "Refund of erroneously paid taxes, District of Columbia", amounting to $3,229.90, covered by audit nos. 33568, 37304, 45549, 53546, 63399, and 70165, and General Accounting Office certificate no. F–5872–DC, dated July 24, 1933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may be authorized to change the totals to conform to amendments which may have been adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROPOSED DEBT SETTLEMENTS BY FOREIGN DEBTORS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I trust I am not interfering with the program of any other Senator. I was rather delayed this morning, for many reasons, principally a matter of health, but I ask the privilege of the Senate to say a few words upon a matter which I regard as very serious. If I am correct, it is seriously serious, and if there is any doubt about the situation, then the subject is worthy of investigation.

Mr. President, I have often addressed this body touching the matter of what we speak of as the debts due the United States by certain foreign debtors. From time to time of late there have come forward expressions indicating a willingness upon the part of the debtors to deal with our Government on the subject. There has of late come forth a proposal, quoted from abroad for its influence upon our own land, that has now taken a concrete form.

I beg to inform the Senate that I flatter myself I have accurate information that there will be shortly in this Capital a distinguished representative of the Government of Belgium in the person of the present Premier of that country. He comes ostensibly for conference with the President of the United States. Of course, we will welcome this dignitary of a distinguished nation, whose history for courage, bravery, and valor has no superior, and, in view of our associations of the past, we cherish the hope that our relationships with that Government will continue in the future to be of the same friendly character as they have been in the years gone by. But, Mr. President, Belgium is one of the nations that is in debt to us, and for the same reasons and for the same purposes is situated as are other countries to which we are today to make reference.

The Premier of Belgium is being authorized to bring to the United States of America and, I dare say, to the State Department, although I speak of the State Department with some hesitancy, as I am sensitive about intruding upon any part of the Government that regards it as a trespass to refer to it, much less to seek information from it, a suggestion, sir, that the principal debtors of the United States wish to follow out the declaration made by the former Premier of England on the 10th day of April when he was anticipating leaving his office that it might be turned over to his successor. Replying to a member of the Parliament representing the Labor Party who asked what was to be done before the Prime Minister resigned his office as to the debts due the United States, Premier Baldwin said:

> There has been some understanding that if the debtors of the United States can come together on some proposition that is practicable, it will be presented by the Government of Great Britain, and if there can be formulated a proposition that is agreeable to the United States in behalf of all the debtors, it will be acted upon concurrently.

Nothing more was said than that "it will be acted upon", and the intimation is now made that the proposition must come from the United States, leaving upon the public mind the impression that we are ready to suggest either the canceling of the debts or lessening them to such degree as would make the payment ridiculous and ourselves contemptible.

Mr. President, it now develops—and I assume, sir, we will hear more of this from a source more definite—that our principal debtors, particular, sir, Great Britain and France, have authorized Belgium to say, in their behalf and in the behalf of the other debtors, that they recognize that they have been spending large sums for armaments, and that the criticisms being made here in this Chamber and elsewhere in our land may be said to be justified, but they desire to present to the President of the United States, through the distinguished representative of the beloved Government of Belgium, that since the United States is now in danger of having its institutions overthrown by the same forces of tyranny and dictatorship that shadow with destruction certain governments of Europe, it must be assumed that the money that is being paid out for the increase of armaments and the multiplication of military undertakings is being expended in behalf of the United States. It is asserted that if the money due us, instead of being paid to us, is really being paid as is contended for increased armaments, it is being paid for that which it is understood, of course, is to be converted to our uses, and, because of the danger in which we stand, we should forgive these expenditures for agencies of death and world destruction upon the basis that, as they defend against the advance of countries called lands of tyranny, they are made also in behalf of the United States and the preservation of this Republic.

I fancy I am speaking to gentlemen to whom the idea is not new that our Government is advancing this money in its own defense, and that, therefore, having been paid out in its own defense, it could congratulate itself it has had the pleasure to lay to itself the exquisite unction of having defended itself against invaders who threatened to destroy it.

Now, Mr. President, I bring to your attention the suggestion that it will be said, as it is, indeed, now being said, that there is a trade treaty on the eve of being consummated by the State Department with these lands of our debtors, but particularly with England in behalf of Britain, and that this trade treaty, while accepting favors from us can only advance and is permitted to extend only such favors to us as are consistent with granting privileges and precedence to Canada and the other commonwealths of Britain under what is known as the Ottawa agreement, and that whatever may be accorded to the United States in matters of trade must be accepted as being extended only upon the basis that always and ever precedence must be given to the commonwealths of Great Britain, including Canada, before any form of equality of similar favors can be accorded the United States.

Mr. President, these constant suggestions as to how this country, our United States, is to be taken in hand and befuddled from time to time, leaving us in the final end with nothing paid, nothing promised, and nothing done, should receive from us in some manner the protests of courageous spirits and a brave nation. Distinguished representatives are on the way, as is now publicly stated by Mr. Neville Chamberlain, who, being successor to Mr. Baldwin, says he is now for the same proposition as was suggested by Mr. Baldwin, that, if the debtors can get together on a plan agreeable to them, which may be advanced in some form to the point that the United States may make a proposition acceptable to itself, it will be highly agreeable to enter into some new understanding.

Mr. President, there have been seven different adjustments of this debt. There have been seven different alinements. If our honorable debtors cannot pay the bill or do not intend to pay it, an expression from them would enlighten the subject greatly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the able Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I think a practical assertion of that nature was made the other day in the House of Commons. The Senator will recall that when Mr. Chamberlain stated it was not fair to say that Great Britain had repudiated her debt, it created an uproar of laughter in the House of Commons, the House of Commons evidently being of opinion that they had already repudiated it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I likewise recall that not long ago those in charge of financial matters in a certain country of Europe were boasting to the world that they had balanced their budget. As a matter of fact, if there was a balance it was without ever taking into consideration the vast amount of money that is due the United States of America. Is not that true?

Mr. LEWIS. Such was the statement publicly made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield at that point?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator began his remarks. Does the Senator say that it is proposed in some way to deal with the debt question by a trade agreement? I am quite sure that cannot be correct. I do not see how it could possibly be correct.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, as he will gather in a moment wherein the trade matter particularly enters, he is correct.

I first reply to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who calls our attention to the fact that when some references to the debt were made to the Government of England they were met with a merry "roundelay" in Parliament. Why not? They have been able to indulge such a gesture under all circumstances, and it seems to be the most familiar form of acceptable illustration that country can offer as to how they feel about this obligation.

To the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] I say it is true our honorable debtors not only asserted that they had balanced their budget but added that they had put such extra sums into their tax funds that they were able to pay for the extra warships which were then being announced as exceeding both in volume and quantity, in quality and superiority, any form of naval ships then existing in the world.

Now, to reply to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], I have said, and I now say, there is on the eve of negotiation between this Government and England what is called a trade treaty. This trade treaty is supposed to give to England such privileges as are accorded to other nations—a favored-nation clause; but in the meantime all England is to give us is the assurance that she recognizes the preference and superiority and the precedence of Canada and the commonwealths of Britain under what is known as the Ottawa agreement. So the only thing we really get, if we get anything at all, is something that may come to us after the preferences have been supplied to Great Britain and her commonwealths.

As to the debt, I answer my able friend from Tennessee that it is being proposed that in these adjustments of trade there shall be adjustments of the debt. It is suggested that such property or evidences of trade as are to be extended to the United States may be increased to some extent that can be credited to the debt and take on the form of a payment of the debt, as well as of exchange between the countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am utterly opposed to any further compromise of the debt. I believe we have already compromised it greatly, and I think Great Britain has repudiated it, but she ought to pay it. I certainly think it ought not to be dealt with in a trade agreement, and I do not believe it will be dealt with in a trade agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a matter of general knowledge, I presume, that negotiations have been carried on and are now in process looking toward an ultimate trade agreement between the United States and a number of other countries, including Great Britain. I do not know from what source the Senator obtains the information that as a part of this agreement which may ultimately be entered into any consideration is to be given to the Ottawa agreement, which was entered into 2 or 3 years ago between the Dominion governments and Great Britain, looking toward some preferential treatment of the dominions in the trade between England and those countries. Is the Senator able to give us the source of the information that the debts will be a part of the trade agreement when it is entered into, or is that just a general conclusion drawn from newspaper reports?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a statement was made in England that found its way to the Canadian Government and to the British commonwealths as an assurance to them that the proposed agreement, which the Senator from Kentucky says is on the way, is not in any wise to disturb the preferences which have been given to Canada under the Ottawa agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The information, then, is derived from British publications and not from any information given out in this country?

Mr. LEWIS. Completely from British publications and information conveyed to Canada as well as to the other British commonwealths.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say further, with the permission of the Senator from Illinois, that I quite agree with the Senator from Tennessee. I do not think the Reciprocal Trade Act authorizes the President to deal at all with the question of the indebtedness of other countries to us. I am quite satisfied that he is not dealing with it in connection with the trade agreements.

I also agree with the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Tennessee that every possible effort ought to be made to collect the debts in full, and that they ought not to be dealt with in connection with trade agreements which have relationship to commerce and mutual advantages that may be supposed to be derived by some relaxation of the barriers which exist among those nations with respect to trade. I do not see how the President would have any such authority, and I doubt whether he has considered dealing with the question of the debts in connection with the trade agreements.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose if the parties should undertake to deal with the debt question in a reciprocal-trade agreement, it would necessitate the agreement coming to the Senate for action. Certainly no authority has yet been granted to include a debt agreement with a reciprocal-trade agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that under the original act passed by Congress, in which the effort was made to settle the debts, nobody has any authority to reduce them or to change their terms except Congress itself.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; so, I say, the agreement would have to return to Congress, and consequently it might be a very good thing to have a debt agreement included in a trade agreement. It would have a tendency to restore constitutional government temporarily at least as to the treaty-making power if the trade agreements should come back here for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the act which provides for reciprocal-trade agreements does not contain any authority for the President to negotiate with respect to the debts; so it would be assuming that the President would go beyond his authority if we should assume that he would include any such consideration in trade agreements.

Mr. BORAH. I would not assume that, of course.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I conclude by reverting to the suggestion openly made, and which we are told by proper authority will be committed to the President and transmitted to his confidants, that, while the money which our debtors possess has not been paid to us as it should have been, but confessedly has been expended for increased armaments and multiplied materials for multiplied wars, we must realize that such wars are for the object of defending these countries against attacks upon their constitutional government and what they feel is an assault upon their democracy; that, therefore, when they defend their democracy and their constitutional government they are defending the United States of America, as we shall be the next in turn to be the object of destruction. Let us here, with proper delicacy, freely assert that they refer to Russia, Italy, and Germany as those from whom attacks may come; and let us say it is urged now that if this money has been expended and more is yet to be expended for the protection of these countries, as they anticipate, against certain dangers, that is really a protection to the United States, and to that extent is the payment of the debt; that it is the payment of our debt to ourselves by paying it out to those agencies of protection which they contend, while inuring to their advantage, are really addressed to the ultimate protection of the United States of America.

I said a moment ago, and I now repeat, that I think this contention must have a familiar sound to many of the ears around me, as they heard something of this before in very much the same tenor.

Mr. President, I do not upbraid the distinguished representative of the Belgian Government as the emissary of the greater governments in size for bringing the suggestion that the United States is to treat these expenditures for military preparation as really expenditures in behalf of the United States of America, and therefore that they should be credited by this Government as payment upon the debt that these debtors owe the Government of the United States. The suggestion has about it something of fascination. It is original; it is attractive; it is impudent; and, for that reason, it suggests how ignorant we have been in the past, and how ignorant, perchance, we shall continue to be for the future. But let us have the assurance that if this honorable body has in the past lent itself both to the gentle creation of ignorance and to the exercise of stupidity, it has learned its lesson from what it has been compelled to endure as the result. Now, it is not likely to find itself walking the same steps again, and to the same Gehenna.

Mr. President, I do not know exactly the reasons that bring the distinguished representative of Belgium to our country, other than that which the officials of the Belgian Government assert, some of whom are not in harmony with the Premier; and I do not know other than that which the larger governments, our debtors, are now freely stating, that this distinguished official comes with authority to present to the United States as an emissary suggestions that will serve to compose the debt. I must agree, however, with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] that any move that looks to surrendering the debt completely, or the adjustment of it in a manner that robs us and continues to rob us to the degree that we are made the laughing stock of civilization and the object, sir, of the condemnation of common sense, should be interdicted. As soon as this honorable body may express itself as against such conduct, it should do so. I rise here to inform this honorable body that the move is afoot. The honorable gentleman is on his way. The session is set for the 20th day of June; and the session is to be characterized by the presentation and execution of the propositions that I have been free enough to lay before the Senate.

Sir, we are all hands for peace. We should also be for the maintenance of the constitutional governments of the lands of these our debtors. We are for anything that will preserve these political systems and likewise avoid any endangering of our country. Yet we cannot be beguiled, trapped, or tricked into the notion that we are being cheated for our benefit, and robbed for our profit. We must respectfully insist that we cannot see where the expenditure of this money in behalf of armaments of death to the countries of Europe is of benefit to the United States; and, while we hope to preserve and will join European nations in every manner we can to preserve the institutions of democracy and the constitutions of their republics, nevertheless we cannot under the guise of the mere name allow ourselves again, sir, to be brought into an understanding that partakes of a delusion and a fraud upon the sense of America and continue the course that has long been indulged of deliberate imposition and robbery of the United States. If it is on its way, I protest against it. If there be a doubt about it, I ask this honorable body to give it some attention as early as possible, that they may know how to deal with it as it approaches.

I thank the Senate for letting me break in at this time with these suggestions.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO REPORT BILLS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is contemplated that the Senate will take a recess until Thursday. I ask unanimous consent that in the meantime the Committee on Appropriations may be permitted to report bills if it shall be ready to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Newell S. Boardman, of Wisconsin, to be regional director of the Resettlement Administration, vice R. I. Nowell, resigned.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the following nominations:

James M. Landis, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1942 (reappointment); and

T. D. Webb, of Tennessee, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for a term of 6 years from July 22, 1937 (reappointment).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the nominations on the calendar will be stated in order.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis T. McDonald to be United States attorney, western district of Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Emily C. Squires to be postmaster at Hampton Bays, N. Y.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GOODWIN, OF NEW YORK

The Senate resumed legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read:

The legislative clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 232

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. PHILIP A. GOODWIN, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it was with a sense of great personal loss that I learned of the death of Representative GOODWIN. He has been for many years my friend, and I found him always a sweet, charming, lovely character, one of the finest Christian gentlemen I ever knew in my life. At a later time there will be appropriate proceedings relative to his untimely departure.

Mr. President, at this time I send forward resolutions, which I ask to have read and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 142) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Senate Resolution 142

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PHILIP A. GOODWIN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints as the committee provided for in the resolution just agreed to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate take a recess until noon on Thursday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, June 10, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord God is a sun and a shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly. O Lord of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee. Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness, because of mine enemies; make Thy way straight before my face.

Living up to Thy rule of right, may we come to a growing faith in the God of our fathers. Heavenly Father, without whom nothing is pure and enduring, may our light so shine before men that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven. We earnestly beseech Thee that a halo of Thy presence may be thrown over our country, and may our citizens shake themselves loose from the yoke of the tyrannies of injustice, lawlessness, and selfishness. Proclaim the voice of Thy eternal truth that changes not, and teach us to love mercy and to walk humbly with Thee. Forgive our follies and our crimes, and may we hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that on Thursday of this week after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of other matters on the Speaker's table that he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from California will change his request to Wednesday, tomorrow, after the conclusion of Calendar Wednesday business and the special order heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California modify his request?

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, the only thing I do not like about the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas is that I shall speak tomorrow on a bill to be brought up by the Public Lands Committee and I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House with my eloquence.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California modify his request as indicated by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Wednesday, after the disposition of Calendar Wednesday business and a prior order of the House that he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me this idea of setting up special orders after the completion of 4 or 5 hours' work in the House is more or less of a monstrosity. I have no objection to the gentleman's speaking, I have no objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] speaking, but I think that the setting up of special orders in advance when we probably have 4 or 5 hours of business ahead of us on the calendar is a monstrosity. I feel that if special orders are to be made, and if the rule that has been adhered to so far is to prevail that the special orders should be made when the occasion is reached, when business fails and there is nothing to take up the time of the House. I shall feel obliged to object to special orders at this time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from California has been wanting to speak for some 10 days or 2 weeks but has put it off for reasons heretofore stated. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has secured time tomorrow after the disposition of Calendar Wednesday business. These gentlemen have asked for this time and we are trying to accommodate them. If it comes too late they can go over and not take the time. Those of us who desire to listen to them can stay and those who do not may go. I would very much like for the gentleman to withdraw his threatened objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have made requests of the majority leader for the past 2 weeks for 15 minutes' time. I do not wish to do anything detrimental to the interests of the House or its Members; I am here to assist. The practice has recently been established of requiring special orders to come after the business of the House, but the majority leader and the Members of the House know that I would not impose upon them after 6 o'clock. I have tried to get time. The majority leader has objected to it. I am not going to object to the request of the gentleman from California; I hope he gets his time; but I see no reason why the same privilege should not be accorded to all Members who want to address the House after the work of the House for the day is completed so long as it does not run into the wee hours of the night.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is stating my position exactly with reference to these requests.

Mr. RICH. I have tried to get time. I have asked the majority leader if he would set the time himself when I could have 15 minutes. I wanted to extend him that courtesy, and I would abide by his decision, but he would not grant it to me.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he has requested time before the business of the House was transacted. There has not been a time when I would not have agreed to the gentleman having time under the circumstances he has outlined any day in the week. I tell the gentleman that now, and I have told him that repeatedly. That is my position.

Mr. RICH. When I made my request the other day I so understood, and it was argued on the floor, argued by the gentleman from Mississippi and other Members of the House.

If my request is granted, and the business of the House does not run after 4 o'clock, I would take my time. If the business of the House should run until 6 o'clock, I would not want to take the time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaking at any time any day under the arrangement that has been made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's request is to speak after the disposition of the Calendar Wednesday business?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think I must object. I do not like to do so because I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, but I think it is an imposition on the Members who are going to speak and everybody else for a Member to attempt to speak at 5 o'clock or 6 o'clock or whenever we get through with the regular business. I think it is an imposition on the House and upon the Members who are trying to get the opportunity to speak.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they are satisfied, why should the gentleman not be satisfied?

Mr. TABER. The trouble is they will not be satisfied when it comes to the time to speak.

Mr. McGROARTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McGROARTY. I have sat here patiently ever since this session began listening to the gentleman with great delight and profit, and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who comes from my native State, and to all the Members. This is the first time during the present session I have asked for 1 minute of time. If I have been glad and willing to listen to you all, as we say down South, why should you not give me 30 minutes, the first request I have made?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, following the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and after the business of the day has been transacted, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman restate his request?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the disposition of the special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is on the program for Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. There will be a rule from the Rules Committee making in order, in all probability and I think definitely, the extension of the so-called nuisance taxes. The gentleman's request is to address the House after that matter has been disposed of.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. His request does not say so.

Mr. WOOD. Following that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is not the way the gentleman made the request.

Mr. WOOD. I shall modify my request so that it will follow that business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that on Friday next, after consideration of the matters set for consideration on that date, to wit, the extension of the nuisance taxes under a special rule, he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am in error, because the bill that will come up on Friday is a privileged matter and will not come up under a rule. It will, however, come up on that day for consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. What bill is it?

Mr. RAYBURN. It has to do with the extension of the so-called nuisance taxes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems during the last 3 or 4 weeks every time a request has been made it requires all the way from 2 to 6 minutes to dispose of the request. May I suggest to the majority leader if a definite formula were presented in making these requests, one that the Members generally would know about, it would save a lot of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and the disposition of special orders that have been laid down by the majority leader and the Speaker of the House, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by me before the North Carolina Merchants' Association at New Bern, N. C., on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes next Monday, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and disposition of the business of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not want to be deprived of the right to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may object to the request.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman is going to speak for an hour, he should not object to a Member on this side speaking for 2 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will that deprive me of my time?

The SPEAKER. It will not. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

THE SECOND THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL IN ST. LOUIS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, innocently on his part, but misguided by the influence of purported friends from St. Louis, was hornswoggled into allocating $6,750,000, two years ago this fall, to the proposed second Thomas Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis. This project was enjoined in the lower courts. Last week the Supreme Court refused to review the action of the lower courts, and now they are ready to go to work.

Mr. John L. Nagle, superintendent of the memorial project for the Park Service, is asking the owners to submit their 37 blocks of real estate so the properties will not have to be condemned. In the St. Louis Post-Despatch of June 5, Mr. Nagle says:

> The design adopted should give emphasis to the peaceful method by which the Louisiana Territory was acquired by President Jefferson.

He says further:

> That the nine million now available will be largely used up in acquiring and clearing the land.

And further:

> The National Park Service has always developed anything that it has taken over and when more funds are needed in any case it has asked Congress for them. It will do the same in this case. Of course, I cannot say what Congress will do, but I repeat that the Park Service has a record of carrying out what it starts.

Fellow colleagues, it is a crime for anyone to say that the National Park Service started this infamous unloading of 37 blocks of debunked real estate in the name of relief. In spite of the assurance from Mr. COCHRAN 12 times one afternoon on the floor of the House, on June 8, 1934—just 3 years ago today—that it would never cost the Government a dollar, it is now costing the Government six and three-fourths millions, and it is universally estimated that it will take twenty millions more to finish it, and the Government is expected to be soaked for all of what remains.

The President could stop this now and save the money. The bond election in St. Louis would be set aside if the ballot boxes could be opened, and it would end there. The Park Service, if they ever come to Congress for more money will come with bowed heads and in a whisper. I, for one, on the subcommittee of the Interior, will be here to meet them next winter and possibly some future winters. Think of the National Park Service leaving the lofty grandeur of the Yellowstone to dip into this cesspool in St. Louis. It never chose to do it; it was thrust upon them.

The words "fraud", "corruption", "graft", and "waste" are harsh terms which should not be indiscriminately used or applied to any project, but the records in this case justify their application.

To begin with, this memorial to Thomas Jefferson in St. Louis is neither a matter of public necessity, nor will it furnish any appreciable amount of work relief.

As you have previously been told, St. Louis now has a magnificent memorial to Jefferson, located in beautiful Forest Park, a tract of over 1,300 acres, the site of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition of 1904. This memorial obviated the necessity of a second one in the same city. The site for the proposed second memorial in St. Louis is an area of 37 blocks of commercial and business property lying between Washington Avenue and Poplar Street and extending from the Mississippi River west to Third Street. In this area, which is the heart of downtown St. Louis, are 446 buildings where 290 firms with a capital investment of over $12,610,500 do an annual business of more than $60,000,000, and employ approximately 5,000 persons with annual pay rolls estimated at more than $12,000,000.

One particular firm, engaged in business in the area, in a financial statement of June 30, 1935, shows assets of $1,878,971.41. The working capital of this firm alone was $828,439.99.

Several concerns doing business in the district are rated at well over a million dollars. In the area are many large fur, wool, and hide companies and several large commercial printers and lithographers.

These people have been here for years, and St. Louis is known far and wide for its great fur industry.

All of these 446 buildings are to be demolished, and these firms forced into other and more costly quarters, in order that a group of real-estate operators may unload these properties onto the Federal Government, and through the destruction of the buildings on the site in which 5,084,010 square feet of warehouse, factory, and office space was in actual use in August 1935 create a shortage in available space of a similar character in St. Louis, which no doubt will be reflected in increased real-estate values and rentals in other sections of the city.

As party to this scheme, the Government, acting through the National Park Service at the direction of the President, now proposes to acquire this site of 37 city blocks, wreck the buildings, and commence the preservation of historic sites in this area, which will entail a final expenditure of not less than $30,000,000.

Of the sum now available, $6,750,000 has been allocated to the project from funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. An additional $2,250,000 has been contributed toward the project by the city of St. Louis. Each of these sums will be taken up in detail later.

Significant at this time should be the fact that of the entire nine million now available for the project, acquisition of the site itself is estimated to cost more than $7,000,000, and according to an affidavit filed in court here in Washington last June, only $600,000 of the whole amount will be spent for labor. Of this sum $450,000 will go to the employment of skilled workmen for 300,000 hours at $1.50 per hour, and the poor workingman who is in need and on relief will get but 300,000 man-hours of employment at 50 cents an hour. In fact, but $150,000 of this whole fund can be justly classed as going for work relief.

SCHEME REEKS WITH FRAUD AND DECEPTION

The entire affair, from its very inception down to the present hour, has been so grossly misrepresented, I charge the scheme reeks with fraud and deception and should be the subject of a congressional investigation.

Many of the Members will recall that when we acceded to the request of the promoters and passed the joint resolution creating the United States Territorial Expansion Commission, we were told that the States would finance this memorial and that Congress would not be asked for funds. This promise has technically been kept. They did not come to Congress for aid, but rushed the back door of the White House and received funds intended for relief for this real-estate scheme under the pretext of preserving historic sites.

Mr. Speaker, I now propose to give the Congress a full and detailed story of this memorial promotion. I propose to show that the historic sites are more a matter of fiction than of history. I propose to show that this memorial is neither a matter of necessity or common sense. I propose to show that it is not what the people of St. Louis were promised and that the contribution of the city of St. Louis for the project—that is, the $2,250,000 which has been received from the city of St. Louis—is the result of a bond-issue election, in which fraud has been revealed in each of the 19 wards of the city where the proposal carried. I propose to show that the bonds were issued and sold, although full knowledge of this fraud existed, and I propose to show that the bonds were sold only after the purchaser of $1,800,000 worth was given a bribe, or bonus, of $36,000 and assurance there would be no legal difficulty, but that would be taken care of. And they have taken care of all such difficulties by some mysterious influence which is sufficiently powerful in St. Louis to reach out and overwhelm both the courts and grand juries, which have been requested to investigate the fraud and corruption in connection with this bond-issue election of September 10, 1935.

At this point I want to place this fact before the Congress.

In St. Louis, prior to the bond-issue election of September 10, 1935, the project was represented as being a great improved national park or plaza, from which all buildings would be removed and in their places would be museums, lecture halls, a large underground space for the storing of automobiles, a small harbor for pleasure craft, and other educational and recreational facilities. No mention was made at any time of the present proposal to preserve historic sites.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that the Mississippi River is one of the most changeable streams. At flood tide it sometimes has a crest as much as 40 feet above the mean average water table. In seasons of exceptional drought the water may be very low at St. Louis. Along the levee there runs an elevated railroad track, and across the river are the stockyards and factories of East St. Louis, Ill. The site is between a series of lumber yards on the north and the river slums to the south, on which a few months ago stood the shacks of more than 200 unfortunate families. To improve 12 blocks of this river front and let the other 13 miles remain as they are is the present plan.

In other words, this memorial will be flanked by slums and faced by an elevated railroad line. With this picture in mind I present a preview of the proposition.

As before stated the area designated for the proposed second memorial to Jefferson in St. Louis is along the Mississippi River from the Eads Bridge south to Poplar Street, and extending west to Third Street, with the addition of one block between Market and Chestnut Streets and between Third and Fourth Streets. The entire area scales 4,379,158 square feet.

In the area are 446 buildings, with a total usable floor space of 9,290,000 square feet. Of this amount 5,084,010 square feet were in use August 20, 1935.

The occupancy was shared by 290 major firms, employing upward of 5,000 persons, and in addition there were several small retail establishments, groceries, and taverns in the district.

From 1917 through to 1933 many plans were discussed for river-front improvement, all of which would have had some meritorious features. In 1933 an association of citizens known as the Association of Citizens for River Front Improvement in St. Louis, filed with the Federal Power Commission a request for a preliminary permit to construct a hydroelectric power dam and a double-decked highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at the foot of Marceau Street. This proposal, known as the Howard plan, would have cost an estimated $50,000,000 and furnished employment to from twenty to twenty-five thousand men for 3 years. It would have been a self-liquidating proposal and brought to the citizens of St. Louis and neighboring Illinois cities an abundance of electrical energy for heating purposes and industrial power. The plan was frowned on by special interests and fell by the wayside.

In 1934 Senator CLARK and Representative COCHRAN, of Missouri, introduced bills in Congress asking for $35,000,000 for the construction of a memorial to Jefferson on the banks of the Mississippi in St. Louis. Thus what had heretofore been projected as a river-front improvement now became, at first sight, a patriotic memorial movement.

These bills never got any further than the committees to which they were submitted.

However, the promoters, encouraged by the spending of the Government for work relief now, adopted new tactics, and here is the beginning of fraud.

With no known useful purpose to be filled by building a second memorial to Jefferson in St. Louis, and with money hard to raise locally, the committee again turned to Congress for some kind of aid.

On the 29th day of March 1934 a resolution creating the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission was passed by the Senate.

The joint resolution reached the House on June 8, and after much discussion and protestations that the Congress would not later be asked for money, and on the special assurance of Congressman COCHRAN, the resolution was finally passed by a vote of 115 to 15. Thus about one-fourth of the membership of the House gave pregnancy to the Commission into which the breath of life was injected by the signature of the President June 15, 1934.

By the terms of the joint resolution the membership of the Commission established was limited to 15 persons. The members were to be appointed, three by the President, three by the Vice President, three by the Speaker of the House, and six by the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, otherwise the St. Louis promoters.

The resolution, besides providing for the membership and their appointment, provided:

SEC. 2. The United States Commission, may, in its discretion, accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans and estimates for the improvement, construction, or other expenses incurred or to be incurred.

SEC. 3. The United States shall not be held liable for any obligation or indebtedness incurred by the United States Commission, the State of Missouri, the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, the city of St. Louis, Mo., or any agency or officer, employee or agent, or any of them for any purpose.

Thus limited by the resolution which created it, the committee held its first meeting December 19, 1934, at Hotel Jefferson in St. Louis. At this meeting a telegram from the President, as follows, was read:

[Copy of Western Union telegram]

All good wishes for the success of your Commission's efforts to recall and perpetuate the ideals, the faith, and courage of the pioneers who discovered and developed the great West.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

This telegram was acknowledged by Senator BARKLEY for the Commission.

This telegram from the President may later have been used as the basis for the promoters' claim that the Government was pledged to supply $22,500,000 for the memorial.

The next regular and official meeting of the United States Commission was held in Washington, D. C., February 1, 1935. At this meeting an executive committee was named. This committee then met in St. Louis, April 13, 1935, and authorized the forwarding to each member of the Commission a copy of a book containing various compilations for a memorial costing $30,000,000.

In this book, under the heading "Plan and Scope", we find the following:

The estimated cost of the project, including site, is $30,000,000. The site, which comprises 37 city blocks, it is calculated can be acquired by the United States Government through condemnation proceedings for $7,206,750. The city of St. Louis, by the act of the Missouri Legislature, can take the necessary steps to reimburse the United States Government, by bond issue or otherwise, for the cost of the site (not to exceed one-fourth of the total cost) up to $8,000,000.

This statement in the plan and scope preassumes that the Federal Government was interested in making a $7,216,750 real-estate purchase in St. Louis and a subsequent expenditure of $22,500,000 to improve this purchase.

The people began to wonder, Who authorized these views?

Along with this book, an expensive volume, limited to 500 copies, showing plans for the memorial was distributed.

At the St. Louis meeting of the executive committee, April 13, 1935, the minutes show there were present the following: J. Lionberger Davis, St. Louis banker; William T. Kemper, Democratic national committeeman from Missouri; Luther Ely Smith, St. Louis promoter.

All other members sent regrets and excuses.

The next regular meeting of the Commission was held in Washington, May 1, 1935.

At this meeting a report of the executive committee was made, and the chairman, Senator BARKLEY, received verbal reports from Architect LeBeaume; Claude B. Ricketts, manager of the Railway Exchange Building in St. Louis; and from Mr. W. C. D'Arcy, an advertising agency executive.

All three of these gentlemen had an interest, either direct or indirect, in the success of the memorial scheme. To Mr. Ricketts would come increased rentals in his building; to Mr. LeBeaume would come fees; and to Mr. D'Arcy added prestige as the publicity man.

Immediately after this meeting May 2, 1935, the chairman of the executive committee transmitted to Hon. Frank C. Walker, Chairman of the Applications Division of the Works Allotment Board, a complete synopsis of the plan for the St. Louis memorial with estimates that between five and six thousand men might be given employment in the clearance of the site and the construction of the terraces incident to preparations for the building of the memorial within the period expiring July 1, 1936.

This report, together with maps, plans, and other data, was received by Col. Horatio Hackett, who sent the papers to the P. W. A. office in the Buder Building in St. Louis for engineering inspection and approval, with the further information that the Commission, in order to get before the Department, would have to file a formal application for a grant of Federal funds on forms 153–159 of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration of Public Works, and that it would be necessary to file the application with the district engineer for the State of Missouri.

APPLICATION FOR LOAN AND GRANT

On June 10, 1935, forms were sent the Commission, and on June 15, 1935, Louis LaBeaume, acting advisory architect for the Commission, filed with the P. W. A. office in St. Louis an application for a loan and grant of $21,015,000.

This application became known as Missouri docket no. 1006.

That the application was within the scope of projects set up in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 is a matter of question. The law limited applications to State governments or organized divisions of government such as cities, counties, townships, or organizations having tax powers such as drainage or levee bodies.

It clearly was not the intent of Congress to delegate to the United States Commission or any board or private party the powers reserved to the Congress in the spending of public money.

More than this, it was clearly the intent of Congress that, as far as this particular Commission was concerned, any and all power to obligate the Federal Government had been disavowed.

So here we have a commission, shorn of any authority to obligate the Government in any way whatsoever, trying to masquerade under the guise of a patriotic fellowship, interested in work relief, sneaking in an application for a loan and grant of $21,015,000.

The dishonesty of the proposal can be construed from the following:

STATEMENT IN LIEU OF FINANCIAL INFORMATION

This is a national project, to be constructed by the United States or its qualified authority.

This statement is an outright attempt to connect the United States Government with the project contrary to law. The promoters of the memorial knew full well that only the Congress of the United States has the authority to provide funds for projects of this kind. They also knew that they were not a qualified authority of the United States Government in any matter obligating the Government or pledging the aid or cooperation of any department thereof.

Immediately after the filing of the application for a loan and grant the St. Louis promoters embarked on a campaign of publicity in St. Louis, declaring that the Federal Government was behind the memorial plan and had pledged the sum of $22,500,000 therefor.

As a part of this campaign of fraudulent publicity the promoters, using the letterheads of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, circulated letters requesting support for the plan at the bond issue election of September 10, 1935. In these circular letters it was set up, among other things, that the Federal Government had approved the project and the St. Louis plans for the memorial. Newspaper display advertisements further distorted the facts and misrepresented the Government's position in the matter, and although there is available sufficient evidence to warrant the charge that the mails have been misused in promoting the memorial matter, despite frequent requests for an investigation, the Post Office Department has evidenced no interest whatsoever in complaints which have been made to it.

It is worthy of mention that the public misrepresentation of the memorial project continued up to and including the day of the bond issue election, September 10, 1935.

In the bond issue election, strange results were recorded. In 9 of the city's 28 wards the results for and against the bond issue were about even, but in the remaining 19 wards, mostly the river wards and the Negro districts, the results were overwhelming for the proposal to bond the city.

In some wards the precinct vote, when analyzed, shows the impossibility of things happening that way. In some precincts more votes were stuffed into the boxes, all for the proposal, than the entire registration.

This lead to an investigation by the Citizen's Nonpartisan Committee, of which Paul O. Peters was the head.

The final result of this investigation led to the most startling disclosures of fraud and corruption in the voting machinery of St. Louis that have ever been made in any city of the United States.

During the summer of 1936 it has been established and published as a result of the investigation that more than 46,000 ghost names were carried on the registration books of the city of St. Louis.

It has been established by affidavit and by the confessions of judges and clerks of election that fraud existed in each of the 19 wards of the city of St. Louis, in which the bonds for the building of this memorial were approved.

The result of this fraud, while definitely known to all interested parties in the Government connected with the building of this memorial, has not served either as a stimulus to conduct an investigation or to halt the work of building the memorial.

It will be to the undying shame of the department heads if they insist on following out the Executive order and proceed with the condemnation of properties where hundreds are gainfully employed to build a second memorial to Jefferson, which will entail future expenditures for upkeep for many years to come.

Immediately after the election of September 10, 1935, charges of fraud were made directly to the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, and all Washington agencies having a possible connection with the building of the memorial. All without exception were either ignored or sidetracked. However, at one time, despite the denials of Secretary Ickes, an investigator for P. W. A., one Walter Kline on October 16 arrived in St. Louis and presented his credentials and asked for particulars of the fraud. Every assistance was rendered Mr. Kline, but somehow his industry and aggressiveness were not recognized, and he is no longer connected with the investigating division of P. W. A. The project in St. Louis is now being built under an Executive order issued December 21, 1935, declaring the area in St. Louis worthy of preserving under the Historic Sites Act of August 21, 1935.

The President named eight events as having taken place on the St. Louis water front as worthy of commemoration.

On February 13, 1936, the Baltimore Sun in a front-page feature debunked the historic sites, as did the Washington Post in a special article printed September 22, 1936, entitled "History in the Faking."

The President had declared that the river-front area was the place where the Sante Fe trail started, where the Oregon trail had its beginnings, and where Lewis and Clark started or prepared for their voyages of exploration and discovery.

None of these facts are supported by the historical evidence in the Library of Congress and are pure fiction.

Considering that the examining engineer for P. W. A. in St. Louis had said of the project:

> The proposed project has social desirability, but cannot be classed as a public necessity.

And with hundreds of people in St. Louis and other sections of Missouri living in abject poverty it ill becomes the Executive, who claims to be the great friend of the common people, to embark on a project of this magnitude in which only a small fraction of the money will ever reach those in need and which is designed principally to relieve the real-estate operators and the promoters, who have spent upward of $500,000 in promoting the project and lending protection to those who have despoiled the ballot in St. Louis.

In concluding may I again say that I have charged fraud. There was fraud and misrepresentation in the presentation of the project to the people of St. Louis and in the voting of funds for the project. This cannot be denied.

I have charged corruption. There was corruption of the electorate and the election officials of St. Louis on September 10, 1935. Some judges and clerks of election have confessed their part in the fraudulent effort to saddle a bond issue onto the taxpayers of St. Louis. This cannot be denied.

I have charged graft. The graft in this matter is so intermingled with the fraud and corruption that they are almost indistinguishable. Only a bunch of grafters would put up the money and hire lawyers to defend those who have debauched the ballot. Only a bunch of grafters would attempt to influence the courts and grand juries to prevent the opening of the ballot boxes in the bond-issue election.

If the promoters of this proposition were satisfied that everything was regular and in order, there should be no fear of a recount of these ballots on their part, yet, since September 1936 every legal technicality has been resorted to solely to keep the grand jury from inspecting the ballot boxes and fixing the guilt for the crimes which everyone above the age of 10 years in St. Louis knows have been committed.

The so-called civic leaders of St. Louis who have lent their names to this project have repeatedly been requested to come out into the open in the matter of the fraud and corruption.

The head of the Nonpartisan Committee has called on them to show their hands. They have maintained a discreet silence. The sphinx could do no better.

The newspapers of St. Louis have demanded an investigation, but the power of a powerful independent press has been of no avail. Even the great St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which was given the Pulitzer award in journalism for its disclosure of election frauds, has been unable to halt the steady march toward the building of the memorial.

The property owners and renters in the area who resorted to the courts in an effort to halt the project have been jockeyed around by technicalities and given no opportunity to present the causes for a fair hearing in any court of record. The city of St. Louis refuses to accept service and the Federal courts have held they are an indispensible party to any action to halt the waste of the taxpayers' money.

I have charged waste. It cannot be shown, but that the spending of public money to wreck buildings where people are permanently employed and where they would in all probability continue to be employed, to make way for a project of the character of this memorial, is both the height of folly and the zenith of waste.

Other projects of the administration have been severely criticized. We have at times spoken unkindly of such projects as de luxe dog pounds, swimming pools, and golf courses, but here is what will undoubtedly go down in history as the one boondoggle worst of all.

Mr. Speaker, every dog has his day. Some day, I feel sure, the underdogs of Missouri, who have been forced to submit to the will of the Pendergast machine in Kansas City and those who have been brought to the heel of the Dickman machine in St. Louis, will rise up in righteous wrath against the bondage which betrays them and put an end to the political corruption which has enabled projects of no possible economic value, such as this memorial, to be foisted onto the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress has not heard the last of this $30,000,000 memorial in St. Louis. In a short time the promoters will be here asking for more money. They are contemplating it now. I hope that this Congress will, in their righteous indignation, take the steps which decency now demands and institute a full and complete investigation into the promotion of this memorial and the use of Federal funds for it. This is a duty we owe to citizens of St. Louis and to the taxpayers in every part of the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of our former Speaker, Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a Memorial Day address which I delivered over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL SAFETY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is not the temper of the House to listen to speeches today, but I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point.

I have today introduced another national-safety bill which calls for an appropriation of $35,000 for our national safety. This is a small sum, Mr. Speaker. I earnestly hope the bill will pass. There are altogether too many deaths on our highways, on land, by sea, in the air, and in the homes. I believe thousands of them could be prevented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and following the call of committees and any special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House.

Mr. RANKIN. That means after the Calendar Wednesday business?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; after the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, following the address to be delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may remind the gentleman from New York that we have District of Columbia day on Monday.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is protected, I may say to the gentleman. All of these requests are subject to the business from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I should point out to the gentleman that, other things being equal, we may have a very heavy calendar, and the gentleman's remarks would come at a very late hour in the day. However, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HEARINGS ON THE WAGES AND HOURS BILL

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-quarter of a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to announce that on next Monday, June 14, at 10 o'clock in the morning, the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate and the Committee on Labor of the House, which are holding joint hearings, will hear Members of the House and Senate who care to speak on the wages and hours bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. A rule has been brought out by the Committee on Rules on behalf of certain legislation. I want to know whether this rule takes precedence over any special order on the calendar today, or if the special order precedes the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry. It is a matter of program, which will be handled from the floor.

Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is recognized for 1 hour.

NATIONAL MONETARY POLICY

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, today I want to discuss the bill (H. R. 7188) entitled "A bill to provide a national monetary policy which will have a definite relationship to the requirements of domestic industry and trade under the conditions imposed by our power economy, which will increase production and consumption to the limit of the country's power to produce, and for other purposes."

The declaration of policy contained in the bill is as follows:

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to adjust and control the price of commodities sold at retail so as to make it conform to the volume of purchasing power in the hands of the public, and to regulate the purchasing power so that the production of wealth in this country shall be maintained in full measure.

SEC. 2. In pursuance of such policy interbank currency notes are to be issued for financing a discount on prices to consumers at retail, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States in his message to Congress on May 24 stated the following:

The overwhelming majority of our population earns its daily bread either in agriculture or in industry. One-third of our population, the overwhelming majority of which is in agriculture or industry, is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed.

The overwhelming majority of this Nation has little patience with that small minority which vociferates today that prosperity has returned, that wages are good, that crop prices are high, and that Government should take a holiday.

The truth of the matter, of course, is that the exponents of the theory of private initiative as the cure for deep-seated national ills want in most cases to improve the lot of mankind. But, well-intentioned as they may be, they fall for four evident reasons—first, they see the problem from the point of view of their own business; second, they see the problem from the point of view of their own locality or region; third, they cannot act unanimously because they have no machinery for agreeing among themselves; and, finally, they have no power to bind the inevitable minority of chiselers within their own ranks.

Though we may go far in admitting the innate decency of this small minority, the whole story of our Nation proves that social progress has too often been fought by them. In actual practice it has been effectively advanced only by the passage of laws by State legislatures or the National Congress.

Today you and I are pledged to take further steps to reduce the lag in the purchasing power of industrial workers and to strengthen and stabilize the markets for the farmers' products.

Mr. Speaker, in the Hearst papers on Sunday there appears a column called Editorial Drama. From this page in the issue of January 1, 1937, I quote the following:

Suppose that for months, or years, the sun had refused to shine, rain to fall, crops to grow, mines to yield their treasures.

Suppose that science, which can supply everything, had suddenly turned to idiocy, that steam would no longer expand and yield power under the influence of heat, that falling cataracts could no longer be made to produce electricity, light, and power.

Then, indeed, men would have a right to complain and talk of a depression. But what right has this country to complain now? How can a nation excuse itself when it has everything that it can use and simply does not know how to distribute its wealth?

That is the great problem—distribution.

Men solved the production problem long ago. There is nothing they need that they cannot produce in superabundance. You may order one, or a hundred, or ten millions, of anything you can choose, and it will be supplied—if you can pay for it.

This is the richest country in the world, full of machinery and all its products, with infinitely more money than any other, but does not know how to distribute its money or how to distribute its products.

Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like to form a background, if I can, to justify the bill I am discussing today.

When I was a boy my grandfather was a country doctor, and I drove with him from farm to farm in a rural district. I saw the farmers and their wives working from the time they could see in the morning until they could not see at night, and the farmer's wife working on the family sewing as long as she could keep her eyes open. I saw labor working for 50 cents a day and living on fat meat and corn bread. I wondered why it was that the people who got up early in the morning, before daylight came, and strove to make others rich and great were always in dire poverty and always in debt, with the mortgage of the farmer being inherited along with the farm from generation to generation.

I hope that what I saw then produced a divine unrest. This is a matter I do not know about, but it was on my mind continuously. When I came to Congress I had an opportunity for the first time to give the matter detailed consideration, and one day I was down at the Bureau of Industrial Statistics and I saw the index of wholesale prices going down from 1879 until 1896, culminating in the Bryan free-silver campaign of the latter year. Then I recalled that silver had been demonetized, that the people's money had been contracted, and that this condition of falling prices which tended to destroy the debtor and the producer was due to lack of money. Then I saw that index from 1898 to 1914 rising. Gold had been discovered in the Klondike, in Australia, and in South America, and under the impetus of this new money products of the producer began to rise in price. The debtor was able to liquidate his debt, and we had a period of prosperity such as the country had never known before. I began to visualize clearly the relationship between the people's medium of exchange and what the people were able to produce and consume.

So in 1922 I introduced a bill providing for the stabilization of the value of the dollar. For the first time in the history of the American Congress there were hearings on legislation looking to the stabilization of the value of money. These hearings were resumed in 1924. They were held in a sporadic manner from then until 1932, when a bill was introduced by me and passed through the House by a vote of 289 to 60, declaring that the policy of the Federal Reserve System should be to maintain the purchasing power of the dollar on a parity with what it was between 1921 and 1929.

When this bill got into the Senate it was emasculated by what was known as the Glass substitute, which simply provided, in effect, a partial repassage of the National Banking Act, giving the banks the right to issue money based on Government bonds; and, of course, that had no effect whatever.

In 1935 an amendment offered by me to the 1935 Banking Act provided for a free market for gold and for the stabilization of the price of basic commodities on a 1921–29 basis was defeated in this House by 4 votes. After the failure of this amendment I began to consider trying to get a better result by a different formula; and so, in September 1935, I introduced a bill (H. R. 9216, 74th Cong.) which provided, in essence, for two things.

First, that all of the money of the country should be real money; that if it required $60,000,000,000 to transact the business of the country we should have $60,000,000,000; that the right of the banks to create and destroy money by the system of fractional reserves should be done away with, so that our money could not be destroyed as it was between 1930 and 1934 to the extent of about $18,000,000,000.

The bill also provided for a discount to the ultimate consumer on retail sales, this discount to be estimated on the basis of the amount we could produce, but could not now distribute, or the difference between the actual production and the potential production of wanted goods and services. The bill contained necessary brakes to prevent inflation.

In April of 1936 we had hearings on this bill before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, and at the Insitute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia, which was in session for 3 weeks in the summer of 1936, the first week was devoted entirely to a discussion of this bill; and on the 14th of April 1937 Alberta passed a law based on this bill.

In January I addressed the House on this bill (H. R. 31, 75th Cong.). I reached the conclusion that while I had no reason to suppose it was not fundamentally sound, that it would be better if I attempted to achieve the same result without interfering in any manner with the present banking set-up, and in order to arrive at a formula which would be sound I considered the things which are now being talked about in every thinking home in the United States.

First, the problem of taxes, the tremendous burden of taxation, is being universally discussed. Second, the balancing of the Budget is being discussed. Third, the problem of how we can have high wages and at the same time have low retail prices is being discussed. With those three things in mind, I endeavored to formulate proposed legislation which will solve those problems. As I said before, that is the bill H. R. 7188, which I would like to discuss at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this country have been tremendously misled about this question of taxes. The people of the country have been told that our taxes are away below the taxes paid by the people of Great Britain. Our people have been told that our taxes are much less than the taxes paid by the people of Germany and by the people of France, and they have been misled, because in these calculations only Federal taxes in this country have been compared with governmental taxes of England, Germany, and France; but when we add to the Federal taxes our State and municipal taxes, which corresponding taxes are negligible in those countries, we find that our taxation problem is nearly as serious as the problem in Great Britain, and much more serious than in Germany or in France. On a basis of a ratio with Great Britain at 100, ours is 91, Germany is 87, and France is 77. Then, in the last 4 years, our Federal tax rates have increased 100 percent, while the tax rates of Great Britain have increased only 5 percent. So that whatever we may say, the tax problem is a problem that the American people have to solve, and they have to solve it promptly.

The problem of balancing the Budget is, of course, connected with the tax problem. We are collecting now in taxes four and a quarter billion dollars a year, and we are expending four and three-quarter billion dollars a year. How we can solve the tax problem and the problem of balancing the Budget was in my mind in the preparation of this bill. There is only one way that I could find, and that is to increase the consuming income of the country.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman stated that America had increased its tax rate by at least 100 percent and that during the same period Great Britain had increased her tax rate by 5 percent.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it not a fact that Great Britain's taxation begins with a taxable income of $500 a year, while ours begins with $1,500 for a single person and $2,000 for a married person, and if the base were the same in America as in England, and if economic royalists would pay their obligations as they should, the obligation would not be falling simply upon the lower middle classes?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is a very interesting statement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know that the gentleman has given a great deal of thought to this discussion. I wonder if he has given any consideration to the part which the gold purchases play in maintaining an unbalanced Budget. We are told that in the last six months we have, with the taxpayers' money, borrowed money, purchased something like $750,000,000 worth of gold, and stored it away down in Kentucky. I wonder if the gentleman has given any consideration to the fact that if we could adjust that gold policy in some manner to relieve us of that obligation, the balancing of the Budget might be a simple matter?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the balancing of the Budget probably is not a particularly difficult matter, anyway, and that is what I am going to attempt to demonstrate with the permission of the House. I think the question of the gold purchases is outside of the issue which I am discussing. That is a matter of governmental policy, and was begun at a time and for the purpose of trying to restore confidence in the American people in American money, and it served a very useful purpose at that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman made the remark that in one of his bills he advocated a free gold market. I wonder if the gentleman is prepared to say that he thinks that at this time gold should find its value in a free gold market, other than by legislative or Executive fiat?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I would prefer, with the gentleman's permission, not to inject that into this particular speech; but if the gentleman is interested in my opinion, I would be very glad to discuss it with him at any time, either here or in his office or in mine.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that I did not want to inject any subject into the gentleman's speech that he did not care to discuss as a part of his speech.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The income of the people of the United States is now about $65,000,000,000 a year. That income, by the operation of the legislation that I suggest, could be increased as gradually as necessary to $100,000,000,000 in at least 18 months. What would be the result of that increase? The percentage now of taxes in relation to income is about 6½ percent, yielding now about four and a quarter billion dollars. Without increasing the percentage of taxation on an income of $100,000,000,000 a year, we could raise six and a half billion dollars in taxation. By introducing that other $35,000,000,000 of wealth we would be able to release from relief and from governmental support about $2,000,000,000 of labor and services. In other words, the Federal Government would be relieved of about $2,000,000,000 of pressure that is now brought upon it, so that by increasing the national income to $100,000,000,000 you could balance the Budget and begin to pay off nearly $4,000,000,000 a year of the national debt.

Now, this bill undertakes to create a stabilization fund, to be managed by a Federal Credit Commission. The operation of this stabilization fund is roughly as follows:

The Federal Credit Commission, by using the various available services, such as the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Brookings Institution, the various index numbers and index services which are available in this country, undertakes to decide on what is the unused capacity of wanted goods and services on the part of our people which could be produced. Then it furnishes to retailers a discount on prices to the ultimate consumer—not to be resold—but to the ultimate consumer, of an amount which will enable society to consume all that the country can produce. In other words, the difference between present actual production and potential production of wanted goods and services. That discount is taken by the retailer to his bank. His bank allows him credit for it just as if he had deposited the cash. Then the bank is allowed on the books of the National Credit Commission a credit in an equivalent amount. The bank is allowed to advance the amount of that credit to the retailer, dollar for dollar, but cannot use it for the purpose of his fractional reserves as he could his ordinary deposits. That money which is placed on the books of the Federal Deposit Commission on behalf of the banks can be used by the banks to settle interbank balances. It can be used, dollar for dollar, as a basis for credit.

Let us suppose a contingency which will not arise, but let us suppose that an inflationary condition appears. Let us suppose that the ordinary operations of the Federal Reserve System are not sufficient to control it; then the Federal Credit Commission can call in from the banks the interbank currency which it has issued, and the banks, in order to be able to return it, will have to reduce their loans. That will control any inflationary tendency. Why do I say that will never have to be used? I say it for this reason: That when that credit is introduced into the monetary system, it is backed by the goods which are produced and distributed by it. It is not inflationary, because it does not go into the market except to the ultimate consumer, and it is always, therefore, represented by goods; and as it is always represented by goods, it cannot cause inflation. If you have $50 and 50 bushels of wheat, you have a dollar representing a bushel of wheat. You can increase the $50 to $100, provided you produce another 50 bushels of wheat to match it. You have exactly the same relationship existing. As long as you do not put into the market money, except to match goods that are produced and carried into distribution and consumption, you cannot have inflation.

Now, it will be said, of course, that this national credit is fiat money. It will be said that this is simply another bill which will cause inflation. I ask the members of the press—I know I will not get it—but I ask the members of the press, which would naturally be hostile to this sort of legislation, to suspend their judgment. I say here and now with the utmost seriousness that I would like to discuss the validity of this proposed measure with any man in the world, and I am not at all afraid of the result of that discussion.

My friends that have been associated with me so long on the Committee on Banking and Currency, I believe, will bear me out when I say that I am cautious in making statements of that kind; but I have struggled with this thing too long not to believe that I do not know something about it. There is nothing unsound in the proposition. What are we doing now insofar as our national credit is concerned? Nothing could be more absurd, nothing could be more unsound than a national debt. What do we use when we create a national debt? We use the public credit and then we use private credit. In other words, expressed in another way, we buy our money twice. How do we do it? Society, of course, has the right to furnish its own medium of exchange and should furnish its own medium of exchange. When the Federal Government, in exchange for goods and services, pays out its money, society has furnished its own national or Federal or social money. Then what happens? After society has furnished itself its own medium of exchange for a particular transaction, it goes to a bank and borrows an equivalent amount for no reason on earth except to furnish a gratuity to the bank. [Applause.] There is nothing else to it. Money which would be furnished by this National Credit Commission and which would be a revolving fund, would be the same kind of money that you use every day when you use bank checks. It is an account, set up on the books of the Federal Credit Commission, backed by the Federal taxing power, just as a bond. When the Federal Government borrows $100,000,000, what happens?

The Federal Government prints bonds, carries the bonds over to a bank. The bank does not give back to the Federal Government anything, but it sets up a credit on its own books to the extent of $100,000,000. Then the Federal Government can check on the account. That is all that happens. The Federal Government, which has everything, borrows $100,000,000 from the bank which has relatively nothing, then lends it back to the bank by depositing it and begins to pay interest on it. Is not that a nice business transaction?

Mr. SIROVICH. Why is that being done?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is perfectly evident that it is being done because of the tremendous influence which the banking system has always had on the Federal Government.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a matter of fact, some control must be had over the issuance of circulation of money, and we have now carried our control to the borrowing power of the Government and the borrowing power of the individual. That is control. Anything beyond that would be called inflation, would it not?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. My conception of inflation is this: When a country is producing all it can produce and when it is able to distribute all it can produce, and you then put more money into the market, that is inflation, real inflation.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a matter of fact, under the Federal Reserve System, the issuance of money is controlled by the borrowing power of business to issue what is called eligible paper. The Federal Reserve System takes this eligible paper and issues securities against it. Does the gentleman call that inflation or not?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The difficulty is that the money value of the property which the business public has to put up as security with the banks is based cn the amount of money in circulation. When the banks become scared and begin to call in loans and begin, therefore, to decrease the circulating medium, and the price of everything goes down, then business does not have the security to offer the banks.

Mr WHITE of Idaho. That is what is called deflation. As a matter of fact, the only way money can be put into circulation is by the Government borrowing through the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is based on debt.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That is a control on the issuance of money.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is based on debt.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The control of money today is exercised by the Government and private enterprise borrowing money. Anything issued beyond the ability to borrow is what we call inflation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I made a statement about how money is created and how irrational it is for a government to undertake to borrow from banks instead of issuing its own money; and I am going to quote from various authorities, some liberal and some conservative and reactionary.

Ralph M. Hawtrey, Assistant Secretary of the British Treasury, says:

> Banks lend by creating credit. They create the means of payment out of nothing.

Maj. L. L. B. Angas, author of a book entitled "Slump Ahead in Bonds", says:

> The modern banking system manufactures money out of nothing. The process is perhaps the most astounding piece of sleight of hand that was ever invented. Banks, in fact, are able to create and cancel modern deposit money. They can, in fact, inflate, mint, and unmint the modern ledger-entry currency.

Mr. Vincent C. Vickers, late director of the Bank of England, said:

> Can it be denied that a system which is based on and exists solely by the creation and enforcement of debt, much of which can never be extinguished, is the source of poverty, discontent, and discord at home and abroad, and constitutes a permanent incentive to war?

Another quotation:

> The money industry should consider their own position. Were they to do so they would—in my very humble opinion they must—arrive at the conclusion that the future welfare of the money industry, as it is at present constituted, depends entirely upon its own power to crush out the human impulse to go forward and upon its ability to override the will of the people and so to govern the world.

The Encyclopedia Britannica says:

> Banks create credit. It is a mistake to suppose that bank credit is created by any important extent by the payment of money into the bank. When a bank lends * * * the bank's debt is a means of payment. It is credit money. It is a clear addition to the amount of the means of payment in the community.

And again in speaking about Government borrowing immense sums from the banks, such as has been happening in this country since 1932, the Encyclopedia says:

> Banks lend by creating credit. They create the means of payment out of nothing.

Mr. Eccles, head of the Federal Reserve Board, is quoted in Collier's of June 8, 1935:

> The banks can create and destroy money. Bank credit is money. It is the money we do most of our business with, not with that currency which we usually think of as money.

Now, I am going to quote from a man who, as far as I know—and I say this with every respect—is as reactionary as any man with whom I have ever come into personal contact.

Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the United States Budget, in the Atlantic Monthly, in the fall of 1935, said:

> The Nation's banks today hold approximately 53 percent of the entire Federal debt. Banks, when they buy Government bonds, rarely pay for them with cash that someone has deposited in the bank. Instead, they create a bookkeeping credit, against which the Government is entitled to draw. In a country in which more than 90 percent of all business is done by the use of checks, there is no essential difference between the creation of bank deposits by fiat and the creation of printing-press money.

Yet the banks are complaining about fiat money when they themselves by the creation of bookkeeping money out of nothing create fiat money all the time. The difference is that in the one case society is creating its own medium of exchange for which it only has to pay once and in the other case it is paying the bank's principal and interest for something that the banks never lent to the Government. They never had it to lend. The total capital, surplus, and undivided profits of all the banks of the country is less than $7,000,000,000 and yet the Government is undertaking to borrow from those banks in the neighborhood of $20,000,000,000. It is a perfecty ridicuous proposition.

H. Parker Willis, another, to say the least, conservative economist, former Secretary of the Federal Reserve Board, wrote in the American Mercury, as reported in the Reader's Digest, in September 1936, as follows:

> When a bank purchases United States bonds from the Treasury it merely credits the Government with the value of the securities; in other words it establishes a deposit account for the purchasing price. Then the Government draws checks on the sum so created.

In an article appearing in the magazine Time of February 10, 1936, there is shown a clear understanding of the money system, as follows:

> The principal medium of exchange in the United States is not currency, which accounts for only 10 percent of the total money supply; but credit money, which means checks. A banker can create deposits with the aid of a willing borrower and a good pen when a bank lends, say $25,000, which is an asset. Thus $25,000 worth of new credit money is turned loose in the country, passing from bank to bank in the form of checks. Not until the borrower pays off his loan does that money disappear from circulation. When the Treasury sells bonds to commercial banks, the banks manufacture new credit money with a pen, just as they do for private borrowers.

The Right Honorable Reginald McKenna, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, and chairman of the Midland Bank, one of the largest commercial banks in the world, says:

> I am afraid that the ordinary citizen will not like to be told that the banks can and do create and destroy money. The amount of money in existence varies only with the action of banks.

I was very much interested in a statement made in the course of an address by Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the board of directors of the Chase National Bank, at the thirty-ninth annual dinner of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, on December 8, 1936. Mr. Aldrich stated:

> Our last great boom was characterized by a very excessive expansion of bank credit and other credit, which means it was characterized by a very excessive creation of debt. Credit is the other name for debt. We call it credit in boom times and we call it debt when depressions come. We praise credit in the boom and we denounce debt in the depression. If we could learn to use periods of active business in such a way as to pay off debt instead of increasing it, we should have gone very far toward solving one of the greatest problems of prosperity and depression.

Mr. Aldrich, chairman of the greatest bank in the world, does not know that as soon as we begin to get prosperous and begin to be able to pay our debts we immediately create deflation, because when you pay off the bank debt you decrease the circulating medium just that much. If he is sincere—and we must assume he is sincere—he does not know there is no such thing in this country as paying our debts. Our money is created almost exclusively when we borrow from a bank. I borrow $25,000 from a bank. The bank does not give me $25,000. It gives me a bankbook and then states that there is on deposit that $25,000, which goes into circulation. As soon as I pay off the $25,000 that money is extinguished. It is wiped out. So that as soon as you begin to get prosperous and begin to pay your debts the money of the country begins to decrease, and you have another deflation. You cannot pay off the debt.

Mr. Speaker, in this measure an attempt is made to begin a system, not of scarcity but a system of abundance, a system based on the principle that it is the duty of a government, insofar as it can, to furnish to its people all that its people can produce and get rid of this idea of scarcity and this idea of having to destroy the good things that people want in order to have prosperity.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand now that the primary purpose of this bill that the gentleman has been discussing is to put into operation those forces which will originate dollars against production as it comes into being, thereby furnishing money for its proper financing, and that as the production flows there can be no inflation because of the fact the production meets the dollars originated, and that it also makes it no longer necessary, theoretically or otherwise, to create money as we do through the making of bank loans?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. May I just add this statement: And the credit is protected from any inflationary influence by virtue of the fact the credit does not come into being until the production goes to the consumer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct. I just wanted to see if I understood the presentation of the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It has been carefully estimated that if our people were on a fair nutritional diet we could use 50,000,000 dairy cattle instead of the 25,000,000 of 1936, 17,000,000 beef cattle instead of the 15,000,000 of 1936, 15,000,000 veal calves instead of the 10,000,000 of 1936, 85,000,000 hogs instead of the 57,000,000 of 1936, 30,000,000 sheep and lambs instead of the 21,000,000 of 1936, 637,000,000 poultry instead of the 426,000,000 of 1936; could utilize 7,000,000 acres of vegetable truck instead of the 2,300,000 of 1936, 854,000 acres of citrus fruits instead of the 565,000 of 1936, and 10,000,000 acres of tree fruits and grapes instead of the 4,600,000 of 1936.

It is, of course, not the purpose of this administration, or, I am sure, of any administration, to continue any process of regimentation beyond a period of emergency. It is also true, however, that capitalism will be saved, that liberty will be saved, and that democracy will be forever preserved among a people who have the vision that it is the obligation of government to carry to all of its people all that its people can produce.

There never was a greater fallacy than the fallacy called the balance of trade. Why, when we send our good things to other countries and simply get obligations for them it is said that we have the balance of trade. They have the balance of trade, because they have the good things our people want. The balance of trade runs exactly opposite to what it is usually said to be, and this is because we are in an economy of scarcity, and have not been able yet to visualize clearly that the market we want is primarily the market of our own people. [Applause.]

I have endeavored in my brief discussion of this measure to give you an idea of what I am trying to do. I shall ask for a hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency. I shall press for a hearing, press for a report, and press for passage through the Congress in an effort to improve all lines of business, including the banking business as now constituted, and to carry to all our people the riches we have in store for them if we are only permitted to do it. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD concerning a proposed child-labor amendment which I have introduced yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 226.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 226

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 155, a joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 84]

Allen, Pa.	Dempsey	Jenkins, Ohio	Schuetz
Amlie	Disney	Keller	Smith, Va.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 355 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. BOEHNE, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. Speaker, because I believe this matter is of considerable magnitude and is not just the usual investigating resolution, I desire to refer from time to time to some written remarks so that there may be a better understanding of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 226, just reported, provides for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 155, to create a joint congressional committee to investigate tax evasion and avoidance.

It might be well at the outset to state the background of this proposal.

On June 1, 1937, the President transmitted to Congress his message embodying a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury pointing out that that Department of the Government had unearthed certain instances of tax evasion and avoidance by sundry means employed, especially by wealthy taxpayers, whereby the Government had been deprived of estimated income-tax receipts of hundreds of millions of dollars.

The President's message, as founded on the letter of the Treasury Department, recommended that that Department be authorized to investigate further such matters in order to make recommendations to Congress to plug such loopholes in our tax laws.

Why the Treasury Department needed any further authority than existing law provides to make such an investigation was not made clear. The suggestion of publicity may be the answer. I assume that every Member of Congress, like myself, heartily endorses the President's proposal to make every effort by legislation to plug these loopholes and put a stop to this evasion and avoidance of our income-tax laws. On that there can be no disagreement. In a statement to the press yesterday a great financier defended the use of such loopholes and passed the blame to Congress for being so "stupid" as to leave the holes open. That, of course, is no answer in morals. Some taxpayers, in crawling through these loopholes, so stretch the holes that the world no longer recognizes them as holes.

It is not contended to any considerable extent that such evasions and avoidance constitute any fraud or noncompliance with the strict letter of the law. There is plenty of existing law to meet these cases. It is contended, however, that certain wealthy taxpayers have taken advantage of certain loopholes in the existing laws to avoid or evade paying the full amount of taxes expected under the provisions of our tax laws.

When the proposal for this investigation reached Congress it was suggested, at least in another body, that Congress was the proper agency to make this investigation. Thereupon a joint resolution was prepared to carry out that intent.

Why the other body should be joined in such an investigation is not yet clear to some of us. Under the Constitution all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives, and under our rules our Committee on Ways and Means has jurisdiction over such legislation. The other body cannot even act on tax matters until our committee has reported a tax bill and the House of Representatives has passed the bill. Until that time the other body and its Finance Committee are impotent.

All that was needed to be done to make it a congressional investigation was the introduction of a resolution giving to the Ways and Means Committee of the House the power to subpena. Why that simple, direct, and constitutional procedure was not followed I do not know, unless it was because of the publicity proposal.

Suffice to say, however, that the suggestion of a joint inquiry prevailed somehow, and on June 1, 1937, on the date of the President's message, identical resolutions were introduced in both bodies—in the other body by Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi, Senate Joint Resolution 155, and in this House by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], House Joint Resolution 391. The latter resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

On June 2, 1937, the resolution—Senate Joint Resolution 155—was called up in the other body and passed without amendment. When that resolution was messaged over to the House, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], acting in his individual capacity, and in nowise representing our Committee on Ways and Means, of which he is the distinguished chairman, asked unanimous consent to call up and pass Senate Joint Resolution 155. Objection was made, and thereupon that resolution was likewise referred to the Rules Committee, which is the only committee having any jurisdiction of the two resolutions.

On the same day a hearing was duly held before your Rules Committee, and Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, were heard at length.

The Committee on Rules thereupon considered the Senate resolution and, within the powers lodged in all your committees, reported the same back to the House with three suggested amendments:

First. The original resolutions did not require that the proposed joint committee should be obligated to report to the House, or the other body, or to our Committee on Ways and Means, or the Finance Committee of the other body, or to Congress, any of the information the joint committee might obtain. The Rules Committee felt that at least the two tax committees of our two Houses were entitled to this information for the purpose of proposing legislation, and so provided by a proper amendment, which has been agreed to. Such a report does not become public, and any other report of such information to Congress is left discretionary with the joint committee.

Second. In the proposed joint resolutions it was provided that the joint committee could make public any information obtained from any taxpayer's returns or by any other method of investigation—by public hearing or otherwise. The Committee on Rules felt that such a proposal was an absolute reversal of the attitude of Congress, twice expressed within about 2 years against the publicity of tax returns, and recommended the elimination of the provision.

Third. Section 5 of the proposed joint resolution provided that any officer or employee of the Treasury Department could make investigations in the name of the joint congressional committee, and even hold hearings.

The Committee on Rules felt that this was an improper delegation of congressional prerogatives to an executive department, and that while the original proposal for an investigation by the Treasury Department had, at the insistence of Congress, been changed into a congressional investigation, such a proposal was a continued attempt to have the investigation conducted by the Treasury Department, with Congress but an empty shell, being used as a cloak for such a procedure.

Therefore the Rules Committee recommended the striking out of this grant of all-embracing power in the Treasury Department.

Some objections were made from certain sources to the three amendments suggested by your Rules Committee, with the result that on Thursday and Friday of last week, and again on Monday and Tuesday of this week, conferences were held between representatives of the Ways and Means Committee and the Rules Committee, with the result that all differences have been ironed out and the three amendments suggested by the Rules Committee in its report should be changed as follows:

The amendment that the joint committee must report the information it obtains to our Ways and Means Committee and to the Finance Committee still stands.

The proposal as to the joint committee giving out to the public information it obtains as to any taxpayer or his or its returns is modified to provide that the joint committee, acting as such and not through a subcommittee, or an individual member, shall determine in each instance and as to each taxpayer as to whether such information shall be made public. This places the responsibility fairly and squarely upon the joint committee and its individual members in each case.

Personally, this was a compromise entered into reluctantly on my part, because I do not believe the "weapon", as it is frankly called, of publicity is American. As to preparing legislation, it serves no purpose. It is proposed as a blackjack and is nothing less. The 3,000,000 taxpayers of this country get plenty of tossing around already. [Applause.]

As to information disclosed at a public hearing, the amendment agreed upon provides that any subcommittee of not less than two members of the joint committee, duly authorized by the joint committee, may hold public hearings, at which, of course, any information deduced would become public. It was agreed that such a provision was necessary to enable Treasury officials and others to testify in public as to information they possessed. I trust this power will not be abused.

Such limited safeguards against unfair and un-American publicity are thus provided for in the amendments finally agreed upon after several days of conference.

Third, as to the Treasury Department, through its officers and employees really making the investigation in the nominal name of the joint congressional committee, and even by the method of public hearings at which no member of the joint congressional committee need be present, this has been completely changed by eliminating all reference in the resolution to the Treasury Department and providing that the joint committee may designate any person it may employ to conduct investigations but not to hold public hearings. It was felt that this was a salutatory amendment to preserve the responsibility of the congressional committee.

Therefore, when the Senate joint resolution shall be read for amendment, I shall, in behalf of the Rules Committee, request that the amendments as provided in the resolution be voted down, and I shall then offer the amendments now agreed upon among the Rules Committee, the representatives of the Ways and Means Committee, and the majority leadership of the House.

Mr. Speaker, what I shall now say in conclusion is not easy to utter, but I trust you, sir, especially, and I trust also that all my colleagues, particularly on the Democratic side of the aisle, will appreciate my heartfelt sincerity in what I am about to say. I am proud of Congress. I am proud to be one of 435 men and women duly elected out of that vast number of 130,000,000 of our inhabitants to represent them all in the House of Representatives, the legislative branch of our great Government. Never for one moment in my eight terms in Congress have I lost sight of that signal honor conferred on me. I love this House of Representatives and every man and woman in it. I shall pass on that love and respect as a treasured heritage to my four boys and their children, and their children's children. It looks now as though it would be their only patrimony.

But, Mr. Speaker, what concerns me, and especially so during this session of the Seventy-fifth Congress more so than in any previous meetings of our body, is, shall Congress, and especially our own body—I am not concerned about the other body—shall we surrender to so-called "brain trusters", not to the Executive, as it is often claimed, still bearing the print of the clout, and holding unimportant Government jobs to dictate not only the form but the policy of congressional action? May I suggest that those individuals drop their diapers of anonymity and bravely enter the political arena for election to Congress. Surely the people are entitled to decide who shall act for them in Congress.

I well know that such words of mine will call forth a continuance of the unjust criticisms of heretofore from certain quarters just referred to.

I well realize that threats of reprisal will be redoubled. Perhaps no one more than I realizes the stupendous futility of attempting to flay the windmills of the hour, especially when you do not have adequate support on your flank.

Candidly, Mr. Speaker, I sometimes despair that any humble, inept efforts on my part will count toward stemming the present urge from various quarters to infringe upon the prerogatives of the Congress.

With what little force or influence I have been able to exert I have for years contended for the preservation of the constitutional prerogatives of the legislative branch of the Government against any evasion by the executive branch through its subordinate departments or otherwise—yea, likewise do I contend against such invasion by the judicial arm of the Government. How many of these intruders have been elected by the people to their respective positions? I absolve the President himself from knowledge of this gratuitous intrusion.

In passing it may seem gratuitous for me to say that since March 4, 1933, I have supported the President, whom I deeply admire and even love and have personally known longer than most any Member of this body—100 percent in all his proposals. I challenge any reference to the record in refutation of that statement. Only the other day I was one of a lonely 13 in this House to sustain one of his vetoes—and in another body only 12 were found to watch with him. Possibly I could work myself up to feel like Prometheus, who in the olden days dared to defy the lightning and was thereupon chained to a rock where an eagle—mark you, not a donkey—daily devoured his liver, which was renewed each night. Unfortunately when mine shall be once devoured by the present onslaught I entertain little hope it will be renewed.

Mayhap I shall continue to be threatened with the fate of other men who have stood with their backs to the wall, fighting for a cause in which they firmly and conscientiously believed they were performing their consecrated duty.

Despairing of immediate results though I may be, I cannot but for the present still stand with my back to that wall, though, dear colleagues, if you do not care to support my position, to be honest to myself, I still must stand there, though I be barefoot and alone. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the very able remarks of my colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I think he represented the viewpoint of both sides in his fair statements, which, summed up, amount to this, that it is our duty to legislate. That is our constitutional duty. That is the function of the House of Representatives, particularly on revenue legislation. Unfortunately in recent years, as the gentleman intimated, we have abdicated and surrendered that right to others outside of Congress; to so-called "brain trusters" and college professors who have sent their programs to our committees and have practically told us to adopt their proposals as submitted. I am not a member of the Ways and Means Committee, but I have great respect for the membership of that committee. I am sure they held hearings and heard witnesses and experts.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman does not intend to convey the idea that he thinks that applies to revenue legislation reported by the Ways and Means Committee, does he?

Mr. FISH. I imply that it has been the general practice, and that applies to all committees; but I have great confidence in the gentleman and in his committee, and hope his committee has been an exception to the rule.

Mr. COOPER. I will say there has not been a single revenue bill brought in from the Ways and Means Committee during this administration but what was written by the Ways and Means Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. You have invited in many outsiders to advise you how to write that legislation, and, furthermore, some of the legislation reported by the Ways and Means Committee is practically identical with the recommendations of the executive departments.

Mr. COOPER. We have had the advice and assistance of the staff of the general committee on internal-revenue taxation, which is an agency of the House. We have had the assistance of such officials of the Treasury Department as the Ways and Means Committee might call before it to give us the benefit of such information as they might have. As far as drafting is concerned, the drafting service of the House, headed by Mr. Beaman, has done the drafting, along with the members of the committee.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. I assume the gentleman has in mind that after legislation passes the House and Senate and is signed by the President it gets into a department, and some minor clerk or lawyer there rewrites the bill by what they call a system of regulations; and the entire law that was passed by the House and Senate and afterward signed by the President is relegislated into regulations of their own classification?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is largely correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In addition to what the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has stated about the drafting of bills that come from the Committee on Ways and Means, not only invariably does our drafting service prepare these bills after long, painstaking study by the committee, calling in such assistance as we think will be helpful, but this resolution itself was prepared by our own drafting service. The gentleman from New York adverted to the fact that not only the very form of the resolution but the resolution which I introduced, similar to the one now under consideration, was prepared by the executive department. Nothing is further from the fact. This very resolution itself was prepared by our own drafting service and not by the executive department.

Mr. FISH. I respect the gentleman and his committee, and I know it is an able committee and tries to function to the best of its ability; but it is rather unfortunate that we are faced with this circumstance, that your committee must take the blame, inasmuch as you have assumed it yourself, for writing legislation that has left loopholes so wide in our income-tax laws that you can drive a yacht right through the loopholes. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Not for the moment. I do not want to antagonize any member of the Ways and Means Committee or discuss this issue further.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the only Republican Member from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Though we all have high regard and great admiration for the individual members of the Ways and Means Committee, we should not forget that that committee has reported more bills that have been held unconstitutional recently than any other committee of this House.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not yield further, because that is not the issue before the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am sorry, but I must proceed.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to point out a loophole that the Rules Committee has left in this bill.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman can point it out in his own time.

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot get any time.

Mr. FISH. There is no question about the facts. The President of the United States, your President, has sent in a long message pointing out numerous loopholes that existed in the income-tax legislation that was written by the Ways and Means Committee and passed by the Congress. Those loopholes exist at the present time and should be plugged immediately. Even the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is reported as saying that if you close up those loopholes we can save $300,000,000.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have never said any definite amount could be saved.

Mr. FISH. How much can be saved?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We can tell better when we look into this matter and see how much we are being robbed of. We can tell then.

Mr. FISH. What are we legislating about? Are we not trying to save hundreds of milions, or is this investigation just another smoke screen?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman will give us credit for stopping up the loopholes that the gentleman's own party left while they were in power, to the extent of two or three hundred million dollars, it would be more appropriate.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman had made that statement a few years ago, it would have been all right, but his party has been in power for 4 years and has left the gates wide open.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman's party was in power for 40 years.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but the income-tax law is comparatively new. The loopholes have been there for 4 years. Necessity for action certainly exists. The loopholes are still there, and we are agreed that they ought to be stopped, and stopped immediately. It is the function of Congress to legislate. We should, therefore, adopt this bill and legislate before the adjournment of Congress to prevent further evasion or avoidance by big taxpayers.

I take this occasion to say that this administration has no financial policy whatever. If I were to indict the administration on one issue more than another it would be that it has no financial or fiscal policy. Its financial policy is simply to pile debt upon debt, deficit upon deficit by issuing more billions and still more billions of tax-exempt securities until the national debt now exceeds $35,000,000,000. I am inclined to think, although I am in favor of this legislation, that it is an alibi, that it is a red herring, because the Budget is not balanced. The President wants to blame the Congress for leaving these loopholes and thereby establish an alibi for not balancing the Budget. I do not want to blame the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the Ways and Means Committee for leaving these various tax loopholes, but he has assumed the blame. The fact is that the administration has no financial or fiscal policy; and while you are discussing this investigation of saving $300,000,000, I call attention to the fact that you have taken $800,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States since the first of the year to buy foreign gold at $35 an ounce and bury it in the ground—gold which we do not need and for which we pay the British Empire and Soviet Russia twice the cost of production.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield; I have only a couple of minutes left.

The only financial policy of the administration that I can see is saving at the spigot—this is the spigot—and losing at the bunghole, and the bunghole is buying gold at $35 an ounce from nations that already owe us millions and billions, and paying twice the cost of production to those countries to enrich them and impoverish ourselves by adding to our deficits and increasing our already unbalanced Budget. That is the financial policy of this administration, and that is the one issue above all in which I think this administration has failed, and failed lamentably. I join you today, however, in trying to help the Ways and Means Committee do away with these numerous tax loopholes and recover a few hundreds of millions of dollars in order to try to balance the Budget and put our financial house in order. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that when the Members read these proposed amendments they will agree with us that they are absolutely necessary if we are to preserve the independence and dignity of this body. Under the original resolution the Treasury Department would have conducted public hearings and could have given out such information as the employees of the Treasury Department saw fit. While I am not indicting the Ways and Means Committee by saying that they would have wholly delegated this authority to the Treasury Department, it does seem to me that the time has come when the House of Representatives and the Congress of the United States should resume its legitimate and constitutional function of legislating for the people of the United States. I refuse to believe that the President of the United States for one moment desires this great body to delegate or continue to delegate its constitutional authority to a gigantic bureaucracy.

I have never been able to distinguish in my own mind the difference between bureaucracy and fascism. Gentlemen declaim against fascism and point to nations across the waters as illustrations of the terrible calamities that are visited upon the children of men when they permit some fascistic state to be superimposed upon a democracy; yet I see these same gentlemen continue to support measures and policies the whole purport and intent of which is to build up a gigantic bureaucracy of governmental agents who are not amenable to the people, who do not go to the people for their election, who are not responsible to any public will. Under the present trend of public affairs these bureaucrats are day by day and hour by hour assuming the constitutional power and privileges of the Congress of the United States. Every one of us knows it. I say, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it is not right for any committee of this House to have the authority to delegate to a departmental employee or clerk, or anyone else, the right to conduct a hearing in the name of the Congress of the United States and to decide when matters shall be made public.

Under the amendments that have been agreed to full publicity can be given in every case. The only requirement is that it shall be the duly constituted agency of the Congress that shall determine when the publicity shall be given and not some employee of some department. There are in the amendments proposed ample provision that will enable the subcommittees to hold public hearings and to give the information brought out in the hearings to the Nation. There is also ample provision for this joint committee acting upon its own responsibility as our duly authorized agent to release such publicity as it sees fit.

But I do say and I do declare with all deference to the great President we have, I do declare, Mr. Speaker, that no greater calamity could come upon this country, no greater disaster could come than for us through the course of the future months and years continually to delegate our authority until finally in the United States there will be a gigantic bureaucracy, self-perpetuating and self-governing, which will never have to go to the people for approval of their actions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I concur heartily with the very able address made by the chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. He has been most frank in explaining this resolution—where it comes from and what it originally purported to do. I think the Rules Committee is to be congratulated on the changes that it has made in the copy that evidently was sent to somebody to introduce.

I have the very highest regard for the Ways and Means Committee. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not want any Member of the House to think the Ways and Means Committee cannot make mistakes. I am very glad indeed to let the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee take credit for the introduction of this resolution, because, so far as I know, it never was before the Ways and Means Committee in any way, shape, or form. I am only sorry the chairman endeavored to have it adopted without consideration by this House. That was the procedure which was going to be followed, but fortunately the gentleman from New York blocked it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. My time is very short, but I am always glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, the changes that the Rules Committee made in the bill were changes made in the bill that passed the Senate?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman talks about the bill being written and sent in here.

Mr. TREADWAY. It was. I may say to the gentleman it was introduced simultaneously in the Senate and House and was passed by the Senate without consideration. It was then brought over here with the expectation we could do the same thing, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] blocked that procedure. That is the history of the case. Now please do not take any more of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. It was reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate and passed by the Senate.

Mr. TREADWAY. With all due respect to the Senate, the gentleman knows how much consideration many measures get in that body.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is giving a great deal of credit to the chairman of the Committee on Rules for blocking this measure, which I do not criticize; but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that before I requested unanimous consent for the consideration of the Senate resolution—in fact, the day before—I went to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and conferred with him.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not deny that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. And he had a whole day to study the resolution and to object, but he agreed to it and never raised any objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. But I did not see a copy of the resolution until the morning the gentleman called it up for consideration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman could have asked for and received a copy of it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not see any resolution which delegated the power of this body to some Treasury employee. Now, do not let us get into a dispute. I think we understand each other. The gentleman was very anxious to get that resolution adopted without the Members of the House knowing its contents.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not care to enter into any bellowing contest with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let us not have a misunderstanding. That is exactly the effort that was made. That is, to have the resolution adopted in the House as it was in the Senate, without knowledge of its contents.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman had 24 hours to look into the matter before he agreed to my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. TREADWAY. But the resolution was in the gentleman's pocket.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I note that the Rules Committee struck out—

> And shall have the right to make public, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, any such information or any such returns.

Does the gentleman agree to striking those words out of the bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree it is no duty of this body to investigate your income-tax return and mine for any ulterior purposes whatever, and that is what most of these publicity stunts are for.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Let me ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Hurry it up.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Are not the people of the United States entitled to know who the tax dodgers are in this country?

Mr. TREADWAY. Why, of course they are.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Why was that language stricken out?

Mr. TREADWAY. We have every authority to find out who they are, and if the gentleman will give me sufficient time, I will tell him.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Why were these words stricken out?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York referred to authority already resting in the hands of Congress to make suitable investigations. Remarks have been made on this floor which amount to more or less of a slur upon the ability of the Ways and Means Committee.

May I say that we have tried conscientiously to find loopholes in the tax law for years, and we have made great progress in that direction. The Revenue Act of 1934 was a loophole-plugging bill. Certainly there is no greater expert on tax matters in the employ of Congress or anywhere else than Mr. Parker, Chief of Staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue. He has devoted months to these studies. Why, it is ridiculous for the President of the United States to send us a message which carries the thought that tax evasion is something new. Tax evasions have been known ever since tax bills have been written. I do not believe this joint committee will be able to write new laws that will prevent further tax evasions.

I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] very nearly hit the reason why this measure was brought in to us. It is just a "red herring" to cover up the erroneous estimates of the Treasury Department and the administration as to tax receipts to the extent of $600,000,000 in the current fiscal year and nearly $400,000,000 next fiscal year.

I hope they find the money, but they are not going to find it in preventing the incorporation of a yacht or in the incorporation of a private residence owned by a woman who pays her husband to run it. Those examples are all right, but how far are they going to get us in making up the deficit of the Treasury?

The trouble is that the President forgot to mention the biggest field for tax avoidance, namely, the tax-exempt securities now outstanding, which aggregate some fifty or more billions of dollars. The present Democratic administration has contributed about fourteen billions to this total. There is no use wasting our time plugging up loopholes in the income tax as long as wealthy persons can invest their money in State and municipal bonds, and wholly tax-exempt Federal bonds, and thereby escape any taxation whatever. The President speaks of the fact that the taxes which are avoided by the wealthy must be paid by others, but this is equally true of the taxes that are avoided by investment in tax-exempt securities. If it is immoral to incorporate a yacht, why is it not immoral to invest in tax-exempt securities?

For several years I have had pending a proposed constitutional amendment which would do away with tax-exempt securities, but the administration has effectively blocked action on any proposal of this character. If the President is sincere in wanting to prevent tax avoidance, he should forthwith suggest to Congress the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment along the lines of the one I have introduced. Other methods of tax avoidance are but a drop in the bucket compared to the revenue that is lost from tax-exempt securities, which must be made up by higher taxes on the people generally.

Mr. Walter Lippmann, in his syndicated column of last Sunday, suggests that the President's tax-evasion message, like the one on judicial reform, is another example of "misleading argument employed indirectly to achieve an unavowed purpose." What the President really wants, Mr. Lippmann says, is the authority from Congress "to put 'a minority of rich individuals' on trial before a committee." He goes on to say:

> Is it surprising that throughout the country there exists already a deep suspicion that the objective is not law enforcement and revenue but political propaganda designed to create popular prejudice and strengthen the administration's weakened political position?

There is undoubtedly some analogy between the President's tax-evasion message and his share-the-wealth tax message of 1935. That, also, was a political gesture.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution. I want to see every honest debt that any citizen owes to the United States Government paid, but let us not fool ourselves that by the appointment of this joint committee at the present time we are going to plug loopholes that cannot be unplugged later by brilliant lawyers.

The President states that the "decency of American morals" is involved in the tax-avoidance problem. But taking advantage of the tax loopholes is no more immoral than for the Democratic Party not to keep the pledges it made during the campaign to reduce expenses and balance the Budget. I think that is more immoral than telling a few taxpayers they are trying to fool the Government and are not paying a sufficient amount of tax into the Treasury. It is immoral and unfair to make promises to the people with no intention of keeping them.

That is what this administration has done time and again. It is just too bad, however, that they are smart enough to fool the general voting public that way. They have done it, and I will admit it. However, there must be an end to all good things. Possibly we may see the end of this sort of thing.

The statement has been made here that the Committee on Ways and Means has never been told what to write into a bill. This is an absurd statement. The work that Mr. Beaman and the other members of the legislative counsel do is to correct the errors in bills which are sent up from downtown to the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. This is a task that Mr. Beaman with his efficient corps does most thoroughly. Unconstitutional measures? Of course they are. Why, they have been ridiculous, and they have been torn apart and asunder. Do you think counsel for the Treasury Department, in the person of Mr. Oliphant, in the first place wrote a proper bill regarding the surplus-tax measure? Not for one moment. The bill had to be rewritten by the experts of our committee. So I might go on indefinitely, Mr. Speaker.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to my colleagues on the committee, my most respected and loved chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and my congenial copatriot of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I agree with everything they have said in principle on the fact that this bill as originally presented to us did delegate a lot of power, which was unnecessary. However, I do not work myself up into a pitch of excitement in thinking there was much, if anything, ulterior in the motive back of this delegation. It looks to me as though we in the Committee on Rules simply got a second guess on this bill. We had an opportunity to criticize and discuss it in a different atmosphere than that surrounding its original drafting and we found ways of improving it. I think this is a much better bill than it was when presented to us.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry, but I cannot.

I do not believe there are very many people trying to subrogate Congress to some selfish purpose of their own. This Congress is steering a course between two evils. If we do not have executive leadership involving bureaus, we are thrown into the hands of a lot of lobbyists. If we do have executive leadership, we are in constant danger of becoming the instrument of bureaus. I have been here when we had no executive leadership, and we were little but the tool of a lot of lobbies, 500 of them, with representatives surrounding this body in the halls and cloakrooms. This was in the administration of the last Republican President. Now that we have executive leadership, we must protect ourselves against an undue extension of bureaucratic direction, and this is what we have done in this bill. We have an excellent bill here. I am proud of my committee for the way they have handled it.

I want to speak also about publicity. I am not so sure that certain publicity is not a good thing. There are two factors controlling human conduct. One is the law and the other is public sentiment. How are we going to control human beings in an organized society if we cannot crystallize public sentiment when they are doing unsocial acts? How can those of you who read the statement of a great financier in this morning's paper keep from a feeling of resentment when you read that statement? [Applause.] Here it is:

> You only do what you are compelled to do by law.

This is the greatest financier in the United States talking.

Mr. McFARLANE. Who is it?

Mr. HARLAN. J. P. Morgan.

That sentiment, Mr. Speaker, is rugged individualism in the raw. It is the directing sentiment of the confidence man, the cheat, and the exploiter. He owes nothing to society or human decency. He takes generously of the blessings of civilization, but only contributes what is taken from him by law. It is just as true now as of old, "The defense of sin is the law."

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Does not the gentleman think these amendments which set up a star-chamber series of investigations and throw a cloak of security around these law violators are a great mistake?

Mr. HARLAN. I do not, for the reason there is ample opportunity for controlled publicity, combined with adequate public hearings.

Mr. McFARLANE. How?

Mr. HARLAN. Controlled publicity by the action of a congressional committee, not the type of publicity which seeks to put the members of the committee in the headlines of the papers or to damn someone for political purposes, but the type of publicity which will tend to control human conduct, to make us live together as patriotic citizens of this country.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield.

Suppose you and I did only those things which the law compels us to do? Most of us are lawyers. We all are controlled by the ethics of the profession. Outside of the law, where would the lawyers be if they did the things law alone compels them to do? Where would the merchants be if they followed the principle of the doctrine of caveat emptor? Where would almost any of us be, living by law alone? We need and must have the pressure of a properly informed public. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend the Committee on Rules of the House for having taken steps to preserve the prerogatives of this body. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means I will admit we have been more or less a rubber stamp. This was particularly true up to the beginning of this Congress. The New Dealers, or the "brain trusters", rather, would send up legislation prepared by immature and inexperienced youths. We would go through a lot of shadow boxing by holding hearings, but every amendment offered for the improvement of the bill that was before the committee would be voted down on a strict party vote. Frequently we would hear it said, "The President wants it passed in this form", and that was enough. Many a time I have felt that in justice to the taxpayers we should have gone home and saved to the Treasury of the country $10,000 on each Member of this body. I am pleased to see that Congress is beginning to reassert itself. It is high time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have only 5 minutes.

The preceding speaker made reference to the preceding administration.

Mr. COX. I would like to make an observation.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will yield to the gentleman for an observation.

Mr. COX. I am afraid I find in the present discussion a note of criticism of the Committee on Ways and Means. I desire, in fairness to them, that it be made known that neither the chairman of the committee or the members of the committee who appeared before the Committee on Rules insisted on the language of the original resolution. All were interested in preserving the principle of Congress keeping control of the investigation. The members of the Committee on Ways and Means were most helpful to the Committee on Rules in working out these amendments, which will be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Rules. All differences have been composed and both committees are in accord in support of the resolution.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, Congress should keep this investigation in its own hands. We would not know to whom it would be delegated if it were turned over to the Treasury Department, and from what I have seen of the Treasury Department representatives, with one or two exceptions, most of them are hardly dry behind the ears.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. As an evidence of the extent to which Congress has delegated its authority, is the gentleman aware of the fact there are several bills pending to set up a court to construe the numerous regulations issued by the bureaus downtown and they have even limited the number of the members of the Court to nine.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not surprised. The thing that surprises me is that they would stop at nine. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot yield further.

The preceding speaker proceeded to take the previous administration to task. Four years ago we heard a lot about driving the money changers from the temple, but, evidently, you have changed your technique—you are now taking them into the family. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it not just a little bit difficult to drive them from the temple when the amendment offered here throws a cloak of secrecy around this proceeding and your committee has thrown a cloak of secrecy around it so that there is not any Member of the House who can get any information from the Treasury Department unless it comes through your committee, and under this resolution you are throwing another cloak around the whole business by prohibiting any kind of open public hearings or so that any exposures may be made.

Mr. KNUTSON. You have a 4-to-1 majority in both Houses; why do you not pass something you can defend?

Mr. McFARLANE. We have tried to do that.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Of course, the gentleman from Texas is in error when he says that a cloak of secrecy is to be thrown around the investigation. Public hearings can be held by the Joint Committee, public hearings can be held by any subcommittee, and the only secrecy that is involved is in regard to any investigation that may be made by individuals other than a Member of Congress, who submit it to the Joint Committee and the Joint Committee may make that public if it so desires.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Minnesota 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, I realize that we on this side are in a hopeless minority but we would like to have you write something that would fill the bill and which would meet the objections raised by the gentlemen from Montana and Texas. We are helpless because the minute we try to help you, and God knows you need help, your leader says, "Sh-h-h, you are joining up with the black Republicans."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I presume it is the same cry they used to hush the wailing of babies down South years ago, but, my friends, there is a political realinement coming, and when it does come all the long-haired folk will get over on the other side of the fence. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFARLANE. What is going to happen to your side?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. When does the gentleman intend to hold memorial services for the present Republican Party?

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not customary to hold memorial services over the living. We will come back stronger than ever, once the people wake up.

Mr. DISNEY and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman spoke about the helpless condition he is in over on that side. How long is that condition going to prevail?

Mr. KNUTSON. Until you quit corrupting the people with green checks. Of course, we cannot go out and defeat 26,000,000 checks going out every month. Neither can we defeat you folks when you steal 90,000 votes in Kansas City and 60,000 in St. Louis, and God knows how many in Philadelphia [laughter] and New York, and all other large cities. We cannot beat the avalanche of Government checks and highway robbery. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. Now, I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Getting back to the amendment that we are discussing, does not the gentleman think that if these people who have been evading their taxes knew that the world would know, through the operations of this bill as it came to this House and before it was amended, that fact would have a deterrent influence upon people who are evading their honest obligations to the United States Government?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not any confidence in the sincerity of this movement, because I recall last year you folks were going to go after the Huey Long machine for tax evasion, and then Jim Farley went down there and got in bed with them and said, "After all, we are all Democrats [laughter]; you support us and there will be no prosecutions", and there were not any prosecutions. You bought Louisiana out of the Federal Treasury. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The fact is, the administration brought this bill into the House without this amendment, and it had the backing of the President of the United States and also of Jim Farley.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, the President is going to get anything he wants. He does your thinking for you.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Apparently he is not in this case, because he is not for this amendment.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot yield further.

A majority of this House is going to give the President exactly what he wants. You folks are not forgetting about all these vacant judgeships, and I notice from the Civil Service Reform League that you have found it necessary to remove 1,000 fourth-class postmasters since the first of the year in order to take care of the faithful. Now that you have filled every place with your own folks, you are again strong for civil service. Evidently you had to resort to picking up pins. There were not enough offices to go around without invading the classified service.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 155, to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 155, with Mr. COLE of Maryland in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is no request for general debate, and I ask that the Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two requests for time. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, personally I cannot get very much exercised about this resolution. I know that anyone who pays taxes will pay as much as he is obliged to pay, and I have never run across very many people who have been willing to pay more than they have to pay. I think there is a good deal that can be said in behalf of the position that the amount of taxes due to be paid is a legal question rather than a moral question. If we permit loopholes to exist in our laws, we cannot absolve ourselves from blame by trying to place the blame upon someone else for making use of them. The responsibility is ours to pass laws without these loopholes, to block up these loopholes when they come to our attention, and not to be continually criticizing those who take advantage of the law as we pass it. I deplore the fact that these loopholes have existed, and when the President's message came which contained the letter from the Treasury Department reciting a number of individual instances wherein people have used these loopholes for the purpose of evading taxes it seemed to me almost unbelievable that we should have been passing laws that permit such practices. We are to blame; we the Congress of the United States are responsible for the passage of these laws, and when the inadequacy of the laws are brought to our attention it is our responsibility to take immediate action to block up the loopholes. I am not opposing this investigation. It may result in some good, but I am of opinion that we could best serve the interests of this country if the Ways and Means Committee would get busy tomorrow, instead of waiting for the results of this investigation, and start writing laws that would block up these loopholes.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Not now. We cannot say that we have not the necessary information. All of these instances have been related to us, one after another by the Treasury Department. We know now of many of the methods that have been employed for the purpose of evading the proper payment of taxes. We know where the law is weak, and we should get busy and pass laws at this session of Congress that will block up the loopholes. This resolution provides that this special investigating committee can work until February 1 next year. If the committee continues its investigation until that time, it may develop other information that will be of value to Congress and the country, but if it waits until that time before getting down to serious business, it will probably mean another year of tax evasion. We have the information now. This investigation may have a wholesome effect; I do not know. I am not opposing the investigation, but I take this opportunity to make my position clear, and that is that for one I believe we should start now at this session of Congress to block up these loopholes.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. The wisest steps that we could take would be to restore full publicity to income-tax returns and thereby protect the public.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman for bringing that to my attention. It seems to me very significant that all of these practices should come to light just after the repeal of the laws which provided for full publicity with reference to income-tax returns. We did not hear of this before, when we had full publicity of income-tax returns. We did not hear of these various devices being employed, but just after we repealed the publicity features of the law, lo and behold, these methods apparently, for the first time, came to the attention of the Treasury Department.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The gentleman does not undertake to convey the idea that we have repealed all publicity?

Mr. BOILEAU. All effective publicity has been repealed; all effective means of the rank and file of the American citizens ever getting information with reference to income-tax payments have been repealed. There are no effective means of getting this information left in the hands of the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The Clerk may read the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

(b) The joint committee shall be composed of six Members of the Senate who are members of the Committee on Finance, appointed by the President of the Senate, and six Members of the House of Representatives who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee and shall be filed in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the methods of evasion and avoidance of income, estate, and gift taxes pointed out in the message of the President transmitted to Congress on June 1, 1937, and other methods of tax evasion and avoidance, and to report to the Senate and the House at the earliest practicable date, and from time to time thereafter, but not later than February 1, 1938, its recommendations as to remedies for the evils disclosed by such investigation.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this point to call the attention of the House, particularly the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin, to the contents of section 2. There is much to be said for his thought that there should be action at the earliest possible moment. From a reading of section 2 we can all easily understand that it is the purpose to have legislation at this session of Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Why not make that July 1 instead of February 1, 1938?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Because then we are circumscribing and limiting the time of the investigation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Why not make it August 1?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. In other words, there are certain loopholes that are patent, but there are others, in which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is very much interested, that might be more difficult to discover. If we would limit it to July 1 or August 1, of course, we would circumscribe the investigation.

The language in the bill says:

To report to the Senate and the House at the earliest practicable date, and from time to time thereafter, but not later than February 1, 1938, its recommendations as to remedies for the evils disclosed by such investigation.

In regard to publicity the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], in the heat of debate, referred to the fact that all worth-while publicity had been repealed. I want to call to the attention of the gentleman and to the attention of the House the fact that the fullest publicity under any Federal statute up to date is provided for in the "green slip" legislation. It is broader; there is more comprehensive knowledge and data made public under the law that was passed last year than any existing prior statute.

Mr. COLDEN. We repealed that.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. No, no. What we did a few weeks ago in this House was to repeal the statute that dealt with making public salaries of more than $15,000. We certainly did not repeal the "green slip" statute (which requires a copy of the income-tax return to be filed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, to make that available to the taxing authorities of the State for the purpose of tax collection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. We repealed that so-called "pink slip" last year.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Oh, the gentleman is color blind. It was the "green slip"—the duplicate tax return—to which I referred.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know the gentleman says "green", but the important one was the pink or the red one.

Mr. COLDEN. Is not the "green slip" available only to the taxing authorities and not to the public?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. That is correct, but I did not want the House to follow implicitly the statement of the very splendid gentleman from Wisconsin made in the heat of debate.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it the intention of the committee, in keeping with section 2 of this resolution, to bring back a bill early in this session for consideration which will eliminate these different loopholes that we now know about?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The committee has not been appointed; but what would be the use of those words "to report to the House and Senate at the earliest practicable date", if it did not refer to this session of Congress? When you say the final report must be made "not later than February 1, 1938", that means 1 month in the next session.

Mr. McFARLANE. I just wanted the gentleman's viewpoint, because he is a very able member of that committee, and I am sure he has some ideas as to what the recommendation of the committee will be so that we can eliminate a lot of these loopholes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am inclined to believe that the joint committee will report legislation to the House and Senate in this session of the Congress.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know of any member of this committee who does not entertain the idea that the committee will report legislation at this session?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. No; I do not.

Mr. COX. In other words, it is contemplated there will be legislation prior to the date of expiration?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. That is my view.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 2, at the end of line 11, add "not later than July 15, 1937."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would not in any way interfere with a full and complete investigation by this special committee. It would provide, however, that the first report to this House would be made not later than July 15 of this year. It would give this special committee more than 1 month to report on the Treasury Department's statement regarding tax evasions as contained in the President's message. That would be a preliminary report and should contain proposed remedial legislation. There would then be preliminary legislation before this House that could be passed at this session of Congress, and we could then close up some of the loopholes without delay. The committee could continue functioning until February 1 and make a full and complete investigation and then make a subsequent and final report, with recommendations, if it felt that the preliminary report and recommendations were insufficient or incomplete. If the House really and sincerely wants the committee to block these loopholes at this session, and if we want the Ways and Means Committee to immediately get down to business and work this problem out, it seems to me that we should adopt this amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the absence of an amendment along the lines of that which the gentleman has introduced, what is there to catch the man who is legally avoiding tax obligations on his income for the calendar year 1937?

Mr. BOILEAU. Nothing, unless we make the legislation retroactive. That is the only thing that could be done.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Even if it were not passed until January 15 of next year, if it were made applicable to the fiscal year 1937, it would still be in time.

Mr. BOILEAU. But it would be retroactive legislation.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am answering the question of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; and I made a similar statement to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman from Kentucky feel that it would be entirely in keeping to enact retroactive tax legislation on a proposition of this kind?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I did not say that. I call the attention of the gentleman, under the circumstances, to the fact that over $260,000,000 were given back to the big taxpayers of this country under the Coolidge administration by retroactive legislation. No one can deny that fact.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we should right now, during this session of Congress, tell these large-income taxpayers that they cannot avoid paying their just taxes by incorporating their yachts. We should tell these people that they may not incorporate their homes and make their husbands or wives manager of the home and thereby avoid their just payment of taxes. We should advise these people in the eight States where they have so-called community property laws that they can no longer evade the payment of taxes on the same basis as the taxpayers in other States. We should do these things now and let the country as well as the taxpayers know where they are at, and not wait until the next session to do it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is offered in good faith, we know, but we read in the Good Book about a character who has zeal without knowledge; and that is very often the case with many of us, our zeal runs away with our understanding of the proposition we have to deal with. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin provides a limitation upon the joint committee. I do not know whether he means a limitation on the action of the joint committee or a limitation on the action of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Finance Committee of the other body.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am afraid the gentleman has not gotten the force of this amendment. It provides: "And to report to the Senate and House at the earliest practical date not later than June 15, 1937."

Mr. DOUGHTON. It might be consistent to make a report in 2 weeks and it might on the other hand not be advisable to make a report within 2 months, no one can tell. I take it for granted that the Speaker of this House in appointing from the Ways and Means Committee of the House the members of this special joint committee will in the exercise of his discretion appoint men in whom this House will have confidence, men who will proceed as expeditiously as the facts will justify. To adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin would be tantamount to saying that you do not have confidence in the action of the men whom the Speaker will appoint as members of the joint committee.

We have been criticized severely in this House for bringing out legislation which they say was half considered, or without consideration at all, yet now you propose to circumscribe and limit this joint committee and not give it time that in their judgment they will need to consider a matter of this magnitude. We are dealing with the taxpayers of this country. We are dealing with those who provide the very lifeblood that sustains the Government. We want to draw a fine line of distinction between those who are honest and those who are dishonest. We should go after the tax evaders and the rascals, but at the same time we do not want to pass legislation which will impose a hardship upon the honest taxpayers of the country. We cannot draft such legislation without time and the gentleman knows this, or should, if he would take time to think about it. If you have confidence in the Members who will be appointed to this subcommittee, vote down the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am somewhat taken by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It would seem to me that if the committee that is appointed does right—and I presume the gentleman from North Caroline will be chairman——

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not know about that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. He ought to be, anyway.

If the gentleman and his committee are not able to or do not expect to report until next February, all of the business of this year will have passed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It says at the earliest practical moment, but not later than February. I have no doubt this joint committee will make a preliminary report as early as it has any information that will be worth anything to the House. Of course, it is stated they shall make various reports from time to time, the last report to be made not later than February, and I have no doubt but what a report will be made in ample time so that legislative action may be taken at this session of the Congress and just as early as possible with due regard to the responsibilities in the matter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think that anyone would impute to the committee any improper motives at all; but here is the proposition: If we are going to pass legislation to reap these benefits, we have to do so in this session.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We all agree to that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We ought to be fair to the taxpayers, and we ought to try to pass this legislation during this session, and not wait until next February or March, then pass a tax bill that will apply to people who have made up their budget for the present fiscal year and who have closed their books at the end of December.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not subscribe to the proposition that we should proceed without having proper time to consider this matter?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, like the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, I agree that our distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has a very meritorious objective in view in offering his amendment, but I also agree with the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that it would be unwise to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

In all probability I will not be a member of this special committee, so I can speak with freedom. The special committee will be composed of Members that the House will have complete confidence in and it will do its work conscientiously and properly. In connection with tax avoidances, in all probability if it is within the special committee's powers it will bring in a report before the present session of Congress adjourns. To adopt the pending amendment would be in a sense tying the committee's hands. It is an amendment offered in good faith, but it constitutes a limitation which might seriously interfere with the work of the special committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. With reference to those particular matters pointed out in the President's message, does not the gentleman believe with respect to those items that legislation should be brought in during this session of Congress?

Mr. McCORMACK. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but I argue that the amendment should not be adopted; that we should leave it to the judgment of the special committee that will be appointed. We all know that the Members of the House constituting the special committee will have the President's message in mind, and they will try to act upon it at this session of Congress.

There are many factors which enter into the situation, and we should not directly limit the special committee. I have complete confidence that if it is within the power of the committee they will recommend legislation this year. If it is impossible to do so, it will be through no lack of effort on their part but because of conditions over which they have no control. Certainly we do not want to limit the power of the special committee and tie their hands.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. It has been stated there are a lot of corporation returns which are not in as yet, and they have to be studied in order to see if there are any loopholes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. There are more extensions of payment this year than ever before. In the past year extensions ran from 15 to 18 percent, but this year they are running approximately 33⅓ percent of all income-tax returns.

Mr. COCHRAN. There may be loopholes in those corporation returns to be discovered?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The discussion just had indicates that the gentleman believes before this special committee makes any report that all of these income-tax reports must be studied.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no. The gentleman has read something into my statement that is not justified.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman believe the committee should wait until that time before making a report?

Mr. McCORMACK. The committee should be appointed without limitation. The House should have confidence in the committee that is appointed, and that committee should undertake to recommend legislation this year with reference to tax avoidance. Now, we could argue all day, but what good does it do? The gentleman is sincere, but the gentleman's amendment is one of limitation, and in my opinion, and honestly disagreeing with the gentleman, is unwise.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman believe it is possible to enact any legislation at this session unless a report is made by July 15?

Mr. McCORMACK. Why, yes; although I do not know. I hope we adjourn somewhere around July 15, or perhaps earlier. That is my own personal feeling. If you start putting amendments in here we will have to consider those things. The gentleman from Wisconsin might want to stay here all summer, but I do not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on behalf of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It seems to me it is a fair, sound, sane, and wise amendment. It in no way ties the hands of the committee. It calls merely for a preliminary report from the investigating committee, a perfectly proper thing to do. It provides that the committee shall report by July 15. If they did, and we were in session at that time, we could pass legislation covering the matters referred to by the President himself in his message to the Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, the Ways and Means Committee of this House does not have to wait on any report from the joint committee. They can go to work right now and bring in legislation.

Mr. FISH. Precisely. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin very properly in the opening of his remarks pointed that out. He said there was no reason why the Ways and Means Committee should not meet immediately. Why should they not meet immediately and take up the very questions raised by the President of the United States? I imagine if they recommended legislation covering what the President stated in his message to stop the tax loopholes it would be nine-tenths of all the work they will do anyhow after this investigating committee reports.

The gentleman from Wisconsin in all fairness suggests that a preliminary report be submitted by July 15. Every one has complete confidence in the investigating committee who are members of the Ways and Means Committee and the committee can report back at any other time, even next year. But I submit if you want action this year it is advisable to require a preliminary report by July 15.

However, I believe if you do not put in this limitation, the special committee, very probably, will not even meet until after Congress has adjourned, then they will report back next year and we will have only 2 months in which to write legislation and get it through both the House and the Senate. We may not even get it through by the 15th of March. If we do not get it through before then, it does not do any good. If we get it through just before then, it is not fair to the taxpayers. I submit there is no possible harm in this amendment, there can be no harm in it, and there is much merit in it. Therefore, it ought to be adopted without regard to partisanship.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Can the gentleman refer to any other special committee ever appointed as the result of authorization of the House where, prior to the time it must make its final report, the House specifically required it to make a preliminary report?

Mr. FISH. I cannot understand the logic of the gentleman. This is not restricting the committee. We want action, and we want action at this time. There are many of us who believe we will get no action at this session of Congress unless the report of the committee is submitted by the 15th of July.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I am answering the gentleman's question. I say to the gentleman that this legislation deals with the President's message—and he also wants speedy action; why should we delay until the next session of Congress?

Mr. McCORMACK. Who says we are attempting to delay?

Mr. FISH. Well, if you defeat this amendment you will. I may say to the gentleman I think this has been done on innumerable occasions. I cannot specify the exact legislation, but, as I recollect, there have been many other occasions when we have set the date and required committees to report during sessions of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. The final date?

Mr. FISH. During sessions of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to have the gentleman refer to them.

Mr. FISH. I hope we are not going to extend this session much beyond the 15th of August. If the committee does not report before the 15th of July, probably nothing will be done at this session to stop up the loopholes that permit rich taxpayers to evade payment of millions of dollars to the Government.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does this include an investigation of information given out by internal-revenue agents? As the gentleman knows, we have new agents coming in all the time, and they give out information to taxpayers who want to pay exactly what they should and do not try to evade or avoid taxation. I think it is extremely important, and I am sure the gentleman does also, that these internal-revenue agents give out to everyone the same, and accurate, information regarding the items for which the taxpayers can claim legitimate exemption. Your internal-revenue agents are sent to the Capitol to assist Members with their income-tax returns. Certainly the Members of Congress want to be as helpful to the taxpayers all over the country as possible. The House, I am sure, wishes to exact every penny possible under the law from the taxpayer. I am also sure it does not wish the Federal Government to tax the taxpayer more than it should under the law.

Mr. FISH. I cannot answer that question, but I imagine possibly some of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means can answer it.

However, I repeat that this is a fair and proper amendment, and it ought to be adopted by the House without regard to partisanship.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. DUNN) there were—ayes 54, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; to have such printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House. The provisions of sections 101 and 102 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned, under authority of this joint resolution.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the joint committee, shall furnish such committee with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return of income, estate, or gift tax.

(2) The joint committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all such returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

(3) The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Committee on Ways and Means, or the Committee on Finance, and shall have the right to make public, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, any such information or any such returns. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 3, line 17, strike out the word "Senate" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Senate and."

In line 18, after the word "Representatives", insert "and shall submit such information to."

In line 19, after the word "Means", strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

In line 20, after the word "Finance", strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 21 and 22.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have asked that these committee amendments be voted down in order that proper amendments to meet the situation may be presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment, offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Page 3, line 8, after the word "committee" where it occurs the second time, insert "(at a public hearing or otherwise, as the joint committee or a subcommittee thereof consisting of two or more members, may determine)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, strike out beginning with line 16 down through line 2 on page 4 and insert the following:

"(3) The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate and the House of Representatives, and shall submit such information to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be. The joint committee (but no subcommittee or member of the joint committee) shall have the right to make public any such information, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, but no such information shall be made public with respect to any particular taxpayer unless specifically authorized by the joint committee; but this sentence shall not apply to information made public through the medium of a public hearing as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of this amendment. I should like to state that I am just as eager as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] to see legislation enacted at an early date that will eliminate any loopholes in our tax laws.

I am as strongly opposed to the usurpation of power by departments or bureaus as the chairman of the Rules Committee, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and I will as vigorously challenge any usurpation of powers by the judiciary.

At the same time, I am opposed to those who use the experience of years of service to promulgate rules and regulations which thwart and nullify acts of Congress.

The gentleman from Minnesota points out that we have been in power over 4 years, and says that we are responsible for some of the rulings made. There is some truth to that statement, but it should be recalled that most of these employees were appointed under former Presidents Coolidge, Harding, and Hoover. It does seem that in construing the law they have assumed the viewpoint of those who appointed them.

I believe that the amendment before us is one that will meet the objections that have been raised.

The Rules Committee, cooperating with the Ways and Means Committee, has shown its desire to have early action on this important subject. This is an amendment which will, in my opinion, protect the rights and interests of the House, the country, and taxpayers alike. I feel it should be adopted.

I have noticed with a great deal of pleasure the vote of my Republican friends in favor of early action. I hope they will continue to vote the same way when the legislation is submitted to the House.

I am ready to leave it to the best lawyers on the Republican, as well as the Democratic side, to draft a bill, one that in a short time the highly paid attorneys for big interests will not find a loophole in by which to evade the law. I also feel that if an honest tribunal were to give proper construction to questions now designated as legal, they would be found illegal and would be held to be an evasion of taxation on the part of the people involved. In almost every instance it would be found that fraud has been practiced upon the Government.

I was one of those, in conjunction with the gentleman from Wisconsin, who desired publicity as to those having an income of $15,000 or more a year. I strenuously opposed the action of the House in repealing that law a few months ago. I stated then and now reiterate that that provision was of incalculable aid to cities, counties, and States in collecting much money in taxes that could never have been collected were it not for the publicity given. Only a few days ago I read in one of the large Chicago Republican dailies a long list of those who have been evading county and State taxes or have paid but a small portion of taxes due on personal property. In every section of the country we have thousands and thousands of these tax-beaters, and those who are most outspoken against any publicity generally have the very obvious reason of wanting to conceal something themselves.

Mr. Chairman, the many abuses which the House has been told exist are but a drop in the bucket. From the work of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations during the past few months I know how evasions and frauds have been practiced upon the Government. Knowing this, I most heartily hope that this resolution, as amended, will be passed, and I also hope that at an early date we may bring about an elimination of the refunds that took place from 1920 to 1930, when nearly $2,000,000,000 was refunded upon technicalities during the Republican administrations.

The House cannot be blamed for the existence of loopholes. We all know that no matter how capably and carefully we legislate—and I can honestly say that Congress today legislates as intelligently as any Congress of which I have been a Member in 30 years—I repeat, no matter how carefully we legislate, paid experts will, within a short time, find a way to circumvent it.

I believe that this resolution, with the present amendment and those to follow, will give the joint committee, or its subcommittee, sufficient power to make a thorough investigation into this most despicable practice.

It was feared that the original resolution gave the Treasury Department too much power, but I am satisfied myself that there are as many capable men in that Department as in any department of the Government. I am sure they will render valuable assistance to the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to take this means of calling the attention of the House to the fact that some of these men who really have been avoiding the payment of taxes seem to take a lot of gratification from the fact we did not pass a law sufficiently strong to catch them. If Mr. Morgan is correctly quoted in the morning papers, he states he is willing to be caught if the Congress is smart enough to do it. [Applause.]

It is not possible for this Congress to legislate on any subject without making some mistakes, but as soon as we find out about these mistakes, it ought to be the duty of the Congress to rectify them.

I have every confidence in the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I know of no man in this House whom I would more willingly follow on any matter of legislation than the chairman of this committee, my venerable friend from North Carolina, but I want you to make sure that under the resolution as it appears for passage, you have made ample provision to correct the wrongs that have crept into the system. Only through opposition to this amendment could I ask the chairman whether he is satisfied that the provision now before this body will correct the wrongs that have crept into the system we adopted at the last session. If the gentleman is satisfied that this will be accomplished and that these men cannot sit back and say, "Catch us if you can, but you do not know enough to do it", then I am satisfied.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will say to my colleague and friend, as far as this resolution is concerned, I see no difference from the other, in effect—that is, in what may be accomplished with this resolution, as amended, or with the original resolution. There has been a change in phraseology or terminology, and if that is more satisfactory to the Committee on Rules, then that is entirely satisfactory to me. We worked together and reached a mutually satisfactory understanding. The resolution was drawn by our drafting experts. All we wanted was something with which to proceed, without restriction or limitation and with which to accomplish the objectives we have in mind.

Further, I express to my friend from North Dakota my appreciation of the compliment he paid me, and say in return that I have the highest regard for the gentleman and his integrity and ability, and I am quite sure that the joint committee—and I do not know that I shall be a member of it—would be glad to have his suggestions or anything that he may desire to contribute to its success. I am sure the joint committee would be pleased to have any suggestion he may care to make in regard to its work.

Mr. BURDICK. I have it in mind that when we struck out the language of the original bill this committee would then not have the right to make public certain information, and I thought when the gentleman's committee struck that language out he was injuring the bill, because there is nothing so valuable in correcting evasions as to make the matter public.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is not stricken out. That was stricken out in the bill as presented, but the amendment that I now present provides that the joint committee can still give out the information to the public, but the joint committee must act in each instance as to each taxpayer before the information is given out.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied with the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and also with the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and I trust that within a reasonably short time this committee which we are now creating will make a report to this body, indicating the character of the tax evasions and also recommend appropriate legislative action. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer. I hope the gentleman will grant a little more time.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I amend the request and make it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or the chairman of the Committee on Rules. I notice that the first committee amendment on page 3, line 8, provides "that at a public hearing or otherwise as the joint committee or a subcommittee thereof, consisting of two or more members, may determine." Does the gentleman mean by that that two members of this committee can call for a public hearing?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not believe the gentleman wants that.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The joint committee would authorize a subcommittee as to whether or not this subcommittee could go out and hold public hearings, but to meet the question as to whether or not a representative of the Treasury Department could testify at a public hearing—a public hearing meaning that it immediately becomes public property—a subcommittee of not less than two members could so determine.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Suppose this committee would send two members to Chicago to have a hearing and the understanding was when they started that they were going to hear certain witnesses who had been subpenaed, and that they would be heard in private, but when they got there it might develop that it would be highly desirable to have a public hearing. They surely would not have authority to call a public hearing, would they?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is nothing here to prevent it, but of course the joint committee ought to watch that situation carefully.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will read the proposed amendment in connection with the whole paragraph he will observe its application:

The Secretary of the Treasury and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the joint committee—

And there is where the language comes in—

at a public hearing or otherwise as a joint committee or subcommittee thereof may determine, with any data of any character contained in or shown by return of income, estate, or gift tax.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman understands the point that I have raised. Is the gentleman entirely satisfied there will not be any danger in that respect?

Mr. COOPER. Oh, yes; because, after all, the joint committee is the one that is to control the question that the gentleman has asked.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I want to say this. In the absence of specific instructions from the joint committee my understanding of this language is that the subcommittee could hold public hearings or have hearings in executive session in its discretion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think that would be rather dangerous?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I do not. If the joint committee does not want to lodge that discretion in them, then they would say it would be an executive hearing. The point discussed with the Rules Committee in section 5, in regard to an investigator—that is the agent that goes out and makes the investigation—was that he ought not to hold a public hearing.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. He should have no authority except what the committee would give him, and they should give him no such authority as that.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. There might be a subcommittee of five, so we say in the bill "not less than two members." Consequently I think the subcommittee should have that discretion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman one other question. I believe if the House and the country have the idea that this committee is going to work immediately, it would relieve the anxiety of some who think we should have legislation at once. Does the gentleman have an idea that this committee would wait until September, or would it go to work immediately?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The gentleman knows the President's motto. It is "Action, and action now."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And that is what the committee takes that to mean? Is that correct?

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to this program, but I doubt very much that it will produce any results. The whole program springs from the President's message read to us a few days ago. There was not much new about it, for it was a matter of current information that the revenues from the tax collections were many hundreds of millions short of what the President's advisors had guessed. The President thought this was a good time to advance some kind of a program to take the spotlight off of the weakened condition of the Treasury. There is no real reason for the appointment of this committee. In fact, it is a clear invasion of the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee and the House, for the Constitution clearly reposes in the House of Representatives the power to initiate legislation for the raising of revenue. The Senate is not given this power, and to appoint a committee, half Congressmen and half Senators, is clearly a departure, and I doubt its legality. However, I am not objecting to that, but I am opposed to giving this committee the authority to select investigators and give them the authority to go out and hold hearings and give them the right to compel the attendance before them of taxpayers without any notice except a subpena, and to compel the production of all books, papers, and documents. This is going too far to give this authority indiscriminately to these men. This privilege should not be granted to a single member of the committee to act by himself, and especially it should not be granted to a clerk or a sleuth or snooper. There is some justification in giving it to a Congressman, who is an elected official, beholden as much to the taxpayer as to the Government, but a man from the department or some sleuth appointed and paid for investigating some individual against whom he may have a long-standing grievance might easily work a terrible unfairness toward a taxpayer. That is an improper granting of power. I think a better plan than that proposed in this resolution would be for the Ways and Means Committee to take the matter up at once and do all this investigating in a fair, open, and honest way.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when I asked the questions of the distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts and Minnesota relative to whether or not they believed that publicity was a good thing and would deter tax evasionists from so dodging their obligations I did not know that the Rules Committee was going to propose an amendment which would practically reinstate the bill as it was sent to the House, presumably by the President of the United States.

I want to say to the Committee on Rules that they are to be congratulated upon amending this bill in such fashion that the Committee on Ways and Means may give to the world knowledge of who is evading an honest obligation. I believe with the President of the United States when he says—regardless of what J. P. Morgan says—that it is immoral, though it may not be illegal, for a man to avoid his honest obligation to the Government of the United States, which furnishes him every protection in every way and furnishes him the finest school system in the world for his children. I say to you this afternoon in adopting a bill which will give publicity to the men who are seeking to avoid paying their honest taxes for the support of this Government, we are writing history. We are writing history that our people will be proud of. I voted to repeal the law which furnished racketeers an opportunity of scattering throughout the country what was known as the "sucker list"; but this is a different list than that.

The sucker is on the other end here, and it is the United States Government, made so by these people avoiding and evading by dishonesty their true debts. This bill is for the purpose of finding this kind of taxpayer. When you give publicity to the world with regard to the man who is seeking to practice such trickery, you will deter even such a man from exposing himself, his family, and his children to the iniquity of not doing the honest and decent thing by this Government.

I certainly hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. In our direct taxes on real estate the rolls are open to everybody.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; certainly. I thank the gentleman for this contribution.

Mr. COLDEN. Is that not one of the best protections in the world against unjust taxes and also the avoidance of taxes?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Absolutely. Any man can go to the tax rolls in any county in the United States and see what the people are paying on their homes, upon their personal and real property, and that is the way it should be. We are all interested in these great incomes of these people. We are interested in the people who draw down $150,000 to $250,000 a year. The American people, the common man, is interested, because we know we are reaching the point of concentration of wealth. We know that the only means of distributing wealth in this country and putting it back where it belongs is by the route of taxation.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. Is the gentleman aware that a Congressman cannot learn anything at all about income taxes?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Absolutely, unless he gets it indirectly.

Mr. KELLER. You cannot get it then.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. My understanding is that the law is still intact—that where a stockholder of a corporation, if he owns a certain percentage of the stock, may find out what the officers of the corporation have drawn, provided it is over $20,000 and he might tell it.

Mr. KELLER. But a Congressman cannot learn anything about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KELLER. We tie our hands like a set of children.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Three gentlemen were on their feet seeking recognition at the time debate was limited.

The Chair will recognize those gentlemen insofar as possible. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] is recognized for 3⅓ minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: In line 10 of the amendment, strike out the words "have the right to"; and beginning with line 11, strike down through the word "committee", in line 14, so that the last sentence of the amendment shall read "the joint committee but no subcommittee or member of the joint committee shall make public any such information, but this sentence shall not apply to information made public through the medium of a public hearing as provided in paragraph 1 of this subsection."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I have hurriedly prepared this amendment. What I believe the amendment will accomplish is to make all these hearings public. I think all this information, if we hope to get any good from it, ought to be open to the public.

We have heard a great deal here today about how the right of these tax-dodgers ought to be protected. No honest man fears the light, and the crooks ought to have plenty of it. Let me call the attention of the Members of the House to this, something that is going to come back to the attention of each of us sooner or later: The past several sessions of Congress have marched back down the hill and repealed almost all chances of anyone receiving any information concerning income-tax returns. When you pay your State, county, city, or school tax in your home district and State they are open to the public, and nothing but good has resulted from such publicity—in fact, I doubt if our people back home would permit this information to be kept secret. Why should not the Federal taxes be open also? This proposition allows the joint committee appointed from the tax committees under this resolution to hold these hearings secretly. This amendment allows them to be kept secret except what the committee wants to let be made public. I think that these hearings ought all to be public so that everybody can be heard and so everybody will know what is going on, and so that the press can keep the Nation informed as to what is really going on and what the records show.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I want to point out a matter to the gentleman. He has offered an amendment to the amendment which I submitted. The amendment of this subsection 3 does not apply to public hearings at all. It applies to information which the joint committee gets other than at public hearings, which it gets at executive hearings or from investigators; so, when the gentleman strikes this out and directs that it be made public, he is not talking about hearings at all.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then, I shall rewrite the amendment and offer it at the proper place so as to permit full publicity at open hearings. I was dealing directly with the public hearings, because I think this whole thing ought to be public.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If the gentleman were to say that the joint committee should always meet in public hearing they probably would not get started within 20 years because most of their work is going to be in executive sessions.

Mr. McFARLANE. Answering the gentleman, I would say that right at the present time the Treasury Department and a great many Members at least of the Ways and Means Committee have knowledge now of the existing loopholes, and the President in his message called our attention to many loopholes. Certainly this information is available and certainly it ought to be given to the public; and certainly plenty of information is available now by just reading the recent tax bills to show where these loopholes are. If anybody is wronged these tax dodgers have their opportunity to come forward and defend themselves. I can see no wrong. I can see only improvement. I would have these hearings public. What would have happened if the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, Senator BLACK's utility hearings, Senator LA FOLLETTE's civil liberties committee, and other committees of the Senate had held their hearings in secret, had held them behind closed doors? I know and you know that it is because they had open hearings, aboveboard hearings, out where the public could get the benefit of it and the press could carry it, so that the people of the country were informed as to what was going on, that good resulted; and that is the only way we are ever going to reach these tax dodgers. This is the only way we are ever going to clean up this mess and stop up the existing loopholes in our revenue laws. I believe each and every Member of the House knows that this is true. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the Members that in this bill we are executing a complete turn-about on the policy of the House as expressed in appropriation bills recently passed, where we adopted amendments that would deny to congressional investigating committees the right to use the facilities and the employees of the executive departments. You will recall that a few months ago there was a great deal of smoke, fire, debate, and excitement over congressional committees using the facilities and personnel of the executive departments to help them out. You will remember the amendments that were adopted. I merely wanted to point out that this bill today is a reversal of the policy that the House then established when it passed amendments forbidding investigating committees to use Government personnel.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think that this is a step in the right direction; that they should have that right?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am happy that the reversal has occurred but sorry that it took tax evaders to bring it about, but it does prove that some good may come from even bad actors like the tax dodgers. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this resolution did no more than point out to the distinguished members of the Ways and Means Committee the fact that our net-income tax laws are outmoded it will have accomplished wonderful results. We have a tax structure that has been so patched up, so tinkered, bolstered, tied, wired, repaired, and so amended that no sane man today can remain sane after working out the average income-tax blank and studying the law to try to find out what he owes the Government each year. I know a man who had an employee of the Treasury Department make out his income-tax return. He sent the return to another city with his check. An employee of the income-tax department in that other city said it was wrong and that it had to be refigured and a different amount of tax paid. The Government employees themselves, charged with examining these income-tax returns, cannot agree on what the taxpayer owes nor what the law means. No wonder, then, the taxpayer becomes a candidate for a padded cell after each appearance of March 15 on the calendar.

What we need in this country is a gross-income-tax law that will tax a man or corporation on what he takes in and not what he can hide from the collector by trick deductions. Evasion is always possible under the present complicated tax laws. The Ways and Means Committee, in spite of the brilliant men who compose the membership of that committee, will never be able to draft a net-income-tax law that will not be full of loopholes. When we get a gross-income-tax law, such as the gross-income-tax laws now applied in several States, we will stop the tax dodgers. I hope if this resolution does nothing else it will convince the distinguished and able lawyers, the accountants, and the experienced legislators connected with the Ways and Means Committee that the way to stop the tax dodger is to junk our antiquated net-income-tax system and install a new one based on taxation of gross incomes.

I know one instance alone where a firm paid the Government less money for taxes than the fees paid to accountants and lawyers for figuring out their income-tax report. In that instance, as in scores of other instances, the lawyers and accountants make more than the Federal Government from our complicated and obsolete methods of levying taxes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee and the Rules Committee to the context of this resolution. Neither the Senate nor the House are courts for the purpose of meting out punishment for contempt. This resolution has a paragraph on that subject. It will be remembered that during the administration of President Grant the Sergeant at Arms of the House was sued for $100,000 by a witness arrested under an insufficient resolution and, after long and tedious litigation, a big verdict rendered against the Sergeant at Arms because the resolution did not refer to pending or proposed legislation, and his apprehension of the witness was by virtue of void process because the resolution of investigation was void, since it did not refer to present or pending legislation.

In the case of United States against Sinclair the issue involved in the Supreme Court was whether or not the language of the resolution refered to or related to proposed or pending legislation.

In lines 13 and 14, page 2, the reference is indirectly made to legislation, and the implication may be urged that the language might relate to legislation where the paragraph reads:

* * * The committee's recommendations as to remedies for the evils disclosed by the investigation.

I do not believe that we can necessarily imply that that language relates to legislation. It might relate to a criminal prosecution.

I call this to the attention of the members of the Rules Committee, because it may be that certain of these witnesses who may be needed for this investigation might decide not to obey the summons and we may have to enforce the process of the law against them. Unless this resolution relates to either proposed or pending legislation, this committee as created by the resolution would not have judicial power to bring them.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman have any doubt that the language appearing at the end of section 2 would clearly cover that point?

Mr. DISNEY. I do.

Mr. COOPER. It refers to recommendations and remedies. What remedies could possibly be provided other than by legislation?

Mr. DISNEY. What you suggest might be implied, but is not a necessary implication. A criminal prosecution or other remedy could be implied rather than legislation. It seems to me that the safer process would be to say what we mean. We are going to propose legislation. Why not say so?

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. Would not a criminal prosecution necessarily be dependent upon legislation hereafter to be enacted?

Mr. DISNEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I may say that point was never called to our attention before, and I hope the resolution is not defective in that respect.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That law was amended a year ago and witnesses who are subpenaed but who fail to appear are subject to prosecution for a misdemeanor.

Mr. DISNEY. That is not the point.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute to answer the question propounded to me by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, the point is that the Congress is not a court. The committees created by the Congress are not courts, and do not have judicial powers, unless the resolutions under which they are created and operate make reference to pending or proposed legislation. I do not think it ought to be done by indirection or implication, no matter how potent the implication may be implied from the language used. It ought to refer to the legislation proposed—by definite language to that effect.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I want to know what the committee proposes to do about the biggest loophole there is, and that is tax-exempt bonds. The President of the United States in a message 2 or 3 years ago recommended that that loophole be stopped up. The responsibility for that is not in J. P. Morgan. It is in the Congress of the United States. I want to know when we are going to give attention to the biggest loophole of all, the tax-exempt bonds and securities.

Mr. DISNEY. I am not a member of the joint committee proposed. However, I am in accord with what the gentleman says, and I am earnest in the opinion that we ought to go directly into that subject.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the Chair inform me whether or not the amendment on page 3, line 8, reading as follows, has been agreed to?—

At a public hearing or otherwise, as the joint committee, or a subcommittee thereof consisting of two or more members, may determine.

Has that amendment been agreed to by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to which the gentleman refers has been agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it open to further amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been agreed to and it is not open to further amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is now permanently a part of the resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. TREADWAY. The reason I raised the parliamentary question, Mr. Chairman, is to secure a little further explanation of the second line reading "A subcommittee thereof, consisting of two or more members, may determine." In other words, a subcommittee of two could make public the information obtained at a hearing without referring the matter back to the full committee. Is that the Chair's interpretation?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to which the gentleman refers has been agreed to. The language of the amendment is clear. If any explanation of the amendment is desired by the gentleman, the Chair suggests that the matter may be cleared up by the chairman of the Rules Committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, is the paragraph subject to further amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is subject to further amendment, but all time has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE to the committee amendment: In the last line of the amendment, after the word "subsection", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That all hearings held by this committee at which testimony is heard or evidence submitted shall be public."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE) there were—ayes 32, noes 98.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power tc employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government and of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] in connection with the reference to the loopholes in our laws, something recurred to my mind which I thought might be of interest to the Committee. I approached the Chair for the purpose of getting just a moment in which to tell a little story of history, but this was impossible, which is why I have moved to strike out the last word at this time.

We are all familiar with the spectacle of a couple of years ago when a certain Mr. Morgan, who has been referred to in the debate this afternoon, said the reason he paid an income tax to Great Britain and none to our own country in the year 1932 was because our laws were different. Verily, there must have been loopholes.

However, this discussion brought to my mind a scene in Washington some years ago, when another Mr. Morgan, who preceded this particular individual—I refer to the same Mr. Morgan, who, one time played solitaire in the Lafayette Hotel while John G. Carlisle paid out the gold and President Grover Cleveland was forced to his knees and compelled to issue bonds to restore gold to the Federal Treasury—appeared before a senatorial investigation more than a score of years ago in this city, and was thereupon questioned as to whether or not he believed the late distinguished Elihu Root was a good lawyer. The answer of the elder Morgan was:

He is verily a good lawyer, because he not only shows me how the laws were written, but how to slip through their loopholes without getting caught.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill which will provide us with the facts concerning income-tax evasions by a few hundred individuals of extreme wealth.

It is important that we spend carefully and wisely and eliminate all unnecessary expenditures, but if we are to maintain government we must protect the revenue of the Government against tax evasions, and I want to add, also, against unjust exemptions.

INCOME-TAX EVASIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

We do not often stop to think of the benefits which the Government confers upon us every day. We do not realize that without Government, without the order which it creates and maintains, and the protection that it affords, industrial, commercial, or social activities of any kind would be impossible. From the earliest days, men banded themselves together for common protection and thus gradually developed the state for the protection of their lives and their property against foreign and domestic enemies.

Government and its manifold activities have become the basis upon which our business, our industrial, and our social life depend.

Without the protection provided by the Government and the facilities which it offers us in our daily lives, we could not engage in manufacture, in commerce, or in any other activities; we could not carry on our normal life at home, in the factory, or in business. We cannot have a government unless we pay taxes to support it.

TREASURY SHOCKED INTO INVESTIGATIONS

The income-tax collections of March of this year were so far short of estimates that they shocked the Treasury Department into action.

A quiet and hurried investigation was made to determine the cause of the deficiency. The results of this preliminary investigation were disclosed by a message sent by the President to the Congress a few days ago. This message and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury attached to it contains astounding disclosures of evasion of our income-tax laws by a few multimillionaires.

It is important that taxes are levied justly and fairly according to ability to pay, so that everyone contributes to the support of the Government according to his means and ability.

RESULTS OF TAX EVASION

The failure of one to pay his just share of taxes, necessarily increases the tax of all others. By evading the payment of his share of the taxes, a tax shirker shifts his tax obligation to the shoulders of his fellow citizens.

Five and one-half million people filed income-tax returns last March. The great majority of them consisted of salaried men, of storekeepers, and of other taxpayers of modest income. They do not shirk their duty. They pay the taxes due by them according to the laws of the land. But a few extremely wealthy individuals have resorted to every trick and every device which their lawyers could conceive to avoid the payment of taxes justly due by them.

Let me cite to you just a few of the examples given by the President in his message to Congress.

A favored device of these tax dodgers is the setting up of personal holding companies in foreign countries that have lax corporation laws. For instance, American taxpayers formed 64 such companies in the Bahamas alone in 1925 and 1926, and 22 more companies were organized during the last 2 months. One American citizen formed a $3,000,000 company in the Bahamas to avoid paying income taxes to Uncle Sam or anyone else.

Another American of great wealth filed a personal income-tax return for 1936 showing a net loss. When the Bureau investigated it found that he had formed a personal holding company in Canada to which he had transferred his assets. During 1936 this holding company received one and one-half million dollars in dividends from American corporations alone.

Perhaps the most revolting case is that of a retired American Army officer with a tremendous income from American securities. This man wants to sell these securities at a great profit without paying the tax on such profits. To escape this tax and our income- and inheritance-tax laws he resigned his American citizenship, became a naturalized Canadian citizen, and 6 days later he organized six corporations in the Bahamas to sell his securities.

Another American millionaire organized no less than 96 personal holding companies all over the country so as to make it difficult, if not impossible, for the Treasury Department to follow his complicated financial transactions.

Some of our multimillionaires have incorporated their yachts and their landed estates so that they can deduct the expenses for their upkeep from their incomes and escape a tax thereon.

I could cite to you more schemes of income-tax avoidance and evasion which have been devised by high-priced lawyers for multimillionaires.

ORDINARY CITIZENS PAY INCOME TAXES

Let me remind you that the ordinary citizen is not involved in these tax schemes. The millions of American citizens who have taxable incomes, large or small, pay their taxes without subterfuge or evasion. But a few hundred multimillionaires are endeavoring to avoid the tax payments which are justly due from them according to the laws of this Nation and to shift their tax onto the millions of honest and good Americans.

Evasion of the large amount of taxes due by these few imposes a hardship on every one else.

Our Government cannot permit this condition to continue. We must plug these loopholes and nullify these pretty schemes, even if Congress has to be in session all summer and winter. Such action is necessary in the interest of the millions of hard-working Americans, whether their incomes be large or small, who honestly meet the tax payments imposed upon them.

Every citizen has a personal interest in the payment of all taxes justly due by all other citizens because that is the only way in which he can be assured that he himself will be called upon to pay only his just share and no more.

Respect for and observance of law is necessary for the preservation of the Union. It is a curious spectacle that those who scheme and connive to violate the tax laws have been especially loud in preaching observance of other laws. Disobedience to one law breeds disrespect for another law. Compliance with the tax laws is as necessary as compliance with the laws guaranteeing protection of person and of property.

All laws stand on an equal footing and all laws must be observed.

UNJUSTIFIED TAX EXEMPTION

I cannot, with propriety, discuss tax evasion without at the same time discussing tax exemption. Taxes should be laid upon every citizen according to his ability to pay. It is as unjust to exempt large groups of persons or specific kinds of property from taxes as to evade the payment of taxes legally assessed.

For many years the United States has been collecting income taxes when suddenly, in 1891, the Supreme Court of the United States, by a 5-to-4 decision, decided that income taxes were a violation of the Constitution of the United States. It took until 1913 to pass the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, and thus to overcome this decision and to authorize income taxes. The sixteenth amendment reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived * * *.

THE SUPREME COURT RESTRICTS THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

This amendment seems to be as clear and as broad as human language can possibly make it. It says that "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived * * *." In spite of this explicit language, the Supreme Court held that the Congress could not collect taxes on incomes derived from municipal or State bonds.

Thus the Court, contrary to the plain language of the amendment, nullified the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution as far as the holders of municipal and State bonds are concerned. Then, because Federal bonds could not be sold at their value if they were inferior to municipal or State bonds, they also were made exempt from taxation. Fifty-eight billion dollars of municipal, State, and Federal bonds have thus been exempted from all income-tax payments. Fifty-eight billion dollars!

Due to the ruling of the Supreme Court the holders of these $58,000,000,000 of bonds do not contribute to the upkeep of the Federal Government—a Government whose very existence is necessary in order to protect the value of these bonds.

We cannot have a sound system of Federal taxation until the income on these bonds is made to pay its proper share of taxes like every other income. The exemption of these $58,000,000,000 worth of bonds from income taxes is like a cancer which eats into the body politic. This cancer must be removed. It must be cut out from the political and economic body or else the whole body will become infested with the same disease.

THE SUPREME COURT CONTINUES TO WHITTLE DOWN THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

But that is not all. By a line of decisions, the last of which was rendered this year by a divided Supreme Court, 5,000,000 State officers and State and local employees have been made exempt from the payment of the Federal income taxes. We should remember that most of these employees would not have to pay any Federal income tax, because incomes of married persons under $2,500 are exempt. An additional exemption of $400 is added for each child and dependent. The principle, however, which sets aside local or State employees as a privileged class, as a class free from income-tax payments, is utterly wrong. Public employees should pay income taxes in the same proportion and in the same manner as all other employees. There is no reason why a State, a county, a city, or any municipal employee should be exempt from the payment of income taxes if his income is sufficient to put him in the taxable class.

In order to correct a misconception which is widely held, let me state here that all Federal employees, except Federal judges, pay the regular income tax on the salary which they receive from the Federal Government. The President of the United States himself, United States Senators, Congressmen, and all employees of the executive and legislative departments pay their regular income tax like every other citizen. The only Federal employees who do not pay income taxes are Federal judges and that is due to an astonishing decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Directly contrary to the plain language of the sixteenth amendment, the Supreme Court held that the salaries of Federal judges are exempt from the payment of a Federal income tax.

It is important that taxes be levied justly and equitably. It is important that they be fairly administered and it is vital that all money received from taxes be prudently spent.

Realizing how difficult it is for our people to pay the taxes, the Government should be thrifty and should cut its expenditures as much as possible. Outgo should be balanced with income, and justice and equity should prevail in the interpretation as well as in the administration of our tax laws.

It is the purpose of our Government to relieve suffering and want and to protect and help the weak and to watch over the lives and safety of the persons and property of the American people.

To perform that function, proper taxes must be collected. Let us eliminate the tax chiseler, but let us also eliminate useless expenditures and unjust tax exemptions.

I hope that the House will pass this bill. Let us eliminate income-tax evasions and unjust exemptions.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The joint committee may authorize any one or more officers or employees of the Treasury Department to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony, as the committee may authorize. In any such case subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 5.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee amendment be voted down, so that I may offer a substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, strike out lines 13 to 23, inclusive, and insert the following:

"SEC. 5. The joint committee may authorize any one or more persons to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony, as the committee may authorize, but nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing a public hearing. In any such case subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 4 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER: Page 4, line 12, after the word "taxation", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That all Members of Congress shall have free access to all hearings under this act whether held by the full committee or subcommittees thereof, and shall have free access to all records made under the operation of this act."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane to the section to which it is offered or to the bill.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman, if that is the argument that is going to be presented, unless the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but will be pleased to hear the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. If the Chair is ready to rule, I am ready to listen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair is of the opinion that section 4 deals with the question of employment and the fixing of compensation of officers, experts, and employees, and has no reference whatever to Members of Congress, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment as a new section following section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLER, as a new section to appear after section 5: "Provided, That all Members of Congress shall have free access to all hearings under this act whether held by the full committee or subcommittees thereof, and shall have free access to all records made under the operation of this act."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I have not been very long in Congress, but I have been here long enough to know that the Members of this body have very great difficulty in getting any information about the income tax, or the people who are paying it, or the conditions under which it is paid. If you think you can get such information, you should try it a few times, and you will be a great deal wiser than you are now.

The truth of the matter is that this Congress, in my judgment, made a great mistake when it took from itself, by its own vote, the right to have free access to all information on this subject. I understand perfectly well the arguments made against general publicity; but if we are going to deny ourselves, as Members of Congress, the right to attend the hearings on this tax-dodging investigation and to know something about them, I want to see you go on record in that way. I want to know whether you are going to sit here and, if you do not want to go, deny any other Congressman the right to go. I want to go myself, because by going I can learn something that I have never been able to learn before, even after a great amount of research on the subject.

I want to announce now that I am going to offer an address on this subject of income-tax dodging that I delivered on the 16th day of July 1932 here in this House. I presented to this body an address in which I set out completely and entirely all of the methods of cheating the American people through return of income tax that have been submitted to the President by the Secretary of the Treasury just a few days ago. You will find it in the RECORD of the 16th day of July 1932, beginning on page 15743, and I shall present to this body and offer for reinsertion in the RECORD an address showing the whole thing, not only repeating the speech I made then but quoting the resolutions showing the dates, so that the people can see there is nothing new that has been submitted and that no amendment to the tax law calculated to prevent this cheating has ever been adopted.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Wait until I get done, and then I will be very pleased to yield.

I therefore am presenting this amendment to this pending joint resolution permitting the Members of Congress to attend these hearings and have access to the records so that the Members of this body can inform themselves and know what we are going to vote on finally when we come to vote on the amendment which will be intended to stop cheating and swindling and dodging of taxes due the people. If you want to know, this is your opportunity, and if you do not want to know, you ought to say you do not by your vote; and now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I recall the very great address of the gentleman, and I remember he clearly demonstrated in that wonderful speech his ability to advise the House in regard to matters of this character. But does not the gentleman think that the adoption of his amendment might create an awkward situation whereby the joint committee——

Mr. KELLER. Pardon me, please, but I do not think so, and I am going to call attention in my speech that I am offering to this body the fact that I had the pleasure of introducing the original resolution which actually resulted in the great investigation by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, showing the frauds through the stock exchanges of this country. And I am going to show every bit of that in the RECORD, not from my words but from the record itself. I had the pleasure of attending many of those public hearings before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and learning a great deal. Any man here who wants to know about the income tax will learn more in one hearing before either the full committee or the subcommittee than he will get in 5 years sitting down around here listening to somebody else telling him about it. I want to know whether you want to help do that or whether you do not.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to my young friend.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does the gentleman believe that information with respect to these hearings, even though private, being held by the joint committee of Congress, would be denied to a Member of Congress?

Mr. KELLER. Of course they will deny it to you, young man, and when your hair is as white as mine you will know that. That is the full intention of this bill as finally amended—to deny information to this body which I regard as absolutely essential to Members.

Mr. Chairman, in closing this address permit me to summarize the actual results of the income-tax dodging. In my address of July 16, 1932, I called attention to the fact that accountants in touch with the tax dodging carried on through Canadian corporations alone had averaged $250,000,000 a year over the 10-year period prior to that date, or two and a half billions in the 10-year period out of which the American people had been cheated and chiseled. In view of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the same subject nearly 5 years later, as quoted in the President's message, it is perfectly evident this system has been followed on an ever-increasing scale during these intervening 5 years. It is apparent that during this last 5-year period at least another two and a half billions has been taken away from the American people. If we now had this five billions justly due there would be no necessity for scrimping and pinching to carry through the next winter.

Tax dodgers must be brought to book and made to pay their full part of carrying on the Government under whose protection they are permitted to pile up their fortunes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] is as bad, if not worse, than the previous publicity provisions that we have deliberately gotten rid of. The distinguished philosopher proposes that all of these returns and all of this information and all the data gathered by the joint committee, which is going to be available to the Committee on Ways and Means, shall be open to every Member of this House. I do not know why the gentleman does not include members of the State legislatures, who are just as much interested in the tax situation throughout the country. I do not know why the gentleman does not go the "whole hog" and include everybody in Washington, and all the citizens of the United States. If I did believe in the widest publicity of everybody's personal affairs as does the gentleman from Illinois, this proposal is something that I should never want to have within my province as a Member of this body, because once the joint committee examined a taxpayer in New York, for instance, all his competitors in business are going to ask me or some other Congressman to come down here and get the low-down on him and his return, and every Congressman is going to be buttonholed by constituents to get such information for somebody else so that they can check up on what this man or that man made in his business or claimed for his deductions. Why, Mr. Chairman, that would be the greatest headache that Congress ever imposed upon itself, to suggest that we be nothing more than errand boys for every taxpayer in the country trying to find out what another taxpayer has paid or how much he has deducted. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Texas. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York to present a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, it is a little hard for me to understand why a little publicity is a dangerous thing. It is a little hard for me to understand why it is all right for the Ways and Means Committee to be able to control whatever information is available on these tax dodgers, and that you, as an individual Member of Congress, are willing to sit here and tie your hands and give them exclusive right to have this control over you so. And should you do this, how can you go back and tell your constituents that you are able to represent your district? Why should the Congress tie their hands and prohibit themselves from reviewing any of this information and turn this over entirely to the Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee? Why should not Members of Congress, charged with the responsibility of passing legislation on this important question, have all the information available to them, so that they can at least vote intelligently on this matter if and when the committee makes its report?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York rose.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am sorry, but I cannot yield. You have said by your vote that you do not want to hold public hearings so that the public can know who the tax dodgers are and how much they are beating the Government in taxes. Are you willing to go further and say that you, as a Member of Congress, are going to tie your own hands so that you personally cannot have this information and that it will not be available to you? I know that they are going to say to you that this information is available to you if you go to the Committee on Ways and Means and tell them what you want, and if and when they get ready they will let you have it. I tried that, but I did not get the information. And I have tried the Treasury Department and they refuse Members of Congress information. You all know you have to go through the Ways and Means Committee to get any tax information. If you want any information from the Revenue Department, you must secure it through the Ways and Means Committee. When this committee brought in legislation requesting this power, I and others opposed it, but it was passed and now we see where all this secrecy and concentration of power has gotten us. The President has to turn on heat to close some of the many loopholes accumulating in our tax laws. You are just a Member of Congress, yes; but you are an office boy in many different ways, and if we sit here and continue to tie our hands, how are we going to find out who these tax dodgers are and how are we going to be able to vote intelligently on the question of stopping up the loopholes?

Mr. O'MALLEY. We had evidence of a resurgence of independence here this afternoon, when it came to protecting these tax dodgers. Now we might hark back and get a further resurgence of independence when it comes to learning something about these things before we vote on this bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Every officer of the Army and the Navy pays no income tax; he does not have to pay any taxes. He gets by because the Court of Claims down here says that he can. All of our constitutional judges pay no taxes. More than 5,000 of your State, county, and municipal employees pay no taxes. I could go on with this naming the loopholes ad infinitum. More than half your tax-exempt bonds are owned by a handful of bankers, and they pay no taxes. Yet your joint tax committee has recommended that they should be taxed, but our tax committees do not tax them.

How far are we going with this? When are we going to start to correct these loopholes? If we do not have this information, how are we going to get it?

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am sorry, but I have not the time. I am sorry, but I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FRED M. VINSON) there were ayes 64 and noes 105.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. KELLER and Mr. O'CONNOR of New York to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 56 and noes 111.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. All authority conferred by this joint resolution shall expire on February 1, 1938.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 24, strike out "6" and insert "5."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee amendment be voted down, because this is now section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 155, to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance; and, pursuant to House Resolution 226, he reported the resolution back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the committee amendment on page 3, striking out a part of lines 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. If a separate vote is not demanded on any amendment, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recommit the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, together with the conference papers, to the conference committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to recommit the conference report on the bill H. R. 6551 to the committee of conference.

Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, what is this request?

Mr. CONNERY. This is on the conference report on the Civilian Conservation Corps bill. I made a gentleman's agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] with reference to trying to get a separate vote on the items which the House had insisted on when we took up the original C. C. C. bill. The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause, and when we made our conference report we could not figure any parliamentary way, without voting it up or down, to get a separate vote. In view of that gentleman's agreement, I worked out with the Parliamentarian a scheme by which, if we can recommit this conference report, we can go back to the Senate and bring in another conference report which will permit a separate vote on each of these items.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman says the minority leader requested that?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I made a gentleman's agreement with him on the floor on the day the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. PETTENGILL and Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on a subject pertaining to international fisheries, and I also ask unanimous consent to include therein an article written by a member of the International Fish Commission. It will take about half a page of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by me to Secretary of State Hull with reference to an arms embargo against Italy and Germany.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

(Mr. COFFEE of Washington and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered on the floor of the House on the 16th day of July 1932 and all resolutions in relation thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENT WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members who have textile mills in their districts, those who have tanneries in their districts, and those who have boot and shoe factories in their districts will join with me in making a protest against a lowered tariff which we fear will become a reality under the proposed reciprocal-trade agreement with Czechoslovakia. I hope to have a meeting of all those interested in this industry early next week. Let us remember that in union there is strength. Let us remember also that if we lower these duties additional thousands of idle workers will be walking the streets.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I have already protested to the Tariff Commission against this. Six million pairs of shoes were imported at the port of New York alone before we passed the Tariff Act.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; and the situation might be a great deal worse if the tariff should be lowered on boot and shoe leather and textiles under a reciprocal-trade agreement with Czechoslovakia. Our cotton mills also are jeopardized and our tanneries are jeopardized. The gentleman from Massachusetts will remember the tremendous battle we had to secure protection for boots and shoes, leather, and textiles 8 years ago. We will continue to fight for their protection and protect the wages of thousands of workers.

SERVICES OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, several days ago the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] made certain remarks with reference to the services of the United States marshal and his deputies. I have a constituent who served the public for some 40 years and he is now serving as United States marshal in the District of Columbia. He has submitted a short statement here in answer to some of the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement of James S. McCarthy, who is now serving in the United States district courts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this?

Mr. DOXEY. I conferred with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] in regard to this matter, or I would not have asked unanimous consent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say I have read this article and think it is substantially true, although very critical of my attitude on this matter. I understand the whole thing is to be settled in the conference report on the State, Commerce, and Labor bill. Therefore I can see no harm in the statement of the gentleman going into the RECORD, and I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

In an article, "From the Record", published in the News on the 22d instant, there was an attack by Representative WOLCOTT, Republican, of Michigan, on deputy United States marshals in the district courts of the United States, with special reference to those employed in the District of Columbia, I assume, which is so unfair, unjust, and so far from the facts that I feel called upon to reply to it, believing that a newspaper so fair as the News always is will be glad to publish it in order that the public may be advised of the very great wrong done a body of worthy men who work long hours, risk their lives daily, and serve the people of the District of Columbia in a perfectly conscientious way year in and year out.

According to the article referred to the distinguished Congressman from Michigan said:

"I have observed deputy United States marshals in the district courts of the United States and I have yet to see the first marshal who was worthy of his hire. It seems to me to give them an increase of salary and put them on the same plane as men who are actually doing work in other fields is a mistake. If there are some of them who are working they should be reclassified and called something else and given a raise in salary. A man who opens and shuts the door of a district court is not entitled to the same amount of money as a man who actually goes out and takes a chance with his life."

In reading what the statesman from the Wolverine State said, one would be justified in assuming that all we deputy marshals do is open and shut the doors of the courtrooms, but nothing could be further from the fact. Deputy marshals do many, many more things than open and shut doors. But even the job of opening and shutting the doors of our courtrooms requires a very high order of intelligence, especially in view of the fact that many of the most vicious criminals in the land pass the portals of those doors, and it takes a keen eye to spot persons who might be bent upon shooting up the court and freeing dangerous men to go out and rob and kill citizens of our city or kill some of our policemen in their efforts to flee the jurisdiction. About 3 years ago a white man was on trial in one of our criminal divisions on the charge of attempting to commit the heinous crime of rape on a little 6-year-old girl, and her father armed himself with a pistol and came to court with the avowed purpose of slaying the prisoner in open court, and had it not been for the alertness of the deputy assigned to open and shut the door on that particular day a terrible tragedy would have been enacted at the very bar of justice.

Who will say that an officer of the law so alert and keen as the deputy who averted this tragedy is not worthy of his hire? And, mind you, that very deputy, after serving in court until late in the afternoon, had to go out and serve legal processes until long after the usual dinner hour.

The marshal of the United States in and for the District of Columbia, with the very high regard he has for the welfare of the Government he so faithfully and efficiently serves, would not employ, even for one day, a man who did nothing but open and shut doors.

Twice in the 11 years I have been deputy marshal I had a pistol poked in my stomach, and was told I would be killed if I persisted in my efforts to serve the papers I had for that purpose. What has happened to me has happened to others, perhaps many times, and who will say we do not face danger in the perfor ance of our duty? In addition to this we have to swallow all kinds of vile epithets without answering back, because we happen to be guardians of the safety of the people, the honorable gentleman from Michigan included.

We have to be on hand at the office from 8:45 in the morning until the adjournment of the courts late in the afternoon, when we go out to serve processes, sometimes far into the night, and in slum holes, many, many times, that the gentleman from Michigan, brave as he may be, would not dare enter even in broad daylight.

I am in my sixty-seventh year of age, yet during January, February, and March of this year I served 1,059 legal papers of all kinds, issuing out of the several divisions of our court, and Mr. Harry Allen and Mr. George Killeen exceeded this number by a good deal. Frequently our men are required to be on the lookout for dangerous criminals wanted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice or on warrants issued by the United States commissioner. Then, too, we are called upon very frequently, and at all hours of the day and night, to accompany police officers and serve Federal warrants of search during raids on bootleg and gambling joints.

The truth is we are always in as much danger as any police officer, and our work is comparable to that of detective sergeant, and I think we earn and are entitled to the same pay, though I have never asked for it. I am sure I am entitled to more money than I get, but have never asked for it, as I felt sure our chief would plead our cause at the proper time before the proper committee of Congress.

One of our deputies—Mr. W. J. Kirkland—has been in the service 28 years, and now fills the very responsible position of bookkeeper in our office, though he still ranks as a deputy marshal. Several others are on the same work and are subject to orders to go out and serve papers day or night.

Our men also have to transport some of the most dangerous criminals that live to and from penitentiaries and elsewhere about the country.

Our office serves more papers than any other marshal's office in the country except that of the Southern District of the State of New York. Another thing, if we don't earn the money through papers coming into our office, we don't get it. In other words, our office must be self-sustaining. We are not paid out of the general fund of the Treasury.

In view of these facts, I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Michigan will be only too glad to right the wrong he has done, because I cannot believe one capable of a seat in the Congress of the United States would deliberately injure men performing long and faithful service to the Government they are sworn to protect.

JAMES S. MCCARTHY,
Deputy United States Marshal.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KVALE (at the request of Mr. BOILEAU), for the balance of the week.

To Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska, for 1 week, on account of important business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we entreat Thee to guide these, Thy servants and the Representatives of a great people, through the remaining hours of this day. In all deliberations we pray that the Congress may be wise, just, and efficient in statesmanship. Bring us all to listen to the Evangel of Nazareth, whose purpose is to bring men into the unity of brotherhood. Help us to seek Him more diligently, and thus free ourselves of selfish and ignoble desire. Grant, our Father, that peace and loyalty to our institutions may prevail throughout every State in the Union. By our works and examples may we inspire faith, hope, and devotion to the Republic round every fireside and in every schoolroom in all our land. Thine shall be the glory. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On June 3, 1937:

H. R. 860. An act for the relief of Marion McGlothlin, the Baylor Hospital, Dr. F. M. Gilbert, and Dr. T. C. Gilbert;

H. R. 2469. An act for the relief of Hedwig Grassman Stehn;

H. R. 3268. An act for the relief of William Randolph Cason;

H. J. Res. 394. Joint resolution making appropriation for expenses of the Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' reunion at Jackson, Miss., in 1937.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5996. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, and Mr. NYE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that on June 8, 1937, the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 142

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PHILIP A. GOODWIN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday next.

STATE, JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, COMMERCE AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 7, 13, 19, 55, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 82, 84, 85, 90, 91, and 92.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, 14, 20, 25, 27, 29, 30, 33, 34, 38, 43, 45, 46, 47, 52, 53, 59, 65, 72, 73, 74, 75, 80, 86, 89, and 93, and agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year 1938, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in connection with the action of the conferees on such amendments:

On amendments nos. 3, 15, 26, 39, 50, 54, 57, 60, 61, 76, 78, 81, and 87: Eliminated language in various paragraphs throughout the bill which authorized expenditures for neccssary expenses not specifically named in the paragraphs making the appropriations. In the case of each amendment the House language has been retained authorizing these miscellaneous necessary expenditures but language has been inserted by the conferees limiting to $50 the amount that may be spent for each item not specifically authorized.

State Department

On amendment no. 1: Appropriates $2,220,480 for salaries in the office of the Secretary of State, instead of $1,927,700 as provided by the House and $2,224,940 as proposed by the Senate. The increase approved over the House figures look to the allowance of $205,540 for the Division of Trade Agreements, $4,540 for the Division of Communications and Records, $31,940 for the Division of Philippine Affairs, $6,500 for an additional position in the office of the Economic Advisor, and $40,500 for replacement of Foreign Service officers on detail in the Department with permanent personnel and payment of the salary of the Counselor.

On no 2: Corrects limitation figures to correspond with action taken on amendment no. 1.

On no. 5: Appropriates $20,000 plus the unexpended balance for public hearings in connection with the reciprocal treaty program, instead of $30,000 plus the unexpended balance, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 6: Appropriates $125,000 for representation allowances, as proposed by the House, instead of $100,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 7: Appropriates $45,000 for expenses of the Telecommunication Conference in Cairo, Egypt, as proposed by the House, instead of $49,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 8: Appropriates $10,000 for the expenses of the Delaware Valley Tercentenary Commission, as proposed by the Senate.

Department of Justice

On no. 9: Appropriates $563,500 for salaries in the Tax Division, instead of $548,140 as proposed by the House and $578,860 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 10: Appropriates $150,100 for salaries in the Criminal Division, instead of $137,600 as proposed by the House and $162,800 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 11: Corrects a total and permits a 10-percent interchangeability privilege for appropriations carried under the office of the Attorney General, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 13: Appropriates $800,000 for traveling expenses, as proposed by the House, instead of $840,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 14: Appropriates $275,000, as proposed by the Senate, for printing and binding, instead of $317,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 16: Appropriates $530,000 for salaries and expenses of Veterans' Insurance Litigation, instead of $500,000 as proposed by the Senate and $555,000 as provided by the House.

On no. 17: Appropriates $47,000 for salaries, District Court, Panama Canal Zone, instead of $48,300 as proposed by the Senate and $45,500 as provided by the House.

On no. 18: Appropriates $3,560,000 for salaries and expenses of deputies and marshals, instead of $3,585,000 as proposed by the Senate and $3,485,000 as provided by the House.

On no. 19: Appropriates $2,918,500 for salaries and expenses of district attorneys and assistants as proposed by the House, instead of $2,922,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 20: Makes appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, available for expenses in connection with patent applications and contested proceedings involving inventions, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 21: Appropriates $563,040 for medical and hospital service in penal institutions, instead of $581,000 as proposed by the Senate and $550,000 as provided by the House.

On no. 22: Corrects limitation figures to correspond with action taken on amendment no. 23.

On no. 23: Appropriates $1,023,465 for expenses of Federal jails, instead of $673,300 as provided by the House and $1,063,465 as proposed by the Senate. The amount allowed over the House figures in both this item and amendment no. 21 is for the expense incident to opening of the new Federal jail in Los Angeles, Calif.

Department of Commerce

On no. 24: Reinserts language, as proposed by the House, which was deleted by the Senate, authorizing the Chief Clerk of the Department to sign official papers under certain circumstances, amended to extend the authority of such clerk to the signing of only "minor routine" papers and documents.

On no. 25: Appropriates $352,000 for salaries in the office of the Secretary, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $362,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 27: Appropriates $126,842 as proposed by the Senate for contingent expenses, instead of $134,600, as proposed by the House.

On no. 29: Inserts language, as proposed by the Senate, making the appropriation for traveling expenses available for travel in connection with examinations for retirement for disability in the Lighthouse Service.

On no. 30: Appropriates $959,000 for traveling expenses, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $909,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 31: Appropriates $500,000 for printing and binding, instead of $492,000 as proposed by the House and $512,550 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 32: Appropriates $628,000 for departmental salaries in the Bureau of Air Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $543,000, as provided by the House, and makes $5,000 of such sum immediately available, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 33: Eliminates language, as proposed by the Senate, in the paragraph for establishment of air-navigation facilities, Bureau of Air Commerce, which language proposed to make $50,000 of the appropriation available for certain research and investigation in connection with air-navigation aids. A new paragraph has been inserted to authorize this work, which will be explained under amendment no. 42.

On no. 34: Makes appropriation for establishment of air-navigation facilities, Bureau of Air Commerce, available for purchase, maintenance, operation, etc., of aircraft as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 35: Appropriates $3,037,800, as proposed by the Senate, for establishment of air-navigation facilities, Bureau of Air Commerce, instead of $2,862,800, as provided by the House, and makes $7,500 of such sum immediately available instead of $15,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 36: Permits Secretary of Commerce to enter into contracts, prior to July 1, 1938, for purchase, construction, and installation of additional air-navigation aids in an amount not to exceed $2,000,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $6,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, and in addition thereto authorizes the Secretary to contract for such aids in the amount of $2,000,000 additional prior to July 1, 1939. Also provides that a report of all certifications and expenditures under the item for establishment of air-navigation facilities shall be made to Congress on or before July 1, 1938, instead of having the report made to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 37: Appropriates $5,698,000 for maintenance of air-navigation aids, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,798,700, as provided by the House, of which sum $58,500 is made immediately available instead of $117,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 38: Increases the limitation on the amount that may be expended for purchase of aircraft under the appropriation for maintenance of air-navigation facilities, Bureau of Air Commerce, from $100,000, as proposed by the House, to $200,000 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 40. Appropriates $1,582,000, as proposed by the Senate, for aircraft in commerce, Bureau of Air Commerce, instead of $844,000, as provided by the House, and makes $11,000 of such sum available immediately instead of $22,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 42: Appropriates $292,000 under a new item for safety and planning, Bureau of Air Commerce, as proposed by the Senate, and retains new language in the paragraph save that authorizing the purchase of a certain patent which has been eliminated.

On no. 43: Allows not to exceed $15,000 for expenses of packing, crating, and transporting household effects of employees in the Bureau of Air Commerce when transferred from one official station to another, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $10,000 as provided by the House.

On no. 44: Limits the total poundage for the expense item in amendment no. 43 to 6,000 pounds in any one case instead of 5,000 pounds, as provided by the House and 8,000 pounds as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 45: Increases the limitation under the Bureau of Air Commerce on materials and supplies purchasable without competitive bidding from $50 as proposed by the House to $100 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 46: Makes the appropriation for salaries and expenses, Washington Commerce Service, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, available for administration of the China Trade Act as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 47: Eliminates language, as proposed by the Senate, intended to make the appropriation for salaries and expenses, Washington Commerce Service, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, available for necessary expenses not specifically set out in the appropriating paragraph.

On no. 48: Appropriates $543,800 for salaries and expenses, Washington Commerce Service, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, instead of $500,000 as proposed by the House and $553,800 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 52: Makes appropriation for customs statistics, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, available for expenses connected with publication of statistics showing exports and imports by customs districts and destinations. The money available, however, will not permit this work to proceed.

On no. 55: Appropriates $403,000 for customs statistics, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, as proposed by the House, instead of $350,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 59: Makes appropriation for salaries and expenses, Foreign Commerce Service, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, available to pay losses by exchange, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 62: Appropriates $778,000 for salaries and expenses, Foreign Commerce Service, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, instead of $728,000 as proposed by the House and $783,325 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 64: Appropriates $143,800 for transportation of families and effects of officers and employees and allowances for living quarters under the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, instead of $142,000 as proposed by the House and $145,600 as provided by the Senate.

On no. 65: Inserts a proviso, as proposed by the Senate, limiting the allowance to any foreign commerce officer under the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to a maximum of $1,700.

On no. 66: Appropriates $837,000 for testing, inspection, and information service under the Bureau of Standards, as proposed by the House, instead of $800,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 67: Appropriates $701,000 for research and development under the Bureau of Standards, as proposed by the House, instead of $667,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 68. Limits amount available for attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau of Standards to $3,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $4,500, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 69: Corrects a total.

On no. 70: Corrects a limitation figure.

On no. 71: Limits the number of pounds of household effects of employees of the Lighthouse Service that may be packed and transported as Government expense upon change in official station of an employee to 6,000 pounds, instead of 5,000 pounds as proposed by the House and 8,000 pounds as provided by the Senate.

On no. 72: Appropriates $729,900 for superintendents, clerks, etc., Lighthouse Service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $720,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 73: Eliminates language, as proposed by the Senate, proposing to make the appropriation for miscellaneous objects, Coast and Geodetic Survey, available for certain objects not specifically named.

On no. 74: Makes the appropriation for propagation of food fishes, Bureau of Fisheries, available for acquisition of fish-cultural stations, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 75: Appropriates $262,000, as proposed by the Senate, for inquiries respecting food fishes, Bureau of Fisheries, instead of $252,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 80: Makes appropriation for Alaska, general service, Bureau of Fisheries, available for pay of subsistence of certain employees, as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 82: Appropriates $274,000 for Alaska, general service, Bureau of Fisheries, as proposed by the House, instead of $266,875, as provided by the Senate.

Department of Labor

On no. 84: Appropriates $135,400, as proposed by the House, for the salaries and expenses of the Bureau of Labor Standards, instead of $155,000, as provided by the Senate.

On no. 85: Corrects limitation figure to correspond with action taken on amendment no. 84.

On no. 86: Inserts revised language, as proposed by the Senate, for certain expenses of employees of the Bureau of Labor Standards in attending meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau and increases the limitation available for this expense to $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $750, as provided by the House.

On no. 89: Appropriates $250,000 for printing and binding, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $260,000, as provided by the House.

On no. 90: Appropriates $9,586,600 for salaries and expenses, Immigration and Naturalization Service, as proposed by the House, instead of $9,089,900, as provided by the Senate. It is the sense of both the Senate and House conferees that not less than $340,000 of this appropriation shall be allocated to the work involving the deportation of aliens under existing law, which sum shall be used exclusively for such purpose.

On no. 91: Corrects a limitation to correspond with action taken on amendment no. 90.

On no. 92: Retains language in the bill, as inserted by the House and deleted by the Senate, requiring certain expenditures made by the Immigration and Naturalization Service to be made in strict compliance with certain other provisions of law.

On no. 93: Inserts language, as proposed by the Senate, prohibiting the use of money appropriated in the act for the payment of salaries of persons nominated to fill any position after the Senate has voted not to approve of said nomination.

THOS. S. MCMILLAN,
JAS. MCANDREWS,
ROBERT L. BACON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, having been unable as one of the House conferees to sign this conference report, I thought it might be appropriate that I should make a brief statement to the House outlining the reasons why I have not been able to agree with my colleagues. I realize, of course, that in all conference reports there are matters of difference, and that necessarily, in order for an agreement to be reached, the conferees must sacrifice their individual opinions about some items. I would not have failed to sign the conference report except for a reason which I consider to be one of major importance, and that reason has to do with the appropriation for the Bureau of Air Commerce.

I am not only not antagonistic to the development of aviation but I am an enthusiastic supporter of air transportation. I am willing at all times and in any way possible to do what I can to further its interest. However, I call your attention briefly to these facts.

The appropriation for the current fiscal year for the Bureau of Air Commerce is $6,850,000. The appropriation carried in the bill as it passed the House was $9,435,251, plus a contract authorization, which is the equivalent of an appropriation of $2,000,000. The appropriation as it passed the Senate was increased to $11,780,221 in cash, plus a contract authorization of $6,000,000, bringing the total amount to approximately $18,000,000 for the next fiscal year, as compared with the appropriation for the current fiscal year of $6,850,000. The conferees have reduced the amount of cash carried in the Senate bill by only $108,000, and they have reduced the contract authorization by only $2,000,000, leaving the amount agreed to in conference as $11,672,221 in cash, plus a contract authorization of $4,000,000, which is approximately 225 percent of the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

How did the increases in the bill after it passed the House come about? At the time the hearings were had before the House committee Mr. Eugene Vidal was Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce. The appropriations recommended by the House committee and adopted by the House were apparently satisfactory to him. Immediately after the House hearings were completed Mr. Vidal resigned. The understanding is that Mr. Vidal was forced to resign. Mr. Vidal's attitude with reference to the expenditures to be made or to be recommended by his Bureau were apparently not in accord with the wishes of the officials of the air transportation companies, whose ideas are reflected in this bill, and who seem to control the Bureau of Air Commerce. I was informed by a gentleman who was in position to know that Mr. Vidal lost his place because he was not willing to recommend the inordinate appropriations which are carried in this bill, and he resigned. A Mr. Fagg was appointed.

Mr. Fagg very promptly submitted through the proper official channels to the Bureau of the Budget and secured its approval of the additional estimates, which were thereafter transmitted to the Senate, received Senate approval, and subsequently received the approval of the conferees, bringing about, as I have indicated, an increase in the appropriation for this one Bureau to 225 percent, or approximately that percent, of the present year's appropriation, without the submission of any additional evidence as to the needs of this Bureau than the House committee had.

We have here some very interesting hearings—I hope you will get copies of them—held by our subcommittee after the Senate amendments were adopted. I call your attention to the evidence of Mr. Fagg, set out on page 8 of these hearings. I may say, however, before I read this, that we also heard as the first witness before our subcommittee after the bill came back from the Senate a man whose evidence is not reported, a man named Colonel Gorrel, who is, you might say, the chief lobbyist for the air transportation companies, and the president of the Air Transport Association. The House part of our conference committee heard the evidence of Colonel Gorrel before it heard the evidence of any official of the Government, with reference to whether or not these Senate amendments were satisfactory to him. His evidence, as I have stated, is not reported. However, the evidence of Mr. Fagg, to which I have made reference, is as follows:

Mr. TARVER. And yet we claim we are economizing in order to try to balance the Budget.

Mr. FAGG. We do not claim that in this Bureau.

Mr. TARVER. You do not claim that?

Mr. FAGG. Not the slightest.

Mr. TARVER. Do you not think that it is time you were beginning to claim that and make some effort in that direction?

Mr. FAGG. Not in this field. It depends on what the Congress desires.

Mr. TARVER. You think that we should give you this increased appropriation for your particular work, and that the economies should be effected in other organizations of the Government?

Mr. FAGG. We do.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, it is natural for an enthusiast to entertain views of that character with regard to his work, but it is a little bit unusual to go to the extreme indicated by your expression.

I have no desire to make, and I trust that whatever I may say may not be understood to be, a criticism of my colleagues who have served on this conference committee; but I do believe that in times like these, when we are being called on by the President and by the country generally to try to bring about a balance between Federal expenses and Federal income, we should not undertake at one swoop to more than double the appropriation for one bureau of one department of the Government, and, as under the circumstances of this case, without this inordinate increase being thoroughly justified. If when the bill passed the House, if when the hearings were had before the House committee, the amount carried in the bill when it passed the House appeared to be reasonably sufficient to the officials of the Bureau of Air Commerce, then, certainly, some new developments, some new facts which ought to affect our judgment in the situation, should have been developed before the Senate was permitted to add approximately $4,000,000 to the amount of the bill as it passed the House. As a matter of fact, the officials of the air transport companies, as I have stated, have had their views reflected in the amounts of these appropriations. Their lobbyists are as thick in Washington as the locusts were in Egypt in the time of the plagues.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman tell us what the total amount of the State, Justice, the judiciary, Commerce, and Labor appropriation bill is at the present time, since it has come out of the Senate?

Mr. TARVER. The exact figures of the total bill are not in the data which I have before me. Doubtless the chairman of our subcommittee will be able to give the gentleman this information. However, the unjustified and extravagant increase is contained, as I view it, in the appropriation for the Bureau of Air Commerce, to which I have made reference, and as to which I have given the gentleman specific figures.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe Members of Congress should put their foot down on these bureaucrats who are desirous of increasing their budgets over and above that of a year ago, especially when it is beyond at least a 10-percent increase?

When it comes to an increase of 100 percent or 200 percent, it is only going to be a short time until we will be unable to cope with the situation of trying to finance these various bureaus.

Mr. TARVER. That is exactly the point I was endeavoring to make. Instead of following a policy of economy here we are following a policy of extravagance. We are likely to let our enthusiasm for air transportation run away with us in the same way, perhaps, as we did in the early history of the railroads of this country, when a large portion of the public domain was practically given away in an effort to foster the building of railroads, a very worthy objective, but one that we went about with too much enthusiasm.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to anyone in my desire to cut down appropriations. After this bill had passed the House supplemental estimates were sent to the Senate by the Budget and the Senate not only included these supplemental estimates but went beyond the Budget. The Senate was very insistent upon retaining the increased appropriations. Your conferees, however, did succeed in bringing the estimates for the Bureau of Air Commerce below the Budget figures, although the Senate had exceeded the Budget when they passed the bill. Therefore, although there has been a considerable increase in the appropriations for this Bureau over last year, I think your House conferees accomplished about all they possibly could. We did reduce the Senate appropriations below the Budget.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. TARVER. The only reduction you insisted upon with respect to the cash appropriation was $108,000, to which the Senate conferees acceded. The House conferees did not ask for any other reduction in the cash appropriations.

Mr. BACON. But the gentleman will concede that the total cash appropriation is within the total Budget estimates.

Mr. TARVER. I understand that, but I was talking about the way in which the additional Budget estimates were brought about beyond the estimates as considered by the House committee.

Mr. BACON. I would like to address myself to that particular point. There has been a reorganization of the Bureau of Air Commerce. Your subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for the past 2 years has felt there was a good deal of inefficiency and lack of direction in that Bureau. There has been a reorganization and a new man has come in. I myself am impressed with him. I myself believe that he knows his job and is efficient, and I believe he will do a good job.

The reason there has been an increase and the reason the Budget has recommended an increase over last year has been due to the investigations of a Senate committee headed by Senator COPELAND, of New York, which was appointed as a result of the air crash in which Senator Cutting lost his life. This Senate committee went into all of these air crashes most exhaustively, and as a result of their conclusions from this testimony there has been a reorganization, and the Budget has seen fit to increase the appropriations. We are a little below the Budget, but I personally believe that this increase is justified, and is justified for this reason: Three years ago and 4 years ago we made no appropriations to improve air navigation facilities and aids to make flying safe. Therefore the air transportation industry has developed much faster than Government facilities and navigation aids to make flying safe. It would have been better, perhaps, if we had not cut to zero the appropriations of 3 or 4 years ago, but we did. If we had gone along in an orderly way, we would not have to have this big appropriation today.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BACON. I will conclude with the statement that it seems to me that with the large increase of American citizens using the airways, there is an obligation on the part of the Government to see that these airways are safe. Only 30 percent of these airways are used by air transportation companies. The other 70 percent are use by private flyers, Army and Navy flyers, and other people. Therefore I think the increase is justified.

I would have been willing to cut the amount further, but we had to compromise with the other body; and I think, as long as we are below the Budget, the House is justified in adopting the conference report.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take just a moment or two to further answer the statement made by our colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], a member of the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], I believe, has briefly presented the picture to the House. But I would have the House membership reflect for just a moment and look at the picture of the development of aviation during the past few years. It is interesting to note that in 1926, just 10 years ago, there were only about 5,000 passengers carried by air in the United States. During the past year or two that number has increased, not by thousands but to hundreds of thousands, and not by thousands of miles of travel per year but to millions of miles of travel per year by the Army, the Navy, by private planes, and by commercial transportation. So I am sure the membership of the House is perfectly aware of the great progress that has been made in aviation in the last few years. That is the progress that has taken place. Years ago this Congress authorized the Department of Commerce to regulate and control air transportation in America; that is, by authority of law.

It takes money to maintain these airways. Human lives are at stake. I feel, as my committee felt, having this responsibility, that it is up to the membership of this Congress to see that these airways are properly maintained, and that we have safety by air as we would like to have it. That is what is responsible for this great increase in this bill this year for this purpose. Even with this great increase, we are $35,000 under the Budget estimate. The bill which passed the House provided an appropriation of some $9,000,000 for this Bureau. The Senate added a couple of million dollars to that, on the basis of supplemental estimates that came from the Budget to the Senate. The figures contained in the bill here presented are under the total estimates for the Bureau of Air Commerce by $35,000.

With regard to the money carried in the bill for all of the four departments, the total funds provided for in the bill under the conference agreement are $125,775,000. The total estimates submitted by the Budget amount to $129,854,000. There is a reduction of $4,078,250.40 under the estimate submitted by the Budget.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says that the bill carries $125,175,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. One hundred and twenty-five million seven hundred and seventy-five thousand nine hundred and seventeen dollars. That is the amount provided in the conference report.

Mr. RICH. The bill last year carried $117,803,000. The gentleman is $17,000,000 over the total amount of this bill for the year 1937. Is that the fact?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; last year it was $117,000,000, and this year it is $125,000,000, an increase of about $8,000,000 over the last year's appropriations, but we are $4,000,000 under the Budget estimates, as has been stated.

Mr. RICH. But we have to give some consideration now to the fact the Budget is budgeting too much for these various departments of the Government. The gentleman is chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. I call his attention to the fact that we have now appropriated over $7,200,000,000 in this session of Congress. The gentleman knows that the income of this Government next year will not be over five and a half billion dollars. How are we ever going to balance the Budget if we keep on in this way? What I call the attention of the gentleman to is that you have to budget the Budget.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman agree with us and join with us in cutting out some of these authorizations from year to year? There is where your trouble is.

Mr. RICH. There is no one in the House who has been voting to keep them down more than I, and I am here to help the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman to feel that some of these accidents could have been averted if we had had proper equipment.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no question about that. There are a great many miles of airways in America that have no maintenance or aids to navigation whatever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There are thousands of miles.

Mr. McMILLAN. And with these funds available we will equip these airways with modern facilities and provide these aids to navigation that are essential if we are to take care of safety in air travel in America.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. The $125,000,000 figure given by the gentleman does not include the $4,000,000 contract authorization.

Mr. McMILLAN. Two of the four million dollars contract authorization are estimated for by the Budget.

Mr. TARVER. I am not questioning but that it is estimated for by the Budget. The point I make is that the $125,000,000 total given by the gentleman does not include the $4,000,000 authorization for the Bureau of Air Commerce. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is correct, and it should not properly be considered in connection with the appropriations for 1938, as the appropriations to carry out the contract authorizations will be made in subsequent years and charged to the fiscal year in which they are made.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that there are now some items in disagreement. They all have to do with the same subject matter, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Senate amendments will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments in disagreement are as follows:

Senate amendment no. 4: Page 4, line 24, after the figures "$78,410", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 12: Page 35, line 4, strike out the period and insert ": Provided further, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 28: Page 60, line 5, after the word "law", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 41: Page 63, line 20, after the word "available", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 49: Page 66, line 16, after the figures "$553,800", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 51: Page 67, line 14, after the figures "$323,000", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 56: Page 68, line 12, after the figures "$350,000", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 58: Page 69, line 3, after the figures "520,000", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 63: Page 70, line 12, after the figures "$783,325", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 77: Page 92, line 24, after the figures "$73,600", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 79: Page 93, line 15, after the word "Columbian", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annurl Budget."

Senate amendment no. 83: Page 94, line 12, after the word "immediately", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Senate amendment no. 88: Page 100, line 5, after the figures "$100", insert ": Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I think at this point it would be well for me to call the attention of the House to the fact that these various amendments in disagreement have to do with an amendment that was put on the bill by the Senate. The Senate inserted an amendment requiring certain detailed statements of expenditures to be submitted to Congress in the Budget.

While perhaps some few Members of the House, as well as Members of the Senate, would have some use for these detailed statements, it has developed that the cost incident to the detailed statements regarding all of the various little expenditures on the part of a department would require a great deal of time and expense in preparation, as well as loading down the already voluminous Budget with a mass of detailed figures. I may add, furthermore, that these statements on any item may now be secured by a committee in charge of any bill if requests for the information are submitted to the Department. So while an amendment was made to that effect by the Senate, the Senate did agree, upon the insistence of the House conferees, to recede with an amendment cutting out the word "detailed", the effect of which will be, in my opinion, the continuation of the present expenditure statements now found in the Budget. I think that that explanation is sufficient. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments numbered 4, 12, 28, 41, 49, 51, 56, 58, 63, 77, 79, 83, and 88 with an amendment in each case striking out the word "detailed."

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. McMILLAN: Mr. McMILLAN moves that the House recede and concur in amendments nos. 4, 12, 28, 41, 49, 51, 56, 58, 63, 77, 79, 83, and 88 with an amendment in each case striking out the word "detailed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT AT CABINET GORGE ON THE CLARK FORK OF COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation, pumping, or other uses, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. GREEVER, Mr. GEARHART, and Mr. OLIVER.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may meet during the session of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the German situation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a telegram from the commissioner of banking and insurance of the State of New Jersey, and a few short letters from officials of banks in New Jersey relative to legislation which has been introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio address I am delivering today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALLGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the proposed Mount Olympus National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I request the unanimous consent of the House to extend my own remarks and to include therein a study of the agricultural and sugar situation of Puerto Rico as it affects the economic and social conditions of the masses of producers of the island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the Mackinac Straits development.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a copy of an address delivered by the Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a statement by Mr. Labert St. Clair, of the Department of Commerce, explaining the work done in accident prevention last year under the provisions of a bill which I introduced last year and which became law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING COSTS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes to make a statement with reference to printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that evidently a lot of "brain trusters" are bringing bills here and asking Members of Congress to introduce them.

I call attention to H. R. 7318, introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE], a bill to regulate the flow of interstate commerce by increasing national income, by maintaining production, by abolishing unemployment, and so forth. This is a bill of 15 pages. An identical bill, H. R. 5325, was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] on June 1. The same bill, the same contents exactly, bill H. R. 7332, consisting of 15 pages, was introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. The same bill and the same contents, H. R. 7335, was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN]. All these bills introduced on the same day, June 1, 1937, a gala day for the "brain trusters."

Now, if you expect the Printing Committee to print all the bills that are sent here by the "brain trusters" and the Members are going to introduce those bills on the floor, you will never keep down the printing expenses of the Government. It seems to me that before any Member of Congress introduces a bill that somebody asks him to introduce he should ask that individual whether or not more than one Member of Congress is going to introduce it. I think it is ridiculous for us to permit these things to happen. No judgment is displayed by the Member carrying out this practice of introducing bills that are duplicated by other Members of Congress on the same day and sent to the same committee—the Ways and Means. One bill of a kind is enough.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a short letter written by the Territorial highway engineer of Alaska concerning the roads in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK (CALIF.)

Mr. DEROUEN (when the Committee on Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN] whether it is his intention to call up for consideration this afternoon the bill H. R. 2014, which has reference to the Everglades National Park?

Mr. DEROUEN. No. That bill is not to be considered today.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, this bill, being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5394, with Mr. MILLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN] is recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to acquire, either through negotiations to purchase or condemnation, some 7,500 acres of privately owned land adjacent to Yosemite National Park, and provides for the addition to the park of such of this land as may be acquired, together with approximately 476 acres of national-forest land. Some 6,700 acres of the privately owned land is heavily timbered, embracing one of the finest examples of virgin sugar-pine forest now in existence. The remaining 800 acres of privately owned land has been cut over, but should be included in the park to provide proper administration of the area.

All of the national-forest land involved is also heavily timbered, except for 40 acres, which have been logged.

The committee is of the opinion that the preservation of this forest as part of Yosemite National Park will add to the recreational values of the park, promote true conservation, and will be beneficial to the present and future generations of the Nation.

The basic authority for such land acquisition is contained in the act of March 31, 1933. Supplementing this authority, emergency appropriation acts have been passed making moneys available which may be used for acquisition of lands for Emergency Conservation Work and other purposes.

The proposed legislation would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the privately owned lands included in the area described in section 1 of the proposed bill and authorize the administration thereof, together with approximately 900 acres of national forest lands, as a part of the Yosemite National Park. The acquisition of the privately owned lands in the area described in section 1 of the proposed bill is authorized to be made from any funds or moneys made available for such purpose, except from the general fund of the Treasury.

The sugar pine is found exclusively in California and southern Oregon and nowhere else in the world. It is the largest and most magnificent of all pine trees. John Muir, a famous naturalist and author, in describing this tree, said:

> It is the largest, the noblest, and most beautiful of all the 70 or 80 species of pine trees in the world and, of all the conifers, second only to King Sequoia.

The sugar-pine forest has character unlike that of any other. It would seem proper at this time to acquire this area and place it in Yosemite National Park. It was once upon a time a part of the national park.

I therefore submit the bill for the consideration of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I notice under section 4 the county is to be reimbursed for the tax it might lose through the sale of this land. Have we ever done that in the past? Has the Government ever paid taxes on land that it purchased?

Mr. DEROUEN. No. I may explain that was not contained in the original bill. The gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], who opposes this bill, formulated the amendment that the gentleman has reference to. The committee after much discussion finally agreed to let the matter come before the House as a precedent. The gentleman from Louisiana does not know of any other legislation that contains such a provision.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the Department taken any action upon this amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am not aware of any action, any more than a representative of the Interior Department was in the committee room at that time, and, if I recall correctly, he said he would not interpose any objection but would leave it to the Congress to decide. This is a very controversial matter because it is becoming prominent throughout the United States in reference to much of the land that is being bought for addition to the various forests. Some day the question will have to be solved.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman states that his committee agreed to bring this amendment on the floor of the House for action. Do I understand the chairman of the Public Lands Committee now presents this bill with this amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am in favor of submitting it to the House for decision.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Is the gentleman in favor of the amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. I think there is merit in the amendment, and the House should pass upon it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman still does not answer the question.

Mr. DEROUEN. I have answered it in my own way. That is my interpretation. I still believe the time will come when the Congress will have to provide for that or else stop buying land.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I ask the gentleman if he is in favor of the amendment?

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman is trying to put me on the spot. I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman placed himself on the spot by bringing it in here.

Mr. DEROUEN. I disagree as to that, but I am following instructions from my committee. The gentleman asked me how I personally felt. I tried to say the committee thought the House should decide this question, since there are a large number of bills introduced, seeking tax reimbursement.

Mr. UMSTEAD. As a Member of the House I was seeking information from the chairman of the Public Lands Committee. He has heard all of the evidence in reference to this matter, and I wanted to know what his opinion was.

Mr. DEROUEN. The chairman of the Public Lands Committee very explicitly and in the best language he knew how, has presented you the facts.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. This measure in no way takes any money out of the Treasury other than from the fund that may be used for this specific purpose?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. And can be used only for this purpose.

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. In other words, it is not a charge upon the Treasury, nor on any appropriation other than the special fund referred to.

Mr. DEROUEN. Not at all; you have stated it correctly.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Bureau of the Budget approves of this bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. It does.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me ask the gentleman one question with reference to section 4. I do not concur in the views of the gentleman that it should be adopted. Is it not a fact that if this bill becomes a law there will accrue to this county great benefit in the future by reason of the fact people from all over the United States who may be in that vicinity will go out to view the trees, and while they are there will spend plenty of money? Has the gentleman taken that into consideration?

Mr. DEROUEN. I believe it is a good investment.

Mr. COCHRAN. This county will receive more money by reason of the conservation of these sugar-pine trees, if this bill becomes a law, than it ever would get from taxes from those who now own the property.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is true, because those trees are to be cut and manufactured into lumber. After the trees are removed from this area the land will not be worth very much and will not yield any taxes or revenue whatever.

Mr. COCHRAN. The only ones who seem to be opposing this bill in California are small railroad and lumber interests which want to cut down these trees. Is not that true?

Mr. DEROUEN. I will answer in this way: The land is owned, as I stated, by a private corporation. The testimony of representatives of the railroad and the landowners was not altogether opposed to selling a part of the area, but their contention was that they should sell it for a large amount so as to take care of what they thought might be a loss.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman tell the House if he has any information regarding how long it would take trees of this size to grow again in that forest area if they are removed?

Mr. DEROUEN. I will have to quote from the testimony of the forester, who stated that the very large trees will take 200 years.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is a real conservation measure if there ever was one?

Mr. DEROUEN. I believe that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman also tell how long it will take the thousand people thrown out of work to get jobs?

Mr. DEROUEN. When they are very anxious to work, it does not take very long.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact many people will be put out of work by this legislation?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not very many.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. A thousand?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not very many. That was not disclosed in the testimony.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I understood the gentleman to say the Director of the Budget had never approved section 4, which is a committee amendment providing for reimbursement of taxes. This point was not presented?

Mr. DEROUEN. No; it was not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In one of these national parks there is agitation for a water-power development. My recollection is it is in this park. Will the gentleman state whether the provisions of section 3 authorize or prohibit such a water-power development?

Mr. DEROUEN. I would prefer to have the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] answer these questions. The gentleman lives there and has all the information.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Does not section 3 involve water-power development in this park?

Mr. MCGROARTY. No; I do not believe there is any water-power development affecting this area at all.

Mr. DEROUEN. That was not brought into the hearings at all.

Mr. MCGROARTY. No. The gentleman is thinking of some other park.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not understand why section 3 would be pertinent if some water-power development is not involved, because it states that this new area shall be different from the rest of the parks so far as the Water Power Act is concerned. What is the meaning of that provision? Why should it be inserted?

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman from California wrote and introduced this bill. This point was not developed in the hearings. I refer the question to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We ought to know before we vote, because I have been advised by a conservationist that one of the purposes of some bill—and it must be this one—is to permit a water-power development in the Yosemite National Park.

Mr. MCGROARTY. That is absolutely untrue. There is no basis for that statement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman explain why this was put in there, then?

Mr. MCGROARTY. I do not know why it was put in there.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We ought not to vote on this bill unless we know why this is in here.

Mr. DEROUEN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. DEROUEN. This bill was debated in the Senate 2 weeks ago, on May 27. The RECORD plainly shows this question was not even brought up on the floor of the Senate. The bills are identical with the exception of the tax-reimbursement clause, and that was never brought in by the Senate. I believe the gentleman has reference to Yellowstone Park project.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The bill was brought up in the Senate and passed the Senate with section 3, making a different rule with respect to power development in this acquisition than in the remainder of the park, and that was not debated in the Senate.

Mr. DEROUEN. Not the power question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The bill was reported by the gentleman's committee, but the gentleman does not know why this section is in here or to what it applies, or what it means?

Mr. DEROUEN. There was no discussion by the committee at all, because we know there is no power question involved in this bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If we vote on it, we will not know any more than will the gentleman with respect to why we make an exception regarding this power development. Should we not know about that before we vote?

Mr. DEROUEN. I would not take it so seriously, because this is a conservation measure so far as the committee is concerned. We are not dealing with power, as I have stated before.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I would not take it seriously except for the fact I have been advised with respect to one of these parks that there is a power project proposed, and that its proponents are trying to get from Congress authority which they do not now have to put the development through. I suspect this section 3 is what they have been writing me about, in the absence of any definite proof.

Mr. DEROUEN. We have no information about that, and it was not discussed. It was not even considered, because we accepted the bill and know that no power development is involved, and I am sure it is not this bill. However, I believe the Yellowstone Park project contemplates water power.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], I think the language of the provision is specific in stating that the provisions of the Water Power Act do not apply to the land to be acquired under this bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Then there would be no objection to cutting out section 3?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If you cut out section 3, it might apply, while this language specifically prohibits it from applying.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Water Power Act does not apply to national parks.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I would like to clear up a point or two. This bill provides that the land shall be purchased by any funds available for the purchase of land except funds out of the General Treasury.

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. It is my understanding that this money comes out of conservation emergency funds. Is not that right?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman explain where the money comes from?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes; there were funds that were earmarked and set aside for such purposes, and it is the intention to use a part of the funds that have not been used heretofore.

Mr. MOTT. The funds with which this property is to be purchased are not funds derived from revenue through the sale of timber or anything like that?

Mr. DEROUEN. No.

Mr. MOTT. The funds used to purchase this property will be funds raised by taxation, will they not?

Mr. DEROUEN. No.

Mr. MOTT. Then where will the funds come from?

Mr. DEROUEN. All money used is raised by taxation. That language is very broad, but this money has been earmarked long ago and it is now unused and unspent, and a part of that money will be used to buy this area.

Mr. MOTT. I understand that, but this is money that was raised by taxation.

Mr. DEROUEN. All money of United States that we spend is raised by taxation in one form or another.

Mr. MOTT. Admitting for the sake of argument that is true, and any money with which this land will be purchased is money which was raised by taxation, what is the merit of the provision here that it shall not be money out of the Federal Treasury? It is at least money that is raised by taxation and not money produced by the land.

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman is well aware of the fact that every dime this Congress spends is raised by taxation.

Mr. MOTT. I wanted to get that clear.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is not even a question; but if the gentleman wants an answer, I may answer by saying that it will not require any new appropriation.

Mr. MOTT. And the reason for that is that the money has already been appropriated.

Mr. DEROUEN. The money has already been earmarked for certain purposes, and this is a part of the unexpended funds in the hands of the President.

Mr. MOTT. And it is that money that will be used to purchase the land?

Mr. DEROUEN. It is that money that will be used to purchase the land.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY] introduced the bill, and I now yield to him such time as he may require.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, I trust there will be no quibbling about the passage of this bill. It is simply a bill to save to the people of the United States and the people of the world, now and in the generations to come, a great forest.

This is a measure dear to the hearts of the Department of the Interior, the Forest Service, the National Park Service, and, I feel free to say, the President of the United States himself.

All this bill means is that we are either to destroy a great forest or preserve it. This forest is among the most beautiful of all the forests on the face of the earth. It is composed mainly of sugar-pine trees, and the sugar-pine tree is almost the most beautiful tree that grows on the face of the earth. The sugar pine attains a height sometimes of 300 feet. It has a diameter of from 12 to 14 feet.

There is one tree in this forest called the "Hermit's Cave." The trunk of this tree had been burned out and the decay of the tree had made a chimney, and this hermit moved into this tree and made his home there for years. He had room for a fireplace, for a kitchen, for a dining room, and it was one of the most splendid houses that any man had ever known, and God made it for him.

What may come up here is that some Members from the great cities and some Members from other parts of the Union may think it is just a local question out in California as to whether this forest shall be saved or given over to the sawmills. You must not think about it in that way. There was a man traveling on a railroad train one time, and when the conductor came through to collect his ticket he saw a trunk in the aisle and a fellow sitting in his seat beside the trunk, so the conductor said to him, "Take this trunk out of here and get it in the baggage car. This is no place for trunks." The fellow sitting in the seat beside the aisle did not say a word, did not open his mouth, and the conductor went through the train and was returning when he saw the trunk was still there, and he said again to the man, "I told you to take this trunk out of here. You must take it in the baggage car. This is no place for a trunk." The fellow never said a word.

Then the conductor said to him, "When I come back here through this train again, if this trunk is still here, the brakeman and I will take it and throw it off the train." The fellow said nothing, not a word. He never opened his mouth. So when the conductor did come back the third time there was the trunk in the aisle, and he called the brakeman and the two of them took the trunk, while the train was going about 50 miles an hour, and threw it off the train. He came back to the fellow and said, "I told you we would do that." Then the fellow spoke for the first time and said to the conductor, "I don't give a damn; it is not my trunk." [Laughter.] So, gentlemen, you must not think that this is not your forest. It is your forest. It is the forest of every man who breathes the breath of life on the face of the earth today. It is the forest for unborn generations to come. My friends, it took God 600 years to build this forest, and if we do not pass this bill, as the Senate has done, then a sawmill company is all ready now, while I am standing here, to move in on that forest and cut down those trees which it took God with His sunshine and rain 600 years to make, and in 4 years they will totally destroy that forest.

I wish I could picture that for you today. You know some poet has said that the groves were God's first temples. If you were with me in that forest this morning on the edge of the Yosemite, you would see that you were in one of God's temples, in a stately cathedral, with huge gothic columns. Then as we rode through this forest, as I wish I were doing this morning with you, we would come to the edge of the Yosemite, and we would look into the valley of the Yosemite, God's last word in beauty, and as we rode into the valley of the Yosemite we would see around us waterfalls everywhere, it would look as if there was a waterfall there and there and there, water falling 5,000 feet from the rim of the Sierras, and on the floor of the valley we would wander by the shores of the Merced River, a stream called the Rio Merced by the Spanish pioneers—the River of Mercy, the River of Grace.

If my beloved colleague from my native State of Pennsylvania, Mr. MATTHEW DUNN, were with us at that time, MATTHEW DUNN could follow the Merced River without any assistance, because the wild azaleas grow into the very water of the Merced and from the fragrance of these marvelous flowers MATTHEW DUNN could follow the course of the river—just from their fragrance. You would see on the upland slopes of the valley the wild poppy, the golden and the blood-red poppy—every kind of flower. I always compare the Yosemite to a picture that Doré drew to illustrate Dante's Paradisio. It is like a place that must be in heaven.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this forest is necessary to the preservation of the Yosemite. Surely there is not a man here, surely there is no man on the face of the earth breathing the breath of life today, who wants to destroy so much beauty as the Yosemite. If this forest is to be destroyed by this sawmill company, which is poised to do it right now and to destroy it, and destroy in 4 years what it took God 600 years to make, then the Yosemite itself will suffer, these waterfalls will suffer, and some of them may be destroyed, and the Merced, the river of grace, with its wild azeleas and their fragrance, may be destroyed because this forest is a conservation forest. Destroy the forest and you diminish the water, and you destroy a watershed when you destroy this forest.

Mr. SIROVICH. And how does the gentleman propose to conserve it?

Mr. McGROARTY. Why, by passing this bill that is before us now.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not want my distinguished friend to believe from the questions that I have previously asked that I am opposed to the principle involved or a matter of saving these trees, but section 3, I am afraid, is so worded that instead of preventing a development here which you want to keep as a park, it might permit it, and I think that should be considered very carefully.

Mr. McGROARTY. My friend, if you vote against this bill, glad as I am to know you, and much as I admire you, I shall be ashamed to know you from now on.

Mr. ROBERTSON. There may be no section 4 when we come to vote on the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. DEROUEN. I want to make this explanation of section 3. Section 3 of the act reads as follows:

SEC. 3. The provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Yosemite National Park pursuant to the provisions of this act.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] asked the question, What does it do? It does exactly this. It prohibits that which the gentleman thought would be permitted. It excludes navigation or waterpower development or anything else. It prevents the very thing the gentleman fears.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The Water Power Act says that act shall not apply to national forests, and then you put a section in here providing that this Water Power Act shall not apply to this part of the national forest. Does not a double negative make an affirmative?

Mr. DEROUEN. Perhaps it may be ambiguous. I did not write this bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not think the gentleman did.

Mr. DEROUEN. But it does not permit them to go in there and do the thing to which you are opposed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Now, I was drawing a beautiful picture, and you fellows threw a monkey wrench into it. You threw a hammer through the canvas. Why did you do it? Why do you not wait until I get this House in the right mood? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARTER. I am seeking information, and I did not want to wait until the gentleman had left the floor, because I wanted to be sure to get specific, reliable information.

Mr. McGROARTY. That is another catch question, I suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to section 4 and ask him if he can tell the membership of this House to what extent that obligates the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. McGROARTY. To no extent at all. It does not take a dollar out of the United States Treasury. The money is in hand, long ago, for just such emergencies as this.

Mr. CARTER. No. This is for the payment of taxes. This is a case which, as far as I know, has never arisen before.

Mr. McGROARTY. What if it never did arise before? That poor, God-forsaken county up there has to have a few thousand dollars in taxes. Do you not want them to have it? The gentleman is from up there.

Mr. CARTER. I want to know how much we are obligating ourselves to pay that county. I think the House, in all fairness, ought to know that.

Mr. McGROARTY. I think $12,000 will pay the whole bill.

Mr. CARTER. Is that for all time?

Mr. McGROARTY. This is for the time it would take to destroy the forest, which would be about 4 years.

Mr. CARTER. Then it would be about $48,000?

Mr. McGROARTY. It may be. What about that?

Mr. CARTER. I simply wanted to know. I am not saying it is not right, only I would like to know.

Mr. McGROARTY. The first thing you know you will have Mr. RICH on my back.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Well, yes. I had this House forgetting its troubles. I had them wandering through the Yosemite, through the great forest——

Mr. MOTT. But we want to get a little information about some of these things.

Mr. McGROARTY. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Can the gentleman tell us how much it will cost to purchase this place?

Mr. McGROARTY. About $2,000,000, with a fair appraisement.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. With great pleasure to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. DIES. I am wondering if this would not take care of the situation that prevails throughout many of our districts, where the Government has purchased a great deal of land and that land has been removed from local taxation and many schools are compelled to close. Is the gentleman's bill limited solely to the acquisition under this particular act?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes; it is; but this is what will happen: If we do not pass this bill, the sawmill company will go in there and log the forest. Then they cannot raise a cent in taxes on it. It will never be taxed again, and all that will be left will be hideous stumps and rocks.

Mr. DIES. I am in deep sympathy with the idea that the Government ought to reimburse the local tax units for the taxes, but the departments take the opposite position. I have been trying for 3 years to get them to reimburse these taxes, and I am wondering if they will not veto this bill if it is passed.

Mr. McGROARTY. The Department knows all about this bill. The Department is entirely in sympathy with this bill as it stands. The thing about it is to pass this bill and stop this sawmill company. If we do not pass this bill today, tomorrow that sawmill company will be moving in there with their logging machines, and it will be goodbye to your forest. Then what will you say to God when you meet Him? He will say, "Why did you not save my forest that I worked so hard for 600 years to create?" [Laughter.] The gentleman from Texas is the last man in the House I would expect to quibble about it.

Mr. DIES. I am not trying to quibble with the gentleman's bill, but for the purpose of making that statement with reference to other lands acquired by the Government generally over the country in which the same situation exists.

Mr. McGROARTY. That is for older and more able statesmen than me to decide. I do not know about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been interrupted. I am sorry you men have been dragged out of your trip along the Merced, now deep with azaleas, listening to the music of these waterfalls, by these practical men talking about little things. What does a few years' taxes amount to, what do these points that have been brought up about this bill matter in face of the fact that we are trying to save from destruction one of the most beautiful forests on the face of the earth, one of the most necessary forests? If you do not pass this bill and you ever come to California, I am going to find it out and I am going to put you in my car and drive you through these stumps and these rocks and show you what you did. Then you will be sorry. Then you will be ashamed.

This is not all poetry, Mr. Chairman. This is a very serious matter. I saw a river in France, a busy river, a river busy with commerce, and they told me that one time that river dried up because they had denuded the forests on either side of it. Then they put the forests back, and after years, when the forests grew, the river came back. Trees are the mothers of rivers. That is what we want—forests. God knows we have destroyed too many of them already. We want to save the few that are left. When I drive through my own native State of Pennsylvania and see the pitiful little second- and third-growth timber that has grown up where I saw great forests when I was a boy it makes my heart ache. You and I do not want to wait. We do not want to let this sawmill company come in and destroy this forest that it took God 600 years to grow.

We cannot wait 600 years more for them to grow another like it. We are here now. I invite you all out to California. Come on out.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. I will put up tents around my place and take you to see the forest.

Mr. RICH. This is the second invitation the gentleman has extended the Members of Congress. I would not doubt that before the snow flies, or Christmas time, the gentleman will have every Member of Congress out there in California.

Mr. McGROARTY. I hope I will. I have lots of potatoes in my cellar and straw in the corners for you to sleep on. You will be as welcome as the flowers in May and I will be proud to see you.

When I go home I boast about the Members of the House. I did not want to come to Congress in the first place. I came reluctantly. The fool Democrats in my district bulldozed me into coming so that a Republican would not come here. Now that I have been here and have gotten to know you all I am proud of you, so that when I go home I am grateful that I have had the honor of being a Member of this great House of Representatives. If you will come out, I will show you off. I will show you to the people and they will be glad to see you, especially if I can say, "Now, folks, here are the men that saved the sugar-pine forests for Yosemite National Park." [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I doubt if any Member of the House has been a stronger conservationist or has sponsored more conservation measures with reference to the national parks, the forest reserves, and conservation measures in general than I. However, on this occasion, due to the impracticability, the purely theoretical, the lack of merit, or necessity for this legislation I find myself in opposition to the bill.

If this proposal were carried out a serious unemployment situation would almost immediately develop in the vicinity, and a total annual pay roll of $1,000,000 would be wiped out. One thousand men would be thrown out of employment, necessitating in most instances their going on relief. The majority of these men who will be thrown out of employment are heads of families, and it is reliably estimated that at least 2,500 people would suffer.

Not only would a productive lumber operation, employing between six and seven hundred men, with an annual pay roll approximating $560,000 to $700,000 annually, be taken from the economic structure of the State, but other important related industries would be forced out of business. A railroad 78 miles in length, which derives 70 percent of its gross freight revenue from the operation of the lumber company, would be unable to continue operations in the event the lumber company ceases its activity.

This railroad employs 125 men, with an annual pay roll of approximately $150,000. This in turn would deprive several large industries of transportation services, which would result in forcing such industries to discontinue.

The industries referred to include a large cement factory, which derives its raw material from a quarry located on the railroad mentioned, 67 miles distant from the cement mill, and employing approximately 135 men; several gold and nonmetallic mines, employing approximately 200 men, and would affect agricultural and horticultural development depending upon the railroad for transportation services.

It is estimated that with regard to the capital investment in the industries referred to, exclusive of the lumber company, approximately $10,000,000 would be wiped out, together with a combined purchasing power of the industries approximating $1,000,000 annually. Not only would it eliminate existing industries derived by the railroad, but it would make impossible any future development of natural resources in the territory served by the railroad.

Due to the topography of the country it is not practical or economical to substitute motor-truck transportation for the railroad service. The highway serving the same territory reached by the railroad crosses a summit approximately 3,000 feet above sea level, with severe grades, and the major tonnage of the railroad consisting of raw material, which is necessarily transported at a very low rate per ton-mile, would make it impossible to use motor-truck transportation for the industries mentioned above, or future development of the territory in question.

The bill has principally been supported by an organization that styles itself the Emergency Conservation Committee, with headquarters at 743 Lexington Avenue, New York City, N. Y. Its membership is composed of three people, viz: Mrs. C. N. Edge, of New York City, chairman; Mr. Davis Quinn, of New York City, secretary; Mr. Irving Brant, New York City, treasurer.

These people designate or elect themselves to the said positions and have no list of members or membership. These facts were stated by Mrs. Edge at a hearing on the bill before the Public Lands Committee. The matter has been unsuccessfully agitated since 1932. Two exhaustive public hearings were held in California by the California State Chamber of Commerce, one in 1932 and the other in 1936, at which all interested interests to the controversy were given full opportunity to express their views. In each instance the State Chamber of Commerce of California considered it to be to the best public interest to oppose the measure.

The basis upon which proponents of this measure have secured a degree of public support has been the statement that the timber in question represents America's finest and last remaining forest primeval stand of sugar pine, which is threatened with destruction.

Within the State of California and exclusive of that contained in the Yosemite Park there are 2,400,000 acres of sugar-pine type.

At the present time there are 100 square miles of the sugar-pine type within the boundaries of the Yosemite National Park, 15,000 acres of which contain the finest stand of sugar pine in the State of California. This statement can be verified by the testimony given by Mr. Horning, a member of the Forestry Division of the National Park Service, before the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives. This area is known as the Rockefeller purchase, which was made several years ago, at a cost of over $3,000,000, 50 percent of which was contributed by Mr. Rockefeller and the other 50 percent was paid by the Federal Government. It should be observed that when the Rockefeller purchase was made the National Park Service had a choice between the timber mentioned in the present proposal and the timber that was finally purchased. The selection that was made does not bear out the argument of the superlative and incomparable timber as used by the proponents of the bill.

The cost of acquiring the land included under this bill, which is an area of comparable land to that of the Rockefeller purchase, is 56 percent as great, and situated closer to the point of utilization of transportation facilities, when one considers possible severance damages in connection with such a purchase, it is my opinion that the sum would probably exceed $3,000,000.

In the hearings before the House Committee on the Public Lands every effort possible was made by the committee to secure from the proponents of the measure and actual land and timber owners a statement as to what values were involved. These questions were never answered.

Within the State of California we already have 1,246,367 acres of national parks of superlative character. In addition to this, there are two-million-and-some-odd acres of national monuments. In addition to the foregoing, there are 19,000,000 acres of national-forest lands, which rank second to none in the Nation for their recreational value. In addition to all of the foregoing, the State of California has just recently acquired property valued at $26,000,000 for State park purposes devoted entirely to recreational use. There are also 21,000,000 acres of public domain in California. These total acreages represent nontaxable land. The balance of the State must provide the tax revenue with which to operate the State, county, and municipal governments. The removal of the lands under discussion from the tax rolls will constitute a loss in taxes to one county alone of $15,000 annually.

Again referring to the economic significance of this proposal, the proponents would have us believe that the counties in question would be more than compensated for the tax loss sustained through the addition of this territory to the Yosemite National Park for additional tourist travel coming through their counties. It is questionable if the addition of this land to the Yosemite National Park will bring one additional tourist to the territory, due to the fact that the new proposed entrance to Yosemite from that direction does not traverse this territory, and the lands proposed to be added to the park being 15 miles from the floor of the Yosemite Valley.

At the opening session of the California State Legislature this year the proponents of this measure submitted a resolution for passage by that body memorializing Congress to take action favoring the purchase of the lands in question. It is significant that the California Legislature refused to pass the resolution.

I have received many protests from the boards of supervisors, county officials, public service clubs, fish and game associations, mining companies, chambers of commerce, and individuals.

Permit me to read to you a letter from Mr. C. H. Grayson, district attorney of Tuolumne County, Calif., which is as follows:

APRIL 17, 1937.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ENGLEBRIGHT: This letter is addressed to you in relation to bill H. R. 5934, and to endeavor to point out to you why the bill should not pass in its present form.

The present proposed annexation meets with the utmost disapproval of the people of Tuolumne County because of the fact that we now carry an extremely heavy tax burden occasioned by tax-exempt lands in the county. Reasoning for our feeling can best be understood when I state that only approximately 25 percent of the lands and values in this county are assessed for taxation purposes, the remaining 75 percent being exempt from taxation by reason of Government ownership, by San Francisco's Hetch Hetchy water project, and by the irrigation districts impounding water and generating electric energy within this county but transporting the said water and electric energy into other counties for use. The Government is exempt by reason of the superior-agency theory, and Hetch Hetchy and the irrigation districts are exempt by reason of the provisions of the California constitution.

The exemption by reason of Government ownership is as follows: Yosemite National Park (U. S. Department of Interior), 731,000 acres, and Stanislaus National Forest (U. S. Department of Agriculture), approximately 555,000 acres. The present proposal would add to Yosemite National Park 9,000 acres, bearing the same species of growth as many thousands of acres already in the park.

In 1930, 11,225 acres were added to Yosemite National Park by the Government-Rockefeller purchase. In 1932 an attempt was made, through Senate bill 4472, known as the Nye bill, to annex 9,600 acres to Yosemite National Park, but final annexation was blocked by my efforts and the concerted action of the California State Chamber of Commerce, which action was brought about by the feeling that an injustice would be done to Tuolumne County by the removal of such area from the local tax rolls.

Without the present proposed annexation, 56.86 percent of Yosemite National Park lies within Tuolumne County, and this area contains the choicest trees, the most uniformly timbered land, and densest pine growth in the world. If it were on our tax rolls, it would represent a very handsome tax asset. The people of Tuolumne County are conservationists at heart and appreciate their forests possibly to a much greater extent than a majority of the persons entering Yosemite National Park, but we find that we must choose between being esthetic or tax-ridden. Our tax loss is substantial and the Government encroachment has placed a very definite tax burden upon the people of the county, which, as it would seem, is so unfortunate as to have so much magnificent forest placed by Nature within its boundaries.

Conservationists who are not taxpayers in Tuolumne County cannot understand our tax problem, nor can they understand how we can profess appreciation of our trees and forests, nor how we can classify ourselves as believers in conservation and at the same time object to the enlargement of Yosemite National Park. It is unjust for the conservationists to expect us to accede willingly to this enlargement. It is likewise unjust for the conservationists to expect us to live in apprehension, fearful lest this bill be adopted, and equally fearful of future completed, attempted, or threatened annexations. Likewise, it appears to us unjust that the lands from which the county obtains revenue in the form of taxes should be taken by the Government, taken by a strong superior from a weak subordinate.

In behalf of the taxpayers of Tuolumne County, I urge that this bill be not enacted in its present form.

May I call your attention to the fact the Yosemite National Park contains 731,000 acres of land. It occupies a large portion of Tuolumne and Mariposa Counties in California. The lumber operation is situated west of the Yosemite National Park. They are at the present time cutting sufficient lumber to employ in the neighborhood of 400 to 600 men in daily employment. The pay roll of that organization runs in the neighborhood of $560,000 per year.

If it were necessary to preserve this tract of land as an example of sugar pine for posterity to enjoy, regardless of the number of people employed or the amount of money going into industry, I would, I believe, support the measure. However, Mr. Chairman, that is not the fact. We already have in Yosemite Park an acreage and an area containing as fine a type of timber and larger in extent than is proposed to be added at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, in 1930 there was added to the Yosemite National Park some 15,000 acres of land that I call your attention to on a topographic map of the Yosemite National Park before you and indicated in green. This land was purchased by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the United States Government, each providing half of the purchase price, which was $3,298,865.50. The area called the Rockefeller Purchase was acquired for the specific purpose of preserving a fine type of sugar pine timber. At that time there were some comments made as to the timber that was being acquired for the park.

I am advised that Mr. Horace Albright, then Director of the National Parks, stated to certain newspapers in California to this effect:

We feel that we have saved the best of the sugar-pine forests, the most beautiful stand of timber. Very careful studies have been made of all timber holdings in that section of the State, and it is generally agreed that we already have the best of the timber holdings now in Government ownership at the present time safe within the Yosemite Park. This is not belittling the forests still outside the national park, but we have taken the best of that which is available to preserve for posterity.

The legislation in this bill has largely been sponsored by a group of well-meaning propagandists based upon the assumption and upon the statement that this is the last remaining stand of sugar-pine timber.

Mr. Chairman, the sugar-pine timber extends from the State of Oregon down through the central portion of southern California. I have here a map prepared by the Bureau of Entomology for the purpose of blister-rust control on which that area is indicated on the map from the Oregon boundary to almost the southern boundary of California, a distance of 650 miles, and all of this area is of a sugar-pine type. The areas indicated in green, extending from the Oregon boundary to the central portion of the State of California, are the commercial sugar-pine areas. The trees are very large, very extensive, and a very beautiful stand of timber.

Let us for a moment consider how much sugar pine of this very superb type still exists in California. I take my information from a letter written by the United States Forest Service to Mr. Charles G. Dunwoody, a representative of the California State Chamber of Commerce, conservation division, and this organization also opposes the bill. This letter is signed by the Acting Chief Forester of the United States Forest Service.

The question is: What is the area of sugar pine in California and where does it occur?

The answer in the letter by the Forest Service is:

> The range of sugar pine extends from the Coast and Cascade Mountains of southern Oregon, along the Coast and the Sierra Mountains of California, through southern California, in scattered stands, and into Lower California and Mexico. The largest and heaviest stands are found in Tulare and Eldorado Counties in cool, moist sites on the western slopes of the Sierras.
> The area of sugar pine in California is not exactly known. There are, however, over 2,000,000 acres of commercial sugar-pine timber.

Yet the proponents of this bill have propagandized regarding the bill and have led a large number of well-meaning people to believe this area, as indicated on the blister-rust control map, to be the only remaining stand of sugar pine.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIROVICH. After listening to the very eloquent and picturesque address of our colleague, the gentleman from California, and after listening to the gentleman I am under the impression this is a bill designed to save the trees for parks and not for sawmills.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. This bill does propose to add the area included here to the park. However, I am trying to point out to the gentleman it is neither necessary nor advisable to put this area into the park, due to the industrial disaster which will follow, as I have already disclosed, and also the fact there are millions of acres of similar trees already in the State and in forest reserves, 15,000 acres of which are in the Yosemite National Park, 100 square miles of Yosemite National Park containing the sugar-pine type.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that in a great deal of this area of which the gentleman speaks the timber is very scattered and is not accessible to markets, and that the timber really available to markets is in a very small amount? It seems to me the gentleman has exaggerated the amount of timber available for commercial purposes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I think the gentleman is not correct in that statement. I beg to differ with the gentleman. I am very familiar with the sugar-pine areas of California. It is true this area has a railroad built into it, a railroad 70 miles in length, from Merced to El Portal. The railroad will be closed down if this area is put into the park. Other areas of California have railroad transportation. It is true this area is adjacent to the San Joaquin Valley, and there is a ready market, but that has nothing to do with the statement that this is the only type and the only area of sugar-pine timber left in California or the Pacific coast, which is the point I am bringing up.

Mr. COLDEN. Is not the chief use of this railroad of which the gentleman speaks to carry people and supplies to Yosemite Park? The railroad is not used to any great extent for commercial purposes between its terminals.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I regret the gentleman is so poorly informed. The railroad carries only 4,000 visitors out of 500,000 a year to Yosemite National Park. Seventy percent of its total revenue comes from carrying the logs from this timber operation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman makes considerable point of the fact this will cause an industrial disaster. After the timber is cut off, if it does not become part of the park and the sawmill gets it, the industrial disaster will occur. It is only a matter of time. It shows in this document that the company now has employed only 422 people, who own nothing in that area, and of these people 98 are aliens, Mexicans and Italians.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman misses the point entirely.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What is the industrial disaster the gentleman fears will occur if this becomes part of the park?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. If the gentleman will let me proceed, I will give it to him in time. I will briefly answer the gentleman now. The lumber operation as now planned, along with other holdings the lumber company possesses, which will be made inaccessible if this stand is put into the park, has a life of from 15 to 20 years. The railroad company will have to cease its operations and discontinue the employment of 125 men, because 70 percent of its revenue comes from the lumber operation. Also, there is a large cement plant, employing 300 men, which depends entirely upon the cheap rates of the railroad company to haul lime rock 70 miles to Merced, truck transportation being out of the question due to grades and rates. Further, there are lead operations and gold mines in the vicinity, which likewise probably will have to be closed. If the gentleman will read the hearings, he will clearly see that 1,000 men—and this fact is admitted—will be thrown out of employment in 2 or 3 years, whereas otherwise there will be a normal operation of 20 years' duration, with industry building itself up, or, in other words, an indefinite operation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The report of the Department indicates the Department does not believe the railroad will be in any way affected, and that, from its own financial statements, the railroad can continue to operate as it has done with very little revenue from lumber operations.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The report of the Department is contrary to the testimony of the manager of the railroad and the vice president, as the gentleman will see if he will read the hearings. The report of the Department is contrary to the statement of a railroad operator who brought before the committee in his statement and showed specifically what his revenues were. The report of the Department is contrary to the report of the Forest Service regarding the amount of timber in the area. Therefore, I may say to the gentleman the Department apparently has not given complete study to this——

Mr. O'MALLEY. That the railroad or the sawmill company has?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; and the Department has not given study to the actual operations.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say to the gentleman: If I had to choose between two reports in order to cast my vote on the bill—the railroad and the sawmill companies on the one hand and the Department on the other—I would vote with the Department.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman has that privilege.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Are the people of California, from which State the gentleman comes, in favor of the preservation of these parks, so that tourists can come from all over the world to see the majesty, the beauty, and the poetic quality of these parks, or are they in favor of having the timber go to the sawmills, destroying the forests, and keeping the people away?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The people of California are very proud of their national parks. There are some nineteen or twenty million acres of land in the State of California in national parks and forest reserves, and in this particular area over half of the area of the counties is in Government ownership, and we have reached the point when we already have enough acreage to take care of a population five times the number we have in the United States for recreational purposes, and therefore the question of taxation, of local sustenance, and welfare enters the picture, and the question of relief rolls also comes into consideration, and for this reason we are calling your attention to that phase of the matter.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. What is the gentleman's idea about the fairness of the price that is to be offered for this timber?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. We have no idea about that. During the hearings, along with others, every effort was made to bring out what the purchase price of this timber would be. The Department refused to give us any estimate based upon the idea that if they quoted any figure it would be detrimental to their negotiations. The lumber company likewise took the same position and they did not care to state a price. The only criterion that was before us was the purchase price of the so-called Rockefeller tract of 15,000 acres, which was purchased for $3,298,000. This did not include lumber mills, plants, railroads, and other assets that will be destroyed if this property is taken over.

Mr. TERRY. Is this land to be purchased on the same basis as the Rockefeller land?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. We have not any idea about that. The bill provides for acquisition either by negotiation or by condemnation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Like the gentleman, I heard the testimony offered before the committee. Is it the gentleman's idea that the United States Government, in the event this property is acquired for park purposes, is going to be required to purchase the railroad facilities that accommodate the sawmill and the personal property used in connection with the tract, as well as the purchase of these trees?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am not an attorney, as the gentleman knows, but it is my opinion from experience that any court would undoubtedly take into consideration the million and a half that is invested in sawmills and the four or five hundred thousand dollars invested in rolling stock and railroad equipment, because they would become useless and would be destroyed if they could not be used in connection with the operation of the sawmills. So I believe that the courts would take into consideration the property that would be destroyed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Having that fact in mind and using as a basis of valuation the Rockefeller purchase of the land adjoining, what, in the gentleman's opinion, will the Government be required to pay for the purchase of the property in question and the damages incident thereto as a total?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. To be very fair, it is a hard question for me to answer——

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. What is the gentleman's best judgment about it?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. My best judgment would be not less than $3,000,000, and I think this is a very conservative, fair guess or estimate, because if the gentleman has read the Senate report on this same bill he will recall it is stated in the Senate report, under the authority of the committee or the Park Service, I do not know which, that the property is estimated to cost from one to two million dollars, and that considers only timberland and not any equipment or rolling stock.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman will recall that before the committee inquiry was made with respect to the source from which the money is to be obtained to pay for this property.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Where is the money to come from to be used for the purpose of purchasing this property as disclosed before the committee?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. After a great deal of difficulty, as I recall, the committee finally obtained a statement from some of the members of the Park Service that this money was to come from relief funds. If the gentleman will read the Senate report on the bill he will find it is stated there that the money is to come from emergency conservation funds, funds that were to be used to put men to work, funds that were to be used for unemployment relief, and in the last paragraph of the Senate report, even the Park Service doubts the validity of any such allocation, because they state:

> It should also be stated at this time that under the regular procedure now followed by the Government, Executive orders are approved as to form and substance by the Attorney General. Therefore, before any emergency funds are allocated to purchase the Carl Inn area of sugar pines—
>
> The area now under consideration—
> it is safe to assume the highest legal authority of the United States will approve no order which did not fulfill the requirements of existing law.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. Are the people of the gentleman's congressional district opposed to or in favor of the purchase of this land?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The land embraced within this area is in my congressional district——

Mr. MILLS. That is what I had understood.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY], who lives in Los Angeles County, several hundred miles from me. The people of the area or of the counties involved, including the boards of supervisors, chambers of commerce, the State Chamber of Commerce of California, and all people interested in the welfare of the locality are unalterably opposed to this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Considering the future of the gentleman's State, does he think it advisable for the Government to purchase this land, considering the amount of revenue derived annually from tourists into the gentleman's State, taking into consideration the cost to the Government of the first purchase price?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I might answer the gentleman in this way. There are already 731,000 acres in the Yosemite National Park. This proposes to add 7,200 acres in addition. The land to be added is 15 miles from the floor of the Yosemite Valley. I think it is conceded that the addition of this area will not bring one additional visitor. It is questionable whether anyone will go through that area at all. The purpose behind the bill apparently is to sell this tract of timber, and the lumber company is quite willing to sell it, because it will receive an amount for their timber that would be comparable to 14 or 15 years of operation, with the possibility of no profit, and it would receive the full amount for the value of that timber immediately, or at least as soon as the purchase price is settled by the courts. Otherwise they would have to operate 14 or 15 years to get their profits. The lumber company is very anxious to get this bill passed. The same lumber company sold 15,000 acres for over $3,000,000 to the Rockefeller Foundation. This has been very profitable for this particular lumber company to sell its lands to the Government and thereby liquidate immediately what would nominally take from 10 to 15 years of operation.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Assuming we would saw and sell every tree in the Yosemite Valley, would it amount to anything near as great as the present recreational and tourist value of the Yosemite Valley to the State of California?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I think the gentleman is asking a question that anybody would say "no" to, because the matter of the destruction or the commercial use of the Yosemite Valley is incomprehensible in thought. That is not the question involved here. The question here involved is simply taking a small tract of land that is going to displace $10,000,000 worth of invested capital, that will put a thousand men probably on the relief rolls, and stop a great industrial development in a county that has been making progress under great difficulty, and all without any necessity for it. If there were any necessity for taking this tract of land, as I stated, I would be the first to join with my colleague from southern California in making this addition, but it is purely a matter that has been brought about by propaganda. The lumber company wants to liquidate, and I do not blame it for wanting to get the $3,000,000 immediately when it will take it 15 years of business operation otherwise. It will displace a pay roll of many thousands of dollars a month without any purpose, except to give the lumber company their immediate profit, when ordinarily it would take that company from 10 to 15 years to attain the same result.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it true, as the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY] stated, that this is a very beautiful forest, about which he painted a beautiful picture?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; it is a very beautiful tract of land, but I call attention to the fact that there are 600 miles of similar beautiful tracts, under no immediate emergency with respect to this particular tract of land. You can make the entire State of California a great park if you so desire. If the Government of the United States wanted to put all the people of California—6,000,000—on relief, you could make a beautiful park of the entire State.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. It has been stated in debate here that the acquisition of these 8,000 acres of sugar pine is necessary for the preservation of the watershed of the rivers tributary to the Yosemite Park. What is the gentleman's opinion about that?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The watershed to the rivers of the Yosemite National Park represent several hundred thousand square miles, while this area is of insignificant size compared with the entire watershed. It does not represent one one-thousandth part of the entire watershed. I would say that it has no value at all in that particular respect.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Could the gentleman give the Committee an idea of the distance north and south across the Yosemite Park as it now exists; also east and west?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is in the neighborhood of 50 miles north and south and 50 miles east to west.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This proposed addition is to one side and would be less than 10 percent of the park as it now exists?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And the floor of the Yosemite Valley, with reference to the beautiful waterfalls, is many thousand feet below the land embraced in this tract?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Fifteen miles in an air line from them.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If a tourist went into the beautiful Yosemite Valley and saw the grandeur of those waterfalls, he would have to climb 3,000 feet to get to this tract and go 15 miles to one side of the park?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is correct.

I now yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Suppose the Government were to buy these 7,000 acres, or thereabouts, what percentage of the sugar-pine timber that would then be enclosed in the Yosemite Park would be covered by the purchase of the land in question? In other words, what percentage would that purchase take up of the total percentage of the Yosemite Park of sugar-pine timber?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. There is about 100 square miles of sugar-pine timber already in the Yosemite Valley. There are 6,700 acres. In other words, less than 10 percent of the area that is already in the park. It would be adding less than 10 percent.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Regardless of how much we are in favor of conservation—and I am a conservationist, with reservation, however—does the gentleman think under the circumstances, in view of the fact that it was developed in the committee that the pay for this property was to be taken out of relief funds, that the Government should add to the already 700,000 acres of land in the Yosemite Park these additional 7,000 acres, when they will have to pay for the personal property and railroad facilities the gentleman has already told us about?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Not by any means.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I gladly yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is that in the ownership of one corporation?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. One corporation; one lumber company.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They will get the $3,000,000?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes, sir; and they are glad to sell. I do not blame them.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The gentleman has been a member of the Committee on Public Lands for many years. Can the gentleman recall any precedent in his committee whereby a bill which has for its purpose the purchase of land to bring into the public domain, also had a proviso that the counties involved shall be paid through the years the taxes they otherwise would lose?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I do not.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Is that not an extraordinary precedent?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I have been a member of the Committee on Public Lands for many years, but the question of taxes in the counties involved is a very serious problem. Almost 75 percent of those counties are in Government ownership. Twenty-five percent have to support the entire area.

The loss to the counties involved will be about $15,000 per year. So it was felt that in justice—in other words, in order to keep the schools going and to keep the activities of the county going, the committee was willing to grant this amendment, and the representative of the Interior Department said there was no objection to it as far as the Department was concerned. In other words, if this purchase is to be made purely on the matter of somebody's caprice, without any reason or purpose, apparently they are willing to pay for it by compensating the counties for the amount. I am in favor of that. The counties should be compensated if their lands are going to be taken and put into public ownership. It is necessary that those counties be compensated.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. If this bill is passed, then the gentleman would prefer to see the committee amendment retained?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Out of fairness to the counties, out of fairness to the people of the localities, the amendment must remain in it, because this will close down $10,000,000 worth of invested capital and take their taxing values from the counties.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. For how many years do they propose to pay taxes or an amount in lieu of taxes to the county?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I can only answer that the duration would be the time which lumber company operation is to be calculated, and then in one lump sum they are to pay what that amount per year would amount to for the number of years that the lumber operation would continue.

Mr. PARSONS. Does not the gentleman know that in other national forests the revenue derived therefrom is returned to the counties to the extent of 25 percent, and that 10 percent is spent upon roads and trails?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; in national forests.

Mr. PARSONS. Now, you are proposing in this departure from the old-established custom to pay here in a lump sum what it may be over the period of operation of the lumber industry, apportioned between the counties, regardless of what it may be. That is very unfair to the other units.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is correct in his assumption with regard to the national forests, but in the national parks no portion of the revenue is paid to the counties in which they are situated. In other words, you are taking private property and putting it into a park, which will stop the tax revenue, and that is the reason the amendment is in this bill, because counties will get nothing back.

Mr. PARSONS. If the people want this private land to go into a national park——

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Then they should pay for it.

Mr. PARSONS. Then they should pay for the private lands, but certainly they should not keep on paying taxes to the county for it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not a fact that even if the amendment is adopted the gentleman is not in favor of the bill?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am unalterably opposed to it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Even under those circumstances?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. HAVENNER. Does the acreage which it is proposed to acquire lie along the route of the so-called Oak Flat Road, which is the principal route into the Yosemite from the North and the Northwest?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I may say that about 2 miles of the present Big Oak Flat Road will pass through a corner of this tract.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

About 2 miles will pass through a corner of this tract. But the State of California, by legislative appropriation, has already provided money for a timber screen on the Big Oak Flat Road, so there will be nothing disagreeable along the route.

Mr. HAVENNER. Is it not true, however, that the very widespread sentiment in California is in favor of the preservation of this road, and it is feared its destruction would destroy one of the most beautiful approaches to the Yosemite National Park?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I would not say there is any fear in California. I would say there was a very systematic propaganda put out by certain individuals through letters and newspaper advertisements, which have been placed in 50 of the leading papers of California, some of which read as follows:

Only God can make a tree. Help save the sugar pines of the Yosemite.

Then they state:

Officials in Washington have asked us to get immediate letters of endorsement. The most important is the letter to Congressman HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT, and send a carbon copy of ENGLEBRIGHT'S letter to Secretary Ickes. In addition, if you can write more letters of endorsement send them directly to President Roosevelt who, with Secretary Ickes, is greatly interested, and to each of the California Congressmen.

I do not believe there was any authority from either the President or the Secretary of the Interior for any such statement.

Mr. McGROARTY. The gentleman talks about propaganda. He does not accuse me of that?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; I do not. The gentleman had nothing to do with that. The gentleman had nothing to do with trying to quote the President on this matter.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I realize this is entirely a California matter, but since nobody told me it was a private fight I thought I might get into it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. There is no fight to it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman gave us the impression this lumber company was willing to sell?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. From the testimony on page 76, I take it Mr. Hughes represented that company?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is true, and I am glad the gentleman brought that up.

Mr. O'MALLEY. He objects to the Government purchasing the property unless the Government purchases all the physical equipment of the company besides. The Government can get this land by condemnation process, can it not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Undoubtedly it could.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Without taking the equipment?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Does the gentleman believe any court of equity or otherwise would force that lumber company to sell its land and not compensate the company for its sawmills and railroad?

Mr. O'MALLEY. It would depend on the financial condition of the company, which, according to my information, is bankrupt. It was once reorganized, and the record shows that in the former bankruptcy proceedings that company placed false valuations on 90 percent of its stuff.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Those same valuations were used as a basis for compensation in the Rockefeller purchase. The same valuations were used and the same company involved.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact that under the law governing condemnation proceedings, if condemnation proceedings are brought by the Government and title to the land acquired in those proceedings, the Government, in addition to paying the value of the land, would be required under the law to pay as damages whatever damage the owner of the land suffered as an incident to the taking of the property under condemnation proceedings?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is my understanding from personal experience in such matters.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman explain why it is under section 3 this land, after being purchased, would be exempt from the provisions of the Federal Water Power Act? What does that mean?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. From my experience on the committee, covering some 10 or 12 years, I would say that provision is in most of the national-park acts. It is put in there so that the Federal Water Power Commission, as I understand the provision, will not have jurisdiction over the streams in the park. The matter is entirely under the jurisdiction of the Park Service.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Since they do not have jurisdiction, would it be possible for a private power company to intercede with the Interior Department in charge of public lands to permit this private power company to get a permit of some kind to operate a hydroelectric plant within the confines of a national park?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I do not believe so, because I have confidence in the Park Service and in the Interior Department on account of their many years' experience in handling such matters.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. This exemption is not unusual?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is not unusual. I think the chairman of the Public Lands Committee will correct me if I am in error.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman has stated it is proposed by the Department to spend $3,000,000 of relief money to make this purchase.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I did not say $3,000,000. I do not know what it is going to cost. It may be more. However, it is proposed to make the purchase from relief funds.

Mr. ENGEL. The result will be that a thousand men will be thrown out of work?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Correct.

Mr. ENGEL. In other words, by the passage of this act we will use $3,000,000 of relief money to put a thousand men on relief?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. McGROARTY. I dispute that.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Do I understand the $3,000,000 is to come from the one and one-half billion dollars relief fund?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It says that it shall not come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEFAN. The amount of land in the Yosemite Park amounts to 721,000 acres?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. There are now 9,000,000 acres of Government parks in the gentleman's State?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Over that.

Mr. STEFAN. It is intended to buy 7,000 additional acres?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Correct.

Mr. STEFAN. From relief funds?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. I may say to the gentleman from California that in my district of Nebraska we have a much prettier spot for a Government park, and it will not cost $3,000,000.

In fact, we will practically give it to you. There are more beautiful flowers up in the Devil's Nest near Lindy or down along the Niobrara River. We need it badly. We would not take it out of relief funds, and we would not destroy any industry, and the gentleman's county would not suffer any lack of taxes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am sure the gentleman has a very charming locality in a very wonderful State.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Does the gentleman state this land is in the gentleman's district?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Did the gentleman who introduced this bill do so with the gentleman's consent?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I had no knowledge the bill was going to be introduced.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. This territory is in the gentleman's district?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McGROARTY. May I ask the gentleman, what about that? What is the matter with that? I am under suspicion now of having committed a political crime here.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I think many of us Californians are confused on this bill. We should like to be for anything which is good for California, naturally enough. I believe the gentleman has mentioned that with a gift of the Rockefeller Institute the land indicated on the gentleman's map before us in green was heretofore purchased.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Correct.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I presume this was under the authorization act which the gentleman introduced some years ago?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT I introduced the bill which brought about the Rockefeller purchase.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. There must be something about the timber in that area which makes it very fine, because the Rockefeller Institute thought the timber was so exceedingly good it should not be destroyed that it extended its financial resources to purchase the timber. Why does not the same argument apply now for the yellow section we see on the gentleman's map, which seems to be contiguous to the Rockefeller purchase? Is the timber better in the green section than in the yellow section?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I may say to the gentleman, as indicated in the statement of Mr. Albright at the time of the Rockefeller purchase, the Rockefeller selection was of the finest of the sugar-pine timber. The reason the additional acreage should not be taken, in my opinion, is that we already have the finest stand of that type of timber. In addition, there are 650 miles of sugar-pine timber in California. Further, you are going to put out of operation $10,000,000 worth of industry in the locality. I say there is no reason to do this, and no reason to take relief funds and keep men out of work through making this purchase.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I recall the arguments of the gentleman with regard to putting out of business the timber-cutting companies, and the like. However, as in so many sections of California, we find at certain spots a stand of trees which is exceedingly well preserved, the redwood trees, for instance, "Old Grizzly", where those old trees are, where the confines of a few acres contain all those famous trees. Would we not be making a mistake in not taking this stand because this particular stand of timber represents the most excellent specimens?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I may answer the gentleman by stating that in the forest reserve right adjacent to the park there is equally as fine timber, which could be placed in the park by Executive order or by an act of Congress without costing us 1 cent. Here we are going to pay a lumber company, which is glad and willing to sell, $3,000,000 of relief funds to make this purchase, without any reason therefor.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I know something about this section of the country and about the park. I have visited that wonderful place many times. I was under the impression in 1930 that we had protected the approaches to the Yosemite Valley proper, but what I now understand is that it is necessary to acquire this additional area to protect new approaches to the wonderful Yosemite Valley, which is being used for camps and other recreational purposes. Is not this the reason which is given for the proposed acquisition of this land, to protect the approaches to the Yosemite Valley?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; not even the proponents of the bill have claimed any such thing, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois. There are no approaches or anything of that sort to protect. The proponents claim this is the only stand of sugar pine left, whereas I have tried to point out to the Committee of the Whole that there are 100 square miles of the same type already in the park, and 650 miles in the length of the State.

Mr. SABATH. There are only a few small spots where you can find these large old trees, which reach up 300 to 360 feet toward heaven, and which are perhaps the largest in the world.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No. There are other groves which are just as fine.

Mr. SABATH. They are not so close to the Yosemite Valley, though.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes. The whole Yosemite Valley is surrounded by them, if the gentleman will notice the green section here on this map.

Mr. SABATH. I have crossed that section many, many times, and I think I know every road in the Yosemite Valley and in that section of the country.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is this tract of land above or below Yosemite Falls? Is it a part of the watershed of the Merced River?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is west of Yosemite Falls some 15 miles. It might be called part of the watershed, inasmuch as it would represent maybe a thousandth part of the whole watershed. The whole watershed represents hundreds of thousands of square miles.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman recall that in the hearings before the Public Lands Committee it developed that $1,500,000 of money was appropriated from C. C. C. funds and used to purchase land in the Smoky Mountains?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; but I doubt the validity of the action.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I believe the gentleman is in error when he states that this would throw out of employment in the neighborhood of 1,000 men. I have reliable authority here that the Secretary of the Interior has just checked up the number of men that would be thrown out of employment and he has furnished the figures in a memorandum which was prepared on the 29th day of April, as follows:

> The labor employed by the lumber company is very largely of a migratory type. A census of the employees of this company taken in the last few days shows the total number of employees to be 422. Of this number, 98 are aliens, a majority being Mexican and Italian. The employees own no property in the sawmill town. The lumber company owns all the cottages and cabins occupied by the laboring people.

I want to be fair with the gentleman, and I should like to see the question put before the members of the committee just as it is; and if there is any correction to be made in these figures, I wish the gentleman would do so.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is there any further statement made as to additional labor?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. There is no further statement.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I want to be fair with the Department. The Department refers entirely to the lumber operation. The lumber operation at this time, as stated, is probably employing only about 400 men; but the lumber operation has had to go very slowly, because they do not know whether they are going to sell out or whether they are going to expand their operations. The normal number of men employed is about 600, as the hearings show, and, in addition thereto, there are 125 men employed upon the railroad, which is separate from the lumber company entirely and is a 70-mile railroad that would go out of business under the operations of this bill; and in addition there are several hundred men employed in the cement plant. So the statement that 1,000 men are involved is very conservative, if we take into consideration all of the industries that will be closed down in a year or two as a result of this purchase.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Then the gentleman states that the figures I have given are limited to the lumber company?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Entirely so, and I think the statement shows that.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Then what has the gentleman to say as to this memorandum furnished by the Department with reference to the railroad line?—

> The claim that the proposed purchase will render it impossible for the Yosemite Valley Railroad to continue operations is based on the assumption that the purchase will cause the Yosemite Sugar Pine Lumber Co. to cease operations almost immediately. As pointed out above, this is not likely to happen for a period of some years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, on behalf of the United States under any fund or moneys available for such purpose, except from the general fund of the Treasury, any of the following-described lands in the State of California now in private ownership, to wit: Section 25, lots 3, 4, 5, 8, and 9, section 34, northeast quarter, lots 1 to 10, inclusive, section 35, section 36, township 1 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, southeast quarter, lots 2, 3, and 4, section 30, section 31, township 1 south, range 20 east; sections 1, 2, and 3, east half section 10, sections 11 and 12, north half section 14, northeast quarter section 15, township 2 south, range 19 east, southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, lots 3 to 7, inclusive, section 6, township 2 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "purpose", insert "at the time of the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "quarter", insert "southeast quarter of the northwest quarter."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. When title to the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, all of the lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the remainder of line 12 and all of line 13 and insert in lieu thereof "When title to such of the aforesaid privately owned lands as may be acquired with funds made available therefor has vested in the United States, such lands and all federally owned lands."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Yosemite National Park pursuant to the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 25 insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That, as compensation for the loss of taxes to any county by reason of Federal acquisition of lands with standing timber, pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay any such county in one lump sum, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior and from any funds made available for acquisition of lands hereunder, an amount equal to the taxes that would have been produced by such lands had they remained in private ownership and taxable for such period, as in the determination of the Secretary of the Interior, would permit the removal of the timber therefrom. As a basis for determining the amount to be paid any county, the Secretary of the Interior shall take the rate of taxation prevailing therein for the last taxable year and the assessed value for the same year of the lands with respect to which the payments so authorized are to be made.

"Payments received by any county under the provisions of this act shall be prorated, apportioned, and paid to the State, or its political subdivisions, in the same proportion as the taxes on lands in private ownership are prorated, apportioned, and paid to the State or its political subdivisions."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. This proposed section 4 of the bill in my judgment is utterly indefensible. It grants to this particular area something that has never before been granted to any section of the United States. My State has yielded thousands of acres to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government has never paid us 1 cent of tax. The bill provides in this proposed section 4 that not only shall the Federal Government pay all of the delinquent taxes, but no one has yet explained how much that amounts to, but the bill ties up the Federal Government to the proposition of paying taxes on this 7,280 acres for from 10 to 15 years.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Not now. I shall when I have completed my statement. If that policy is to be adhered to, then every State in the Union has a right to come in here and demand that the Federal Government not only pay all future taxes on acreage in the various States, but in addition thereto all taxes from the time that the acreage was deeded over to the Federal Government should be paid for.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That would be on a par with this express provision in this proposed section 4. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am against this committee amendment. Does not the gentleman feel that he should repeat here the statement made by the chairman that this amendment is placed in this bill for the specific purpose of having the House pass upon it, and, as he said, it would be a precedent for the future, if adopted. Adopt this amendment and every other bill of this character that comes before this House in the future will have a similar paragraph providing for the payment of taxes. Section 4 should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Correct. I hope the gentleman will join me in voting against any such provision. I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Are not the circumstances under which this land is to be purchased and conveyed to the Government different from the conditions under which the Government acquired land from the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. No. When one is selling something, he is selling it and should get the best possible price. In this case they are trying to chisel out of the Federal Government something never before done, and for one I am opposed to it.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes.

Mr. DEROUEN. As chairman, I stated very plainly that the committee was divided on this amendment and that the committee gave it very serious consideration and agreed to the amendment, provided it was left to the House to vote it up or down, because that question is going to be before the House. It would establish a precedent, and I think that the House should speak, so that bills of similar character, which are now before the committees, would be guided accordingly. It is the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I understand, but let me answer the gentleman in this way: The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] put the question squarely up to the gentleman three times, and he never answered it.

Mr. DEROUEN. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; he did.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I want it answered squarely on a roll call. That is the way we will get everybody marked up on whether he is going to stand for this kind of a thing or not. I do not want to see such a policy pursued, and I for one hope we will be able to get a roll call on it and put everybody on record.

Mr. DEROUEN. I am agreeable to that and hope the gentleman will request a roll call on that amendment. I have explained this amendment several times.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] has stated that section 4, which is the tax loss reimbursement provision of this bill, is indefensible. In my opinion, without section 4 the bill certainly would be indefensible, no matter what other merit it may possess. Here are 8,000 acres of privately owned timber land upon which the owners at the present time are paying to certain counties in California an annual tax of about $15,000. These counties have the undisputed right to levy that tax in order to help defray the expense of their county governments, and they are levying and collecting it. In addition to that, as has been stated in debate, this land supports a pay roll of about 1,000 men, who are residents of these counties and who spend their wages in the counties.

Now, this bill proposes that this tax revenue producing timber land be taken off the tax rolls of the counties, that it be placed in the status of nonproductive national-park land, and that the private pay roll which it supports be destroyed. Under the provisions of this bill the land in question is not being taken under ordinary circumstances, and certainly not under the circumstances which undoubtedly prevailed when the land in Wisconsin, to which the gentleman has referred, was conveyed to the Federal Government.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to bring condemnation proceedings against the owners of the land and to take the land by force. It authorizes the Secretary to deprive the counties in California, in which the timber is situated, of all of this tax revenue which the timber is now paying to the counties and to deprive the people of those counties of the pay roll which now exists. And it authorizes the Secretary to do this without the consent and against the will of the people of those counties.

The bill in my opinion is not a good bill, even with the tax loss reimbursement feature contained in section 4. But certainly if under any circumstances this land is to be acquired by the Federal Government against the will and over the protest of the counties which are now taxing it, then those counties in equity and good conscience should be reimbursed by the Government for their tax loss.

If the Government wants this land badly enough to force the owners to part with it and to force the people who now benefit from its tax to lose that tax, certainly the Government should make provision for tax-loss reimbursement. That is what section 4 of the bill proposes to do.

So far as the matter of precedent is concerned, I am very glad indeed that the Public Lands Committee has proposed a precedent in this bill in the way of tax-loss reimbursement out of the Federal Treasury, because in this particular case there is no other place from which the reimbursement can come. When the Government acquires land for expansion of the national forests—and this, by the way, can only be done by the consent of the State wherein the land is situated—provision for tax-loss reimbursement is always made by allotment to those States of a part of the revenue from the forest. This is the case also with revested forest grant lands and with lands purchased by the Government for grazing purposes. Where, however, as in this case, the land purchased produces no revenue in Government ownership, then the tax-loss reimbursement must come from the Treasury if reimbursement is to be made at all.

I am very glad the Department of the Interior has acquiesced in the establishment of that precedent, if indeed section 4 of this bill can properly be called a precedent. On that point, however, I think there is considerable doubt. Under existing law authorizing acquisition of land for slum clearance and for the construction of such Federal housing projects as Tugwelltown, Beltsville, and so forth, provision is made for tax-loss reimbursement through the actual payment of taxes on these housing projects by the Government or the governmental agencies in charge of the projects.

Therefore, it is doubtful whether section 4 establishes an actual precedent, because it provides for tax-loss reimbursement out of the Federal Treasury. But, however that may be, tax-loss reimbursement in one form or another, in cases where land has been taken off the tax rolls of States and counties, is not new. On the contrary, it is an established policy of the Government and has been for the last half century. There is no reason whatever why an exception to this policy should be made in the pending bill.

On account of the fact that in my opinion no sufficient evidence was presented to the Committee on Public Lands to warrant the enactment of this bill, I shall be obliged to vote against it upon final passage; but let me repeat that I am glad the committee has put in this tax-loss reimbursement feature. That has removed one of my principal objections to it, and if the bill comes to a vote with that feature retained in it, I will be content to let the remainder of the bill abide the decision of the House.

This is one of the most important matters, in principle, that the Congress will be called upon to consider in connection with Federal acquisition of land at this session, and I hope you give very careful consideration to the policy which some have advocated of the Government making wholesale acquisitions of private lands and taking that land off the tax rolls without making proper provision for tax-loss reimbursement to the people of the States and counties in which that land is situated.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has said if that is done in this case it should be done in every case, and I agree with him that in every case similar in principle to this one, tax-loss reimbursement should be made. I agree that whenever the Government takes private property off the tax rolls without the consent and against the will of the counties or States wherein the property is located, in the very bill or law by which it takes that property, it should make corresponding and proper provision for tax-loss reimbursement. A contrary view in this regard would, it seems to me, be utterly wrong and wholly indefensible.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This provides that the Government shall pay the delinquent taxes, taxes that they were never able to get from these private owners.

Mr. MOTT. That is proper, because all the delinquent taxes, if there are any, are collectible by the State and counties from that timber. If the law in California is the same as our law, the owner could not sell that timber until that tax was paid. The State and counties also have the remedy of tax foreclosure. There is no possible way by which the owner of valuable timber can escape payment of taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the Public Lands Committee had this bill under consideration and conducted several hearings. It was one of the most debated subjects we have had to deal with since I have been a member of the committee. As the distinguished chairman of the committee pointed out, the last section was extremely controversial, and we were all divided upon it, and some of us were divided upon the merits of the bill. If the bill is to be passed at all, I personally feel that section 4 should be stricken out. We cannot establish any such precedent as is claimed by the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]. If the Government of the United States takes over land for public purposes, such as park purposes, there should be no obligation upon the part of the Government to pay any delinquent taxes or any taxes levied against the property from that time on.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman's theory should be carried to its ultimate conclusion, what land would there be left to the States and counties to tax?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I am glad the gentleman brought that question up.

It will be necessary sometime to cease purchasing private lands, thereby taking them off the tax rolls and moving people from their homes, and so forth, and adding such lands to our national parks. It may be that this is the time to start. There have been other bills introduced in this Congress to increase the acreage of our parks in the United States. Should we continue our practice in this regard, ultimately, as the gentleman said, there will be no land left on which the States and counties could collect taxes. So, in my opinion, the way to prevent such a situation is to cease acquisition of private lands and placing them beyond the taxing authorities. Many thoughtful and well-informed people think that the parks are large enough at the present time.

To be fair to the author of the bill, I wish to say that I believe the gentleman from California is slightly in error with reference to the figures regarding the number of men employed concerning this particular matter when he says that the number amounts to approximately 1,000. However, I do not for one moment question his sincerity and honesty in making such statement, as, to say the least, the evidence was conflicting.

My recollection of the testimony is, independent of the figures given by the Secretary of the Interior, that there would be put out of employment somewhere in the neighborhood of 700 employees, including lumbermen and those engaged in the railway service.

I also want to get before the members of the committee what the Secretary of the Interior said with reference to the railway proposition. He said:

> The proposed purchase does not include all the timber owned by the lumber company. It will have left enough timber to continue its operations for a period of 5 to 10 years.

It is my opinion that if condemnation proceedings are brought and the land acquired by condemnation proceedings, the Government of the United States would have to pay for the damages that result on account of the taking.

While I am on that subject I think the gentleman from California is correct when he says that before this is over it will cost the taxpayers of the country in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

The bill does not seem to me to be specific as to where the funds are to be secured with which to pay for this property. Therefore, I asked this question when the hearings were had before the committee:

> From what source is this money to be taken to pay for this land?

The answer was that it was from the relief funds. I said then, and I say now, using the words of the President of the United States, with one-third of our people hungry and one-third of them ill fed——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
